as the lifting up of the serpent. Faith is as necessary to salvation as the death of Christ. The one rendered God reconcilable unto sinners, the other renders him actually reconciled. Again, did the brazen serpent heal all that looked upon it, and looked up unto it, though all had not eyes alike, some with a weak, others with a stronger eye? In like manner doth Christ justify and save all, that with a sincere faith, though weak, do rely upon him for salvation: "Whosoever believeth in him, shall not perish." Further, The brazen serpent was effectual for Israel's cure after many stings; if after they were healed, they were stung afresh, and did look up to it, they were healed by it. Thus the merit of Christ's death is not only effectual for our cure and healing at our first conversion, but after involuntary relapses and backslidings, if by faith we have recourse to the blood of Christ, we shall find it efficacious for our further benefit and future healing. In a word, as the brazen serpent had the likeness of a serpent, but nothing of the venom and poison of the serpent in it: so Christ did take upon him our nature; but sin, the venom and poison of our nature, he had nothing to do with: though Christ loved souls with an invincible and insuperable love, yet he would not sin to save a soul. This was the similitude and resemblance between Christ and the brazen serpent. The disparity or dissimilitude follows: the brazen serpent had no power in itself, or of itself, to heal and cure: but Christ has a power inherent in himself for the curing and healing of all that do believe in him. Again, The brazen serpent cured only one particular nation and people, Jews only: Christ is for the healing of all nations, and his salvation is to the end of the earth. Farther, The brazen serpent cured only one particular disease; namely, the stinging of the fiery serpents; had a person been sick of the plague, or leprosy, he might have died for all the brazen serpent: but Christ pardons all the iniquities, and heals all the diseases of his people. Psalm, ciii. 3. Yet again, Though the brazen serpent healed all that looked up unto it, yet it gave an eye to none to look up unto it; whereas Christ doth not only heal them that look up to him, but bestows the eye of faith upon them, to enable them to look unto him that they may be saved. In a word, the brazen serpent did not always retain its healing virtue, but in time lost it, and was itself destroyed. 2 Kings xviii. 4. But now the healing-virtue and efficacy of Christ's blood is eternal. All believers have and shall experience the healing power of our Redeemer's death to the end of the world. Lastly, The Israelites that were cured by looking up to the brazen serpent, died afterwards; some distemper or other soon carried them to their graves; but the soul of the believer that is healed by Christ shall never die more: Whosoever believeth in him, shall not perish, but have everlasting life.

16 ¶ For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Here observe, 1. The original source and fountain of man's salvation; and that is, God's free and undeserved, his great and wonderful love. God so loved the world, he doth not say how much, but leaves it to our most solemn raised thoughts; it is rather to be conceived than declared; and admired rather than conceived. God so loved the world; hence note, that the original spring and first cause of our salvation is the free favor and mere love of God. A love worthy of God from whom it proceeds, even love inexpressible and inconceivable. Observe, 2. The greatness of the gift by which God evidenced and demonstrated the greatness of his love to a lost world; He gave his only begotten Son: that is, he delivered him out from his own bosom and everlasting embraces. Now this will appear a stupendous expression of God's love, if we consider that God gave him who was not only the greatest, but the dearest person to him in the world, even his own Son; that he gave him for sinners; that he gave him for a world of sinners; that he gave him up to become a sacrifice for the sin of sinners. Observe, 3. The gracious end for which God gave this great gift of his love to lost sinners; That whosoever believeth in him, shall not perish, but have everlasting life. Where note, 1. The gentle and merciful condition upon which salvation depends; Whosoever believeth in Christ, shall not perish. 2. The infinite goodness of God in proposing such a vast reward unto us, upon our performing of this condition: He shall have everlasting life. Learn hence, That faith is the way which God hath appointed, and the condition which God hath required, in order to our obtaining salvation by Jesus Christ. This faith consists in the assent of the understanding, that Jesus is the Saviour of the world; in the consent of the will, to accept of Jesus freely and voluntarily, deliberately, advisedly, and resolvedly, for our Saviour: in accepting the merit of his blood, and submitting to the authority of his laws; it being in vain to expect salvation by Christ, if we do not yield subjection to him; he that thus believes in Christ, that submits himself to his ruling power, as well as commits himself to his saving mercy, shall not perish, but have everlasting life.

17 For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

18 ¶ He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God.

Observe here, That the salvation of sinners was the intentional end, and the condemnation of them only the accidental event, of Christ's coming into the world. The design of Christ's first coming into the world was to save it. The end of his second coming will be to judge the unbelieving part of it. Observe, secondly, That unbelief is the formal cause of the sinner's damnation; it is that sin which doth bind all other sins upon the sinner, and consigns him over to damnation; it is that sin which doth not only procure damnation, but no damnation like it: which is intimated in the next verse.

19 And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil.

Observe here, 1. The worth and dignity of a choice and invaluable privilege declared, light is come into the world. A personal light, Christ: a doctrinal light, the gospel.— Observe, 2. The unworthiness, abuse, and great indignity, which the world, through infidelity, offers to this benefit: they reject it, and love darkness rather than light. Observe, 3. The dreadful sentence of wrath which the rejection of this benefit and the abuse of Christ, brings upon the impenitent and unbelieving world. It terminates in their full and final condemnation: This is the condemnation; that is, it is a just and righteous condemnation, it is an inevitable and unavoidable condemnation, it is an heightened and aggravated, it is an accelerated and hastened, an irrevocable and eternal condemnation. Learn hence, That the greater and clearer the light is, under which the unregenerate and impenitent do live in this world, so much the heavier will their condemnation and misery be in the world to come, if they wilfully and finally reject it.

20 For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.

21 But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God.

In these words our Saviour acquaints us with the different nature of sin and holiness. It is the nature of sin, and the property of sinners, to hate the light, because it discovers the evil and sinfulness of their ways unto them, and condemns them for them; as the Ethiopians are said to curse the sun for its bright and hot shining; whereas holy and gracious persons that walk uprightly, do love the light; that is, they delight to have their thoughts, words, and actions, tried by the light of the word, because they are wrought in God; that is, performed as in the sight of God, according to the directions of the word of God, and with a single eye and sincere aim at the glory of God. Learn hence, 1. That the word of God or the gospel of Jesus Christ, has all the properties of a great and true light. It is of a pure and purifying nature, it is of a manifestative and discovering nature. It has a piercing power, and penetrating virtue, it enters the darkest recesses of the soul, and detects the errors of men's judgments, as well as discovers the enormities of their lives.— Learn, 2. That nothing is so hateful to, and hated by a wicked man, as the discovering and reproofing light of the word of God: for at the same time that it discovers the sin, it condemns the sinner. Learn, 3. That a truly gracious person, who acteth agreeable to the will of God, is not afraid to examine his actions by the word of God; but desires and delights that what he doth may be made manifest both to God and man. He that doeth truth, cometh to the light, and rejoiceth that his deeds may be made manifest, because they are wrought in God.

22 ¶ After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea, and there he tarried with them, and baptized.

23 ¶ And John also was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.

24 For John was not yet cast into prison.

Our blessed Saviour having now finished his excellent sermon preached to Nicodemus at Jerusalem, he departs thence with his disciples into the country of Judea, to make proselytes by the ordinance of baptism. Where note, 1. Our Lord's unwearied diligence in doing his Father's work and will. He goes from place to place, from city to country, preaching with, and baptizing by his disciples: for Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples, John iv. 2. Note, 2. That the enjoyment of Christ's bodily presence did not take away the use of his own ordinances. None are above ordinances till they come to heaven. The ordinance of baptism is here administered by the disciples, even in the presence of Christ himself. This is called the baptism of repentance, of which children, as well as others, were capable subjects, because baptism doth not require children's repentance at present, but engages them to repentance for time to come: as children that were circumcised were obliged to observe the whole law, but could not perform it till they came to understand it. Note, 3. How John did go on with the work of baptizing, though Christ and his disciples did eclipse and obscure him; though the people now flocked after Christ, All men came unto him, ver 26. yet John kept to his duty. It is the duty of God's ministers to continue in their diligence, and go on with their work, when God raises up others about them of greater parts and better success. O! the admirable humility of that minister, who can say with John the Baptist, Let another increase, though I decrease.

25 ¶ Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying.

26 And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come unto him.

Observe here, What a spirit of envy there was in John's disciples against Christ, upon account of the multitude of the followers: He that was with thee beyond Jordan, baptizeth, and all men come unto him. Where note, 1. How men ly John's disciples think and speak of our Saviour, compared with John, their master. They do not so much as allow him a name, or give him any title, but He that was with thee beyond Jordan, the same baptizeth. Observe, 2. How they intimate, as if Christ had received all his credit and reputation from their master, John: He to whom thou bearest witness, baptizeth; as if they had said, "This man whom the people flock after, neglecting thee and thy disciples, is much inferior to thee; for he came to thee, thou didst not go to him; thou baptizedst him, he did not baptize thee; thou gavest testimony to him, he did not give testimony to thee." Whence we observe, What a bitter spirit of envy and emulation there has always been amongst the ministers of the gospel, even from the very first plantation of the gospel, which causes them to look upon the exalted parts and gifts of others as a diminution and debasing of their own; but why should the prospering of the work of God, in one minister's hand, be matter of repining unto others? Shall not God honor what instruments he pleaseth? And will he not reward all his faithful laborers according to their sincerity, not according to their success?

27 John answered and said, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

28 Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him.

29 He that hath the bride is the bridegroom; but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: This my joy, therefore, is fulfilled.

30 He must increase, but I must decrease.

31 He that cometh from above, is above all: he that is of the earth, is earthly, and speaketh of the earth; he that cometh from heaven is above all.

Observe, here, How holily and wisely John the Baptist corrects the envy and jealousy of his own disciples, and endeavours to root all prejudice out of their minds against Christ; in order to which, he shows them a five-fold difference between Christ and himself. 1. He tells them Christ was the master, John but his minister, and that he had told them so from the beginning: Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him. The faithful ministers of Christ think it honor enough to be servants to him; and would not have their followers attribute the least part of that honor and glory to them, which is due to Jesus Christ. 2. John acquaints his disciples, that Christ was the bridegroom of his Church, to whom the Christian church was to be solemnly espoused and married; and that he had honor enough in being one of the bridegroom's friends and servants: and accordingly, instead of envying, he rejoiced at the success which the bridegroom had, and took great pleasure in it. Learn, 1. That the relation betwixt Christ and his church is a conjugal relation, a relation of marriage; yet set forth under the name of bride and bridegroom, rather than under the notion of a complete marriage because it is but begun here, and to be consummated in heaven. And also to show that Christ's and his people's affections are as warm and fresh, as strong and vehement, towards each other, as the affections of espoused and newly married persons are to one another; Isa. lxii. 5. "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." Learn, 2. It is honor sufficient to the ministers of Christ, that they, as friends of the bridegroom, are employed by him to further the marriage relation betwixt him and his spouse. Their office is to woo for Christ, to commend his person, and to invite all persons to accept of him for their head and husband, 2 Cor. xi. 2. I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." Learn, 3. That there is no greater joy to the ministers of Christ than to see themselves honored by him, as his instruments, in preparing a people for Christ, and happily uniting them unto him. Oh! how little do our people know, and less consider, how much of the comfort of the poor ministers' lives lie at their mercy: we live as we see any of them stand fast in the Lord: we die as we see others stick fast in their sins. This was the second difference which John acquaints his disciples was found betwixt Christ and himself. The third follows, ver. 30. "He must increase, but I must decrease." He must increase, that is, in honor and dignity, in esteem and reputation, in discovery and manifestation. He shall shine forth as the rising sun, and I must disappear as the morning-star. Not that John's light was diminished, but by a greater light obscured only; as all the stars disappear at the appearance of the sun. Yet, observe, What matter of joy it was to John to see himself out-shined by Christ; let him increase, though I decrease. That minister has true light in himself, that can rejoice when he is out-shined by others; who is content to be abased and obscured, if he may but see Christ dignified and exalted in the lives of his people, whosoever the person is, whom God honors as an instrument in that service. The fourth difference wherein Christ excels John and all his ministers, is in the divine original of his person, ver. 31. "He that cometh from above is above all," says John. Now Christ is from above, his original is from heaven; I am from the earth (though I had my commission from heaven) and accordingly my words and actions are earthly. My Master, therefore, infinitely surpasseth and excels me in the dignity of his person, and in the sublimity of his knowledge. From the whole, note, How much it is the desire and endeavour of every gospel minister to magnify Jesus Christ, to display his glorious excellencies and perfections before the temple, that they may reverence his person, revere his authority, and respect his laws. This was the care of the holy Baptist here, and it will be the endeavour of every faithful minister of Christ that succeeds John, to the end of the world.

33 He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true.

34 For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.

Observe, 1. Another great difference which John the Baptist teacheth his disciples to put betwixt his testimony and Christ's; to the intent that he might remove the prejudice which was upon the disciples' minds against the Messiah, he shows them that his own testimony (which they so much admired) was by revelation only; Christ's by immediate institution. John testified only what he had received; but Christ what he had seen; lying in the bosom of the Father: What he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth. Learn hence, That it is Christ's (the great Prophet of his church) peculiar prerogative to have the knowledge of divine truths immediately from the Father, by special communication; and that all others receive their knowledge from him by gracious illumination only. Observe, 2. How sadly and sorrowfully the holy Baptist resents it, that Christ's testimony was no better received and entertained by the world: He testifieth, but no man receiveth his testimony. John's disciples murmured, That all men came unto Christ, ver. 26. But John mourns that there came not more, and complains, that none, that is, very few, received his testimony. Thence learn, That it ought and will be a matter of great regret and sorrow to all the friends of Jesus Christ, but especially to his faithful ministers and servants, that his doctrine is so ill received and entertained in the world. It greatly affects and grievously afflicts them, that when they testify of Christ, no man, that is, comparatively, very few men, receive their testimony. Observe, 3. The eulogy and high commendation given of all true believers, They receive Christ's testimony, and thereby set to their seal that God is true; that is, have subscribed to and ratified the truth of God; that God, in all his promises of the Messiah, under the Old Testament, is faithful and true. Learn hence, The great honor that God puts upon the faith of believers. As unbelief defames God, and makes him a liar; so faith gives testimony to the truth of God, and setteth his seal that God is true: He that receiveth his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true. Observe, 4. The illustrious character which the holy Baptist gives of Christ, his Master; he is the person whom God hath sent, and unto whom God giveth not his Spirit by measure. He whom God hath sent; that is immediately and extraordinarily from heaven; not as the prophets and apostles were sent, but in a way peculiar to himself; having authority for speaking, not only from God, but as being God himself. And accordingly it is added, that God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him; that is, the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit were poured forth upon Christ, in a measure far above and beyond all finite creatures; there being a double difference betwixt Christ's fullness of the Spirit, and all other persons whatsoever. 1. In the measure of it. God did not give out the Spirit to Christ sparingly, and with limitation, as he did to the former prophets and John the Baptist, in proportion to what their offices required; but he was anointed more plentifully and abundantly with the Holy Spirit above and beyond his fellows. 2. In the manner of its working. The holy prophets that were filled with the Spirit (according to their measures) yet could not do or declare all things, nor act upon all occasions, but sometimes the Spirit restrained them, and sometimes departed from them. But Christ had no limits put upon the vigor of his Spirit, but his own will; therefore could work what, and when he pleased. Learn from hence, That Christ had an abundant fitness from God for the discharge of his office, and an abundant fulness for his people. God did not measure to him a certain quantity and proportion of the gifts and graces of his Spirit, but poured it forth upon him without measure.

35 The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.

The Father loved the Son from eternity, as he was his Son by eternal generation; and he loved him as Mediator by special constitution; he loves him as the brightness of his own glory, and the express image of his person, with an essential, natural, and necessary love; and he loves him as Mediator, for undertaking our cause, and interposing for our peace. Learn hence, that God the Father had a special love and affection to Christ, not only in regard of his eternal Sonship, but with respect to his office and Mediatorship; "The Father loveth the Son." It follows, "He hath given all things into his hand;" that is, he hath intrusted him with all things necessary to our salvation. Lord! what a privilege is this, that our happiness is in Christ's hand, not in our own without his. O wonderful goodness, to put our concerns into the sure hands of his Son, which were lost by the weak hands of Adam.

36 He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

Learn, 1. That though all power be given to Christ, to dispense grace here, and glory hereafter, yet none must expect to enjoy it, but upon condition of believing in him, and of obeying him, for the original word signifies both. No faith is acceptable to Christ, nor available to our salvation, but that which is the parent and principle of obedience. Learn, 2. That final unbelief renders a man infallibly an object of the eternal wrath of God; "He that believeth not the Son, the wrath of God abideth on him." The unbeliever now lies under the sentence of God's wrath, hereafter he shall lie under the full and final execution of it. Lord! how sad is it to be here in a state of condemnation! but how intolerable will it be in hell, to continue eternally under the power of condemnation! To lie for ever in that mysterious fire of hell, whose strange property is always to torture, but never to kill; or always to kill, but never to consume: for, after millions of years are expired, still it is a wrath to come; and though the unbeliever has felt and endured never so much, yet still the wrath of God abideth on him. Every word carries dread and terror with it. The wrath, not the anger; and the wrath of God, not of man, at whose rebukes the devils tremble. And this wrath of God not only flashes out like lightning, but abides, dwells, and sticks fast upon him: that is, on his person, the whole man, soul and body.

CHAPTER IV.

WHEN, therefore, the Lord knew how the pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John,

2 (Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples).

3 He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee.

The former part of this chapter acquaints us with our Saviour's removal from Judea into Galilee. The occasion of it was this: Christ hearing that John was cast into prison, and understanding how the pharisees were enraged at the increasing of the number of his disciples; to decline their fury, and prevent danger to himself, he leaves Judea, and departs into Galilee, for his own preservation. Hence learn, 1. That when the faithful ministers of Christ do meet with eminent success in their Master's service, they must expect to meet with a mighty shock of malice and envy from satan and his wicked instruments. Christ himself experienced it; let his ministers expect it, and prepare for it. 2. That it is neither unlawful nor unbecoming for the ministers of Christ to flee when persecution threatens them; their Lord and Master having fled before them: and commanded also, When they persecute you in one city, to flee into another.

4 And he must needs go through Samaria.

5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.

6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus, therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well; and it was about the sixth hour.

Here observe, 1. How wonderfully the wisdom of God overrules the malice of men for his own glory, and the good of others. The malice of the pharisees in Judea drives Christ into Galilee, and in his passage through Samaria, the first fruits of the Gentiles are called, and particularly the woman of Samaria. Observe, 2. How in every step of Christ's way he was doing good to the souls of men. In his passage through Samaria into Galilee, a poor woman is brought to know him to be the true Messias. Observe, 3. Our holy Lord, in his journeying from place to place, did travel usually on foot: and the weakness of his body upon travelling, shows him to be truly and really man, and in all things like unto us, sin only excepted. Our blessed Lord did not only take upon him our nature, but the infirmities of our nature also.

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink,

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, asketh drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? (for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.)

Observe here, 1. How all our motions and actions are under the direction and government of God, and how divine providence doth sometimes dispose of small matters to become occasions of great good. This poor woman's coming to the well to draw water, became the means of her conversion. Observe, 2. Christ speaks to, and seeks after, this poor woman, before she takes notice of him; God is found of those that seek him not, and makes himself manifest to them that inquire not after him. Jesus said unto her, Give me to drink. Observe, 3. The great poverty of our Lord's outward condition, he wanted a draught of water for his refreshment, and a meal's meat now at dinner-time, to refresh his wearied nature. Oh! what contempt did Christ cast upon the world when he was here in it! He would not honor it so far as to keep any part of it in his own hand. Yet, observe, 4. That though Christ had neither house nor land, nor money of his own, yet he lived not by begging, or upon mere alms. The disciples were going now into the city to buy, not to beg meat: for there was a bag which required a bearer, John vii. 6. And our Saviour's friends and followers supplied him with money for his necessary occasions; His disciples were gone to buy bread. Observe lastly, How bitter is the enmity which differences in religion, and diversities of opinions do occasion: they do not only alienate affections, but even violate the bonds of civil society and common conversation. The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans: who neither eat nor drink with them.

10 Jesus answered, and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

The Samaritan woman had refused Christ a draught of water in the former verse, he offers her the water of life in this verse. O! how kindly doth Christ deal with those that dealt unkindly with him! If thou knewest the gift of God, &c. Here observe, 1. The mercy which Christ had for, and was so desirous to bestow upon, this poor woman: it was the gift of God; that is himself, his Holy Spirit, in the sanctifying gifts, and saving graces of it. All which are compared to water, in regard to their effects and operations, which are to purify the unclean, and to satisfy the thirsty. Observe, 2. The way and course which this woman and every lost sinner ought to take, in order to the obtaining of this inestimable gift; and that is, by asking it, Thou wouldest have asked, and he would have given thee living water. Learn hence, That Christ himself, his Holy Spirit, with all the sanctifying graces of it, must be earnestly sought of of God; and such as do unfeignedly seek them, shall certainly obtain them. Observe, 3. The true cause and reason assigned, why sinners ask not for, and seek not after, Jesus Christ, and the grace of the Holy Spirit; and that is, ignorance of the worth and want of them. If thou knewest the gift of God, thou wouldest have asked. Learn hence, That it is ignorance of the worth of Christ and insensibleness of the want of him, that makes persons so indifferent in their desires after him, and so remiss in their endeavours for the obtaining of him. Oh sinners! did you but know who and what Christ is, that is offered to you, did you but see his beauty, fulness, and suitableness, and were you but sensible of the worth and want of him, all the world could not keep you from him; you would break through all difficulties and dangers, through all sufferings and reproaches, to come unto the enjoyment of him!

11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jesus answered, and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again;

14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst: but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life:

Observe here, 1. How ignorant persons are of spiritual things, till enlightened by the Holy Spirit of God. This poor woman's question, Whence hast thou that living water? looks much like that of Nicodemus, John iii. 9. How can these things be? A natural person cannot perceive the mind of Christ when speaking to him about spiritual things. Spiritual objects must have a spiritual eye to discern and behold them, 1 Cor. ii. 14. The natural man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit." Observe, 2. With what great humility and condescension our holy Lord treats this poor woman, pitying her ignorance, and pardoning her infidelity; he tells her, that the water of that well, which she was about to draw, could not give an abiding satisfaction; but the thirst quenched for the present, would certainly return again: but he that should drink of the water which he had to give, that is, be made partakers of the graces of the Spirit, shall find such refreshing satisfaction therefrom, that all inordinate desires after earthly things will be quenched and extinguished, and will be like a well of water springing up, till he come to eternal glory.—Learn hence, 1. That as the body of man is subject to a natural, so is the soul of man subject to a spiritual, kind of thirst. 2. That no creature comfort, or earthly enjoyment, can quench this thirst which the soul of man is subject unto. 3. That the Spirit of grace (which our Saviour here calls the water of life) is able fully and perfectly to quench the thirst of the soul: and where it is once savingly received, shall never be totally or finally lost. It shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life; that is, the graces of the Spirit shall be in believers as permanent habits, as fixed principles that shall not decay. Hence St. Peter calls it "incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth for ever." 1 Pet. i. 23.

15 The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

17 The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband:

18 For thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband; in that saidst thou truly.

These words set forth unto us, 1. What manner of person this woman was, whose conversion Christ sought so industriously after. 2. The means he used in order to that end. Observe, 1. What manner of person this woman was; besides that she was an idolater, as being a Samaritan, she was also an adulteress, and lived now in the sin of uncleanness with one that was not her husband, after she had had five husbands before. Whence we learn, That the ice of old age will not quench the fire of lust, concupiscentia non senescit: such is the pollution of our nature, that lust will be insatiable, if grace doth not restrain it. This woman, after five marriages, yet lives in the sin of uncleanness. Observe, 2. The way and manner our Lord takes, the method and means our Lord uses, in order to her conversion. 1. He deals very tenderly and gently with her; he doth not call her whore, nor upbraid her for her impudent lewdness, in living with a man that was none of her husband, but only gives her to understand that he knew the sin she lived in; yet this he did likewise with all imaginable privacy, whilst his disciples were away, and no body by but they two only. Hence learn, 1. That private sins are not to be reproofed publicly. 2. That in re-proving sin, all sharpness and bitterness of expression must be avoided: the pill of reproof must be wrapped up in sugar; for if they to whom it is given, taste the bitterness of gall and passion mixed with it, they will certainly spit it out before, it may be upon our faces. Our Lord's practice here instructs us, that sin is to be so reproofed, as that the credit and estimation of the sinner may be preserved as much as may be.—Note, 2. That as Christ dealt with this woman tenderly and gently, so he discovers her sin to her particularly, and sets her secret sin before the face of her conscience distinctly.—If ever the ministry of the word works upon the minds of men in their conversion, it must be by a particular and close application of the word to every man's conscience: generals will not affect. Note, 3. What the particular sin is, which Christ charges home upon the conscience of this woman: it is the sin of uncleanness, that the man she kept with, was not her husband. Learn hence, That, amongst all sins, the sin of uncleanness will lie heaviest upon the conscience, and wound the soul most deeply, when the Spirit of God once effectually discovers it, and charges it home upon the conscience. For there is no sin so directly opposite to sanctification and holiness, as this sin: no sin that quenches the Holy Spirit of God like this.

19 The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet.

20 Our fathers worshipped in this mountain: and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.

In these verses, the Evangelist declares a three-fold effect and fruit of the grace of conversion that appeared in this woman. 1. She neither denied, nor excused, nor extenuated this sin, which Christ had charged her with, but tacitly owns, and implicitly confesses it. 2. She doth not only own and confess what she was charged with, but she doth profess reverence to our Saviour's person, and pays honor to him as an extraordinary prophet; Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet. 3. She desired instruction and resolution from him concerning the worship and services of the true God, how she might seek him, and where she might serve him most acceptably, whether at Jerusalem, or upon mount Gerazim? Our fathers worshipped in this mountain, but ye say Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship. Where observe, How ready and forward persons of a false religion are to ascribe too much to antiquity, and to the example and custom of their forefathers. Whereas it is not the continuance of a thousand or two thousand years, that can make any thing truly ancient in religion, except it has been from the beginning; nothing is truly ancient in matters of religion, but that which can derive its original from him, that is truly called the Ancient of days.

21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father, 22 Ye worship ye know not what; we know what we worship; for salvation is of the Jews.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

Here we have our Saviour's answer to the foregoing question, which consists of two parts. 1. Concerning the place of worship. 2. Concerning the worship itself. As to the place of worship, our Saviour tells her, that though the Jews had heretofore by warrant of God's word regularly worshipped at Jerusalem, and the Samaritans superstitiously worshipped at mount Gerizim, yet the hour was coming, namely, at his death, when all difference of places for God's worship should be taken away, and therefore she need not trouble herself about the place of God's worship, to know whether of the two places were holier, and the better to serve God in: for ere long the service of God should not be confined more to one place than another. Learn hence, 1. That since the death of Christ, the religious difference of places is taken away, and the worship of God not confined to any one particular place or nation. 2. Our blessed Saviour resolves her, concerning the worship itself, namely, That the ceremonial worship, which the Jews and Samaritans used, should shortly be abolished, and instead thereof a more spiritual form of worship should be established, more suitable to the spiritual nature of the great and holy God, and containing in it the truth and substance of all that which the Jewish ceremonies prefigured and shadowed forth. Learn hence, That the true worship of God under the gospel, doth not consist in the external pomp of any outward ceremonies, but is spiritual and substantial: no worship is acceptable to him, who is the Father of spirits, but that which is truly spiritual.

24 God is a spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth.

God is a spirit: that is, he hath no body, nor bodily parts; he is not a bare spiritual substance; but a pure and perfect Spirit; and therefore his worshippers must worship him in spirit and in truth: where spirit is opposed to the legal ceremonies, and truth to the Jewish rites, not to hypocritical services: for the old patriarchs did worship God in spirit and in truth. As truth is taken for sincerity, they served him with a sincere conscience, and with a single heart. But our Saviour's business is to show, that a worship without legal rites and Jewish ceremonies, is proper to the times of the gospel. In the words, observe, 1. The nature of God declared; God is a spirit. 2. The duty of man inferred: therefore they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth. From the whole note, 1. That God is a pure spiritual being. When bodily parts, hands, and eyes, &c. are ascribed to him, it is only in condescension to our weakness, and to signify those acts in God, which such members do perform in us. Note, 2. That the worship due from the creature to God is a spiritual worship, and ought to be spiritually performed; that is, we must worship him from spiritual principles, sincere love, and filial reverence; for spiritual ends, that we may please him, and promote his glory: and after a spiritual manner, with the whole heart, soul, and mind, and with a fervency of spirit. We must have awful apprehensions of him, suitable to the nature of his being; but above all we must endeavour to resemble him: then is God best worshipped by us, when we are most like to him. The Jewish ceremonial worship was abolished, to promote the spirituality of divine worship: yet must not this be so understood, as if God rejected bodily worship, because he requires spiritual under the gospel; for Jesus Christ, the most spiritual worshipper, worshipped God with his body. Besides, God has appointed some parts of worship, which cannot be performed without the body, as sacraments. In a word, God has created the body as well as the soul, Christ has redeemed the body as well as the soul; and he will glorify the body as well as the soul; therefore it is our duty to worship and glorify God with our bodies, and with our spirits, which are his.

25 The woman saith unto him, I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things.

26 Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he.

Observe here, 1. What a general expectation there was in the minds of all persons (at the time of our Saviour's appearing) of one whom the Jews called the Messiah. I know that Messiah cometh. This woman, though a Samaritan, yet knew that the Messiah should come, and that he was now expected. Observe, 2. What the work and office of the Messiah was apprehended and believed to be, namely, to reveal the whole mind and will of God to a lost world: When the Messiah is come, he will tell us all things. Learn hence, that the Lord Jesus Christ, the promised and true Messiah, being called and appointed by God to be the great Prophet of his church; hath fully and perfectly revealed all things needful to be known for our salvation, John xv. 15. "All things that I have heard of the Father, I have made known unto you." Observe, lastly, How freely and fully Christ reveals himself to this poor woman; he tells her plainly, that he was the Messiah. When the Jews asked him, John x. 24. If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly, Christ did not in plain terms tell them who he was; nay, when John Baptist sent two of his disciples to ask him, whether he were, He that should come: he gave them no direct answer; yet behold he makes himself plainly known to this poor woman; he discerning her humility and great simplicity, that she was willing to be instructed by him, and did not come to him as the Jews and pharisees did, captiously, with a design to entangle and ensnare him. Hence learn, That the Lord Jesus Christ delights to reveal himself, and make known his mind and will to such as with an humble mind, and an honest simplicity of heart, do desire to know him, and understand their duty to him.

27 ¶ And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her?

28 The woman then left her water-pot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men, 29 Come, see a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?

30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

Observe, here, 1. How the providence of God so ordered and disposed of things, that the disciples did not return to Christ, till he had finished his discourse with this poor woman. An humbled sinner may meet with such satisfaction and sweet refreshment in Christ's company, that the presence even of disciples themselves (the best and holiest of saints) may be looked upon as injurious to it, and an interruption of it. This poor woman had so sweet a time with Christ, that an end being put to the conference, by the coming of the disciples, might be matter of grief and resentment to her: yet the providence of God so ordered, that the disciples did not come to break of the conference till Christ had made himself known as the Messiah to this poor woman. Observe, 2. The carriage and behaviour of the disciples, upon their return to Christ: finding him preaching a sermon to a single woman, they marvelled, but yet were silent. Learn, 1. That the humility and condescension of the Lord Jesus Christ, in treating poor penitent and humble sinners, is a matter of wonder and admiration, even to disciples themselves. O, blessed Saviour! there was more kindness and condescension, more love and compassion, more meekness and humility in thyself alone, than in all thy disciples and followers put together. Yet observe, 2. Though they marvelled, they were silent, No man said, Why talkest thou with her? Thence note, That such reverence is due to Christ in all his dispensations and actions, that when we can see no reason for what he doth, it is not for us to inquire, much less for us to quarrel, but we must awfully admire what we cannot comprehend. Observe, 3. The behaviour of this woman after the conference was over; she leaves her water-pot, and makes haste to invite and call her neighbours to Christ, whose grace and kindness she had experienced. Learn hence, That such as truly know Christ, have tasted sweetness in him, and derived comfort and satisfaction from him, will be forward to invite, and industrious to draw, others to a saving acquaintance with him. Come with me, and see a man that told me all that ever I did. Is not this the Christ? Learn farther, from the woman's leaving her water-pot behind her, and hastening to the city, that when once a soul has tasted the sweetness and excellency that is in Jesus Christ, those things which were highly esteemed before, will be little regarded then. The poor woman came to draw water, and thought much, and spake much of the water of that well which was before her: but meeting with Jesus Christ, and tasting of his grace, she forgets both water and water-pot, and away she goes to fetch in all her acquaintance to Christ.

31 ¶ In the mean-while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

32 But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

33 Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat?

34 Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.

Observe here, The fit and seasonable motion which our Saviour's disciples make to him; Master, eat. Learn from thence, though a person's chief care should be for his own soul, and for improving all opportunities for doing good to the souls of others: yet the bodies of men must not be neglected, but supported by meat and drink; especially theirs, whose health and strength may be of greater use and service to God and his church. The body is the servant of the soul, the instrument whereby it worketh: and therefore to neglect the body, is to disable and unfit the soul for service, to hinder the functions and operations of it. The sixth commandment, which forbids us to kill, requires us to use all means for the preservation of life, both in ourselves and others. Observe next, Our Saviour's answer to the disciples' motion; Master, eat, say they; I have meat to eat that ye know not of, says he; for my meat is to do the will of him that sent me. Not that our Saviour did not want meat at this time, for he was both hungry and thirsty, as appears by his asking water of the woman to drink, and by his sending his disciples into the city to buy meat; but our Lord was more intent upon doing his Father's work, than upon satisfying his own hunger. Christ hungered more after an opportunity of doing good to the souls of men, than he did after meat and drink to satisfy his hunger. Lord! let us, thy ministers, learn of thee to prefer the spiritual welfare of our people before any temporal advantages whatsoever.

35 Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields: for they are white already to harvest.

36 And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth, and he that reapeth, may rejoice together.

37 And herein is that saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth.

38 I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor; other men labored and ye are entered into their labors.

Our blessed Saviour having, in the former verses, given a most plain and evident demonstration of his fervent desire to bring souls home to God, doth in these verses labor to stir up and kindle the like affections in his disciples; and this he doth by three very effectual arguments. The first argument is drawn from the ripeness of the people, and their willingness to hear, and their readiness to be reaped and gathered by the gospel (whereof there was a present instance in the Samaritans, who were now coming forth in multitudes to Christ) which opportunity was therefore to be improved: Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest. Learn hence, That as a people is sometimes ripe for the reaper's hand, so it is the duty of the ministers of Christ to lay hold upon such opportunities, with as much desire and delight, as the harvest mendo upon a reaping season. The second argument to stir up the disciples' diligence in preaching the gospel, is drawn from the great reward they should receive for this their work. He that reapeth, receiveth wages. The harvest-man's wages is double to what other laborers receive. The ministers of God shall receive good wages at his hand, how ill soever they are requited and rewarded by an unkind world. And as a farther encouragement, it follows: He that soweth, and he that reapeth, shall rejoice together; that is, the prophets who took so much pains in sowing the seed of the gospel, and particularly John the Baptist, and you my apostles which succeed them, and reap the fruit of what they did sow, shall have the same reward in glory, and rejoice together. Learn hence, That not only the successful, but the faithful laborer, in God's harvest, shall be rewarded; not only those which see the fruit of their ministry in the conversion of sinners, but such as are faithful seedsmen. Though the seed does not come up till we are in our graves, nay, though it rots under the clods, and does not come up at all, yet shall the faithful seedsmen be rewarded according to his labor, not according to his success. The third argument to quicken the disciples' diligence, is drawn from the easiness and facility of that labor which God required of them: Others have labored, and ye are entered into their labors; that is, the prophets and John the Baptist have prepared the ground, and sown the seed, and made ready a people for the Lord, and now ye enter into their labors, performing and gathering them into the gospel-church; yet, this must not be understood absolutely, but comparatively: not as if the prophets reaped nothing, converted none! but that their fruit was small in comparison of the success which the apostles found. Nor is it to be understood as if the apostles took no pains at all, but that the prophets' greater pains render the apostles' labor successful, who took less pains. Learn hence, That the wisdom of God sees it fit that all his servants in the work of the ministry do not meet with the same difficulties, nor enjoy the same success. Some are laborious sowers, others are joyful reapers; some labor all their days with little visible success, others bring in many to Christ, perhaps by a single sermon: some labor even with weariness, and reap little, others enter into their labors, and reap much.

39 ¶ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did.

40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them; and he abode there two days.

41 And many more believed, because of his own word;

42 And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

Here an account is given of the conversion of more of the Samaritans from the city of Sichar. Some believed on him, upon the full report which the woman had made. That He had told her all that ever she did; but others were brought to believe by his own word. Now from the woman's being an instrument to bring her acquaintance to Christ by her own experience of what she had heard from him, Learn, 1. That very weak instruments, when they employ themselves for Christ, desiring to extol his praise, and set forth his glory, are sometimes richly blessed with great success. Many of the Samaritans believed for the saying of this poor woman. Learn, 2. That when a person can say but little of Christ, yet if it be spoken from experience and sensible feelings, it will be more successful and persuasive, than much more that is spoken from notional knowledge. Such was this woman's testimony concerning Christ, Come, see a man that told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ? She spake what she found, yea, what she felt within herself, and speaking her own experience, many believed on him for her saying. But farther, These Samaritans believed Christ to be a prophet upon the testimony of this woman: but they believed him afterwards to be the Messiah, or the Saviour of the world, upon the credit and authority of his own word, ver. 41. And many more believed because of his own word. Thence learn, That although instruments speaking may be a mean to draw persons to give some assent to truth, yet it is Christ himself that must work a full persuasion, and his own word is the surest foundation for faith to build and depend upon: Now we believe, not because of thy saying, for we heard him ourselves.

43 ¶ Now, after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee:

44 For Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath no honor in his own country.

45 Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, having seen all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast: for they also went unto the feast.

Our blessed Saviour having spent two days with the Samaritans, as an introduction to the calling of the Gentiles, he goes forward towards Galilee, the place which he was pleased to make choice of for the exercise of the greatest part of his ministry. Coming into Galilee, he passed by the city of Nazareth, where he had had his education, knowing what little respect he was like to find there: a prophet ordinarily having little honor in his own country; therefore shunning Nazareth, he goes to Cana, where he had done his first miracle. Learn hence, 1. That there is a real tribute of honor due unto every prophet and minister of God, which ought to be testified by reverence to their persons, by a due estimation of the dignity of their calling, by obedience to their doctrine, and by an honorable maintenance. A prophet should have honor; and honor includes all these. Learn, 2. It is very usual and ordinary for the prophets of God to meet with least respect where they are most known; their nearest neighbours, their nearest relations, their nearest acquaintance, are oftentimes farthest off from giving them that honor that is due unto them. Learn, 3. That the true prophets and messengers of God shall be sure to find some that will entertain their persons, and embrace their ministry, though they be disesteemed and rejected by others. Though our Saviour had no honor at Nazareth, yet he found entertainment amongst the rest of the Galileans.

46 So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum.

47 When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down and heal his son; for he was at the point of death.

48 Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe.

49 The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

50 Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way; thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

51 And, as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth!

52 Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend: and they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

53 So the father knew that it was at the same hour in which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth; and himself believed, and his whole house.

54 This is again the second miracle that Jesus did when he was come out of Judea into Galilee.

In this last paragraph of the chapter, we find our blessed Saviour performing a second miracle in Cana of Galilee, curing a nobleman's son that was sick of a fever. This nobleman apprehended Christ to be a prophet, and believed that if he were bodily present with his son, he might possibly cure him: but he did not believe him to be the Messiah, who was true God, and every where present; therefore to give him infallible proof that he was so, he tells him his son was cured by the word of his mouth, even at that distance. By which miracle he cured not only the child of his fever, but the father of his unbelief. From the whole, we note, 1. The person that here applies himself to Christ; a nobleman. We do not find Christ oft attended with nobility. "Have any of the rulers believed on him?" Yes; here is one: the sovereign grace of God is free: and he has his numbers among all orders, ranks, and degrees of men. And though not many noble are called, yet some are. Note, 2. The calamity which befel this noble person, his son was sick; yea, dying, Earthly greatness is no defence against afflictions; great men are in trouble as other men; neither the wealth and riches of this nobleman, nor his power and authority, nor his honor in his country, nor his favor with his prince, could keep off God's hand either from himself or from his son; but the father feels as much by sympathy, as the child by sense. Note, 3. The cause and special occasion which brought this nobleman to Christ; it was in general an affliction; and in particular the sickness of his child. Learn hence, That great is the fruit and profit of afflictions to the children of men. Many, with this nobleman, never come to Christ till they be driven by the cross; and particularly, God sanctifies the sickness and death of near and dear relations, (children in special) to bring persons near to himself. Note, 4. This nobleman was neither faithless nor faithful: had he been quite faithless, he had not taken such pains to come to Christ: had he been faithful, he had not limited the Son of God, by saying, Come down and heal my son ere he die. Come down, as if Christ could not have cured him absent: ere my son die, as if the same power required to heal him being sick, could not raise him being dead. Lord heal my son, had been a proper suit to him who was the great physician: but Come down and heal him; was to teach Christ how to work. He who doeth whatsoever he will, must do it how he will, and when he will. It is for us to crave and receive, not to prescribe and appoint. Note, 5. The meekness and great condescending goodness of Jesus Christ; notwithstanding the infirmity of this poor man, our Lord says, Go thy way, thy son liveth. Worthiness; in the creature, is not the motive that rules Christ. Should we measure our hopes by our worthiness, there was no blessing to be hoped for; but if we measure them by Christ's bounty and compassion, there is no blessing to be despaired of. Note, 6. How Christ not only answers the desires, but exceeds the expectations of this distressed person. His request was only, Come and heal my son. Christ's answer was, Go thy way, thy son liveth. Our heavenly Father, when he doth not give us what we ask, gives us better than we asked. We ask what we think best, but God gives that he knows to be best. Christ here gave a greater demonstration of his omnipotency than was craved. Note lastly, With one word doth Christ heal two patients; the son of his fever, the father of his unbelief. It was a low degree of faith that brought the father to Christ; it was a higher dignity that sent him back to his son; but highest of all, when finding his son healed, he himself believed and his whole house. Learn hence, That a weak faith may be true, but a true faith is always growing and increasing: It is like the path of the just, that shineth more and more until the perfect day.

CHAPTER V.

AFTER this there was a feast of the Jews, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

2 Now there is at Jerusalem, by the sheep market, a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches.

3 In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water.

4 For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water: whosoever then first, after the troubling of the water, stepped in, was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.

This chapter begins with a description of the famous pool of Bethesda, whose waters were medicinal, to cure the first comer thereunto, whatsoever disease he had. Some think this was effected in a natural way, and that the entrails of the sacrificed beasts being washed in this pool, an healing virtue was communicated for curing the palsy, and such cold diseases: as persons that have lame and withered hands, are at this day directed to put them into the belly of a beast newly opened. But others look upon the healing virtue of this pool to be supernatural and miraculous, because it cured all diseases how great and desperate soever, and this in a moment, or very quickly; and but one at a time; and that one the first that stepped in only, after an angel had descended and troubled the waters; all which show, that the healing virtue came not from the goodness of the waters, but that it was a supernatural work. Some think that the miracle of this pool was granted to the Jews, partly to strengthen them in the true worship of God, and to confirm them in their religious course of sacrificing against the scoffs of the Romans, who were now their lords; such a virtue being given to that water wherein their sacrifices were wont to be washed. Learn thence, That means of God's appointment, how improbable and unlikely soever, must not be despised, but awfully admired, and thankfully used; although the way and manner of their working be not understood or comprehended by us.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool; but while I am coming another steppeth down before me.

8 Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

9 And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day was the sabbath.

10 ¶ The Jews, therefore, said unto him that was cured, It is the sabbath-day; it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11 He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

13 And he that was healed wist not who it was: for Jesus had conveyed himself away, a multitude being in that place.

It was very commendable that the rich men did not engross this pool, and the benefit of it, to themselves, but suffered poor people to come to it. In this college of cripples a poor man, that had been lame thirty-eight years, was found, who wanted strength to help himself, wanting money to hire others, and others wanting mercy to help him. Christ takes pity on him, and because he could not go to health, health is graciously brought to him, and that by the hand of the great physician Christ Jesus. Observe here, 1. That not only are men's bodies subject to innumerable infirmities and diseases, but it pleases God, for wise ends, to continue some of his servants laboring under bodily weakness for many years together.

yea, even all the days of their life. Here is a poor man, for eight and thirty years together, under the discipline of God's rod by bodily weakness. Observe, 2. That it is the duty of the afflicted to wait upon God in a diligent use of all means which God has appointed for their help and healing; as to trust to means, is to neglect God; so to neglect the means, is to tempt God. This poor man, no doubt, had made use of the means before, yet waits at the pool now. Observe, 3. Though Christ well knew the case of this afflicted person, and wanted no information, yet he asks him, if he were willing to be made whole? to make him sensible of his misery, to quicken his desires after healing, and to raise his expectations of help from him, Though Christ knows our wants, yet he takes no notice of them, till we make them known to him by prayer. Observe, 4. The time when Christ wrought this miracle of healing upon the impotent man, it was upon the sabbath-day; and, as evidence of the certainty of the cure, Christ bids him, "Take up his bed and walk." Our Saviour's miracles were real and beneficial, they were obvious to sense, and would bear the examination of all persons. The miracles which the church of Rome boast of will not bear the examination of our senses: their great miracle, transubstantiation, is so far from being obvious to sense, that it contradicts the sense and reason of mankind, and is the greatest affront to human nature that ever the world was acquainted with. And our Saviour's working this and many other miracles on the sabbath-day, was for the testification of the miracles to all persons that would take notice of them. Observe, 5. How unjustly the Jews tax the cripple that was healed with the breach of the sabbath, for taking up his bed, and walking on the sabbath-day? Whereas the law only forbade carrying burthens on the sabbath-day for profit, in way of trade; but this man's carrying his bed was a testimony of God's goodness and mercy towards him, and of his gratitude and thankfulness towards God. Hypocritical and superstitious persons often-times pretend much zeal for observing the letter of the law, little respecting the moral sense and signification of it. Besides, our Saviour has a mind to let the Jews know that he was Lord of the sabbath, and that he hath power over it, and could dispense with it as he thought good. Observe, lastly, The great modesty and humility of our blessed Saviour, how hateful all ostentation and vain glory was unto him; for having wrought this famous miracle before the people at a public time, the feast of the passover, to shun all applause from the multitude, he conveys himself privately away from them: "Jesus conveyed himself away, a multitude being in that place." Our Saviour's business was to do much good, and make but little noise; he sought not his own glory.

14 Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

These words are our Saviour's seasonable advice and counsel to the poor impotent cripple, whom he had miraculously restored to health and soundness. Whence observe, 1. The person admonishing, Jesus; he that had (No. 24.)

been his physician before, is his monitor and teacher now: "Behold, thou art made whole, sin no more." Oh, how much is it the duty, but seldom the practice, of those whom God makes instruments for recovering bodily health, to put their patients in mind of their obligations to thankfulness and new obedience! Thus did our Saviour. The recovered man's physician gave him instruction: his healer became his monitor. Sin no more. Observe, 2. The person admonished, the recovered cripple: Thou art made whole. But what was he? Not a disciple, not a believer, For he that was healed wist not who Jesus was, ver. 13. he knew not Christ, therefore believed not on him, and yet was healed by him. Thence learn, That there are many outward mercies and common blessings, which Christ bestows upon those that have no spiritual knowledge of him, or saving acquaintance with him. The man that was healed wist not who he was that had healed him. Observe, 3. The place where Christ meets this his recovered patient; not at the tavern, but in the temple, returning thanks to God for his recovered health: when God sends forth his word and healeth us, it is our duty to make our first visit to God's house, and to pay our vows in the great congregation, and sound forth the praises of our great and gracious deliverer. Observe, 4. The circumstance of time when Christ found him in the temple, soon after his recovery. Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple. We must not be clamorous and importunate to receive mercies, and dumb and tongue-tied in returning thanks; but make haste, and not delay the time to pay our acknowledgments to him that healeth. Observe, 5. The admonition itself; Behold thou art made whole, sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee; where it is farther implied, that Almighty God has sorer plagues and severer judgments in store for those sinners who go on obstinately in a course of sin and rebellion against God, notwithstanding all the signal rebukes of his avenging anger. From the whole note, That when the Lord doth graciously heal a person or a people, it is a mercy to be much observed, and thankfully acknowledged.

15 The man departed, and told the Jews, that it was Jesus which had made him whole.

16 And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath-day.

After the man understood who his healer and benefactor was, he went and told the Jewish magistrates that it was Christ that had healed him. This he did, not with any evil design no doubt, to inform against him, and stir up the Jews to persecute him; but desirous to publish what Christ had done, to his honor, and to direct others to make use of him. Learn thence, That it is the duty of all those that have experienced the power and pity of Christ themselves, to proclaim and publish it to others, to the intent that all that need him may experience help and healing from him: this seems to be the poor man's design: but behold the blindness, obstinacy, and malice of the Jews, who persecuted Christ, and sought to kill him for doing good, and healing a cripple that had been thirty-eight years so: Therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him; Yet observe the cloak and pretence they have for their malicious persecution of our Saviour; namely, the supposed violation of the sabbath-day; They sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath-day. Learn hence, That great cruelty against Christ and his members has always been, and still is, masked and disguised with a fair pretence of zeal for God and his commands. The pharisees mortally hated our Saviour; therefore, to cover their malice, they traduce him as a profaner of the sabbath, and seek to take away his life.

17 ¶ But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

From this verse to the end of the chapter, we have our Saviour's apology for his working the foregoing cure on the impotent man on the sabbath-day. And the chief argument he insists upon is drawn from his unity and equality in nature and operation with his Father; As the Father worketh, says he, so I work. Here he speaks of himself, not as a servant, or instrument in the Father's hand, but as the fellow-worker with the Father, both in the works of creation, and in the works of providence, and preservation also. Learn hence, 1. That although Almighty God has long since ceased from the work of creation, yet not from the work of preservation. My father worketh hitherto, not by creating new kinds of creatures, but by upholding and preserving what he has already created. Learn, 2. That Christ the Son of God is joined with, and undivided from the Father, in working. As the Father created all things by him (not as a man, and as an instrument in his Father's hand; for then he was not such) but as his fellow-worker, being equal in nature and power with the Father; in like manner as the Father preserveth, sustaineth, governeth, and upholdeth all things, so doth Christ; the Father's actions and his being the same, My father worketh hitherto, and I work.

18 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, not only because he had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God.

19 Then answered Jesus, and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.

Observe here, The Jews, instead of being satisfied, were the more enraged; not only because he had violated the sabbath (as they pretended) by healing the cripple on the sabbath-day, but because Christ had asserted, that God was his Father in a peculiar manner, and made himself equal with God; our Saviour therefore goes on to assert his equality and conjunction with the Father in his operations and workings, which doth at once justify his work on the sabbath day, and prove him to be truly and really God. Now our holy Lord, to prove himself equal with God the Father, produces first many arguments, to verse 31, and then alledges the testimony of many witnesses, to the end of the chapter. Our Saviour's first argument to prove himself equal with the Father in essence and nature, is this, that the Father and he are equal in operation, in will and consent for working; that the Son doth all that the Father doth, and the Father doth nothing without the Son, ver. 19. "The Son can do nothing of himself;" that is, as man, as the Messiah, and as Mediator, he could do nothing of himself. His perfect obedience to, and compliance with, the will of his Father that sent him, would not suffer him to do any thing without him; but as God, he could do all things of himself. Learn hence, That it is an undeniable proof that the Father and Son are one in nature, essence, and being; in that they are inseparable in operation and working; What things soever the Father doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise; and the Son doeth nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: therefore Father and Son being equal in operation and working, are equal in nature and being; and consequently, both essentially, truly, and really God: therefore the Arians of old, and the Socinians at this day, are wide when they produce this text, The Son can do nothing of himself, to prove that Christ is not equal with God the Father. They forget or neglect to distinguish between his divine nature, which could do all things, and his mediatorial office, which could not do, but what the Father that sent him had appointed him to do.

20 For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth; and he will show him greater works than these, that ye may marvel.

The second argument which our Saviour produces to prove his unity in nature, and equality in operation with the Father, is drawn from that special love which the Father beareth to the Son: which inclines him to communicate all things to him by a divine and ineffable communication. Learn hence, 1. That God the Father loved Jesus Christ his Son, with an essential, natural, and necessary love, as being the substantial image of himself, and the splendor and brightness of his glory, "The Father loveth the Son:" that is, with an essential, eternal, and ineffable love. 2. That the Father's love to Christ was communicative; the Father communicated his essence and nature, his wisdom and power for operation, to the Son; "The Father showeth the Son all things that himself doeth;" namely, by a divine, inconceivable, and unspeakable communication.

21 For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them: even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.

A third argument, proving Christ to be God, and equal with the Father, is here produced: namely, his raising of the dead; he is joined with the Father in that work, and equal with him: As the Father quickeneth whom he pleaseth, so doth the Son quicken whom he will: that is, not as the Father's instrument, but as a principal agent, by the same authority, with the like absolute freedom of will which the Father uses, being a sovereign and independent being as the Father is: As the Father raiseth the dead, and quickeneth them, so the Son quickeneth whom he will. This is more than ever was said of any prophet or apostle, that he did such works at his will. Learn hence, 1. That quickening or raising of the dead is an act of omnipotency, and proper to God only: The Father raiseth the dead, and quickeneth them. 2. That Christ's power to raise the dead, as well as the Father's, is a proof of his equality with his Father, and an evidence of his being truly and really God; the Son quickeneth whom he will.

22 For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son:

23 That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him.

A fourth instance of Christ's godhead, and proof of his equality with the Father, is, That it is his work to judge the world: The Father, says Christ, judges no man: that is, no man without me, but all men by me, to this intent, That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father: that is, honor him with the same faith, love, fear, and worship, that is due and payable to God the Father. Hence learn, 1. That Christ, as God, hath the absolute power of life and death, of absolution and condemnation, which he executes in conjunction with his Father. 2. That having this power of judging the world with the Father, doth show that the same glory is due to him, which is due unto the Father. All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. 3. That such as pretend to honor Christ, but deny him to be God equal with the Father, withdraw the highest honor from him; and such as withdraw the honor from the Son, deny it to the Father, who will not be honored but in and through honoring of the Son. This text speaks dread and terror to the Socinians, who pretend to honor Christ, but not with the same honor with which they pretend to honor the Father: in God's account, they honor him not at all: For he that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father. True, they pray to Christ, and give him divine worship, though they believe him to be but a creature; but what is this but idolatry, to worship that which by nature is not God, and to do that to a creature which God requires to be given to himself, having said, My glory will I not give to another; Isa. xlviii. 2. Divine honor can be only due to a divine person; that is, to him that is God blessed for evermore.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation: but is passed from death unto life.

25 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of God; and they that hear shall live.

26 For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself:

27 And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man.

Here we have a fifth evidence of Christ's godhead, and equality with the Father: namely, that he is the author of spiritual and eternal life to all that believe on him. He that hath a fountain of life equal with the Father, and communicated to him from the Father, is God: But Christ hath this, ver. 26. For as the Father hath life in himself, so he has given to the Son to have life in himself. Again, He that hath authority to execute judgment upon angels and men, is God: and Christ hath such authority, ver. 27. He hath given him authority to execute judgment. Farther, he that with his voice quickeneth and maketh alive them that hear it, is God; and Christ doth this, ver. 25. The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God and live. The dead: that is 1. The spiritually dead; such as are dead in trespasses and sins; these hearing the voice of Christ in the ministry of the word, shall live a life of grace on earth, and a life of glory in heaven. 2. Such as are corporally dead also! these are likewise quickened and raised by Christ as God. Learn hence, 1. That God the Father hath communicated to Christ his Son a power to quicken and enliven such as are spiritually and corporally dead. 2. That the Father's communicating this power to the Son argues no inequality or inferiority in the Son, but he hath the same life infinitely, independently, and equally with the Father: As the Father hath it, so hath the Son: the Father hath it in himself, and so hath the Son also; therefore the Son, as well as the Father, is essentially and truly God. 3. Others, by the dead, understand those whom Christ raised from the dead, when he himself arose. When many of the bodies of the saints arose with him, Matt. xxvii. it being said, The hour now is, &c. Dr. Whitby.

28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, 29 And shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.

Our Saviour finding the Jews amazed and astonished at his declaring his sovereign and supreme authority and power to quicken and raise whom he pleased from the dead, doth in these verses assure them, that there should be a general resurrection, and an universal day of judgment, both of the righteous and the wicked, and a future distribution of rewards and punishments in another life, according to men's actions here in this life. All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, shall and come forth. Here observe, 1. The certainty and universality of the resurrection of the dead declared: The hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall come forth. Observe, 2. The powerful and efficacious means by which this great and sudden change shall be effected and accomplished in the morning of the resurrection; namely, the omnipotent voice of Christ: All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth. 3. Here are the different ends of the resurrection declared, according to the difference of persons which shall then be raised, good and bad; Those that have done good to the resurrection of life: and those that have done evil, to the resurrection of damnation. Learn, 1. That there shall certainly be a resurrection of the body. 2. That all in the graves shall be raised, though not all alike: the wicked shall be raised by the power of Christ, as their judge; the righteous shall be raised by virtue of their union with Christ as their head. 3. Accordingly as men live in this world, and go out of it, so will they be found at the resurrection, without any change of their state; there will be then only two sorts of persons, good and bad. All that have done good, how small soever the degree of their goodness hath been, shall be rewarded: and all that have done evil shall be everlastingly punished: for all persons shall be eternally happy, or intolerably miserable, in the other world, accordingly as they manage their deportment and behaviour in this life; They that have done good shall go, &c.

30 I can of mine own self do nothing; as I hear I judge: and my judgment is just: because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.

Here Christ declares to the Jews, and in them, to all mankind, that they might assure themselves his judgment would be exactly righteous, because he had no private will or power of his own, contrary to, or different from, his Father. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ being the same in essence and nature, in power and operation, with the Father, had no private will or interest of his own, but acted all things as God, in co-ordination with the Father; and, as man, in subordination to him; I can of mine own self do nothing; that is, neither as God, nor as Mediator: not as God, for God the Father and Christ being one, equal in power, what one person doth, the other doth; not as Mediator, for so Christ finished the work which his Father gave him to do; the will of the Father, and the will of Christ being both one. As Christ was sent by his Father's order, so he was altogether guided by his Father's will, wherewith his own will exactly concurred.

31 If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true.

32 ¶ There is another that beareth witness of me, and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true.

Our blessed Saviour having produced these five foregoing arguments, to prove his unity in essence, and his equality in power with the Father, comes now, at the end of the chapter, to produce several testimonies for the proof of it: and the first of them is, the testimony of God his Father: There is another that beareth witness of me, whose witness is true. Now the Father had lately, at Christ's baptism, by a voice from heaven, declared him to be his beloved Son, in whom he was well pleased; which illustrious testimony given to Christ they had not regarded. Learn hence, That as Christ came into the world in obedience to his Father, and to bear witness to him, so did the Father honor him, and bear witness of him, and his testimony concerning his Son is undoubtedly true, and to be depended and rested upon: for we make the Father a liar, if we do not depend upon the record which he hath given of his Son.

33 Ye sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth.

34 But I receive not testimony from man; but these things I say, that ye might be saved.

The second testimony to prove Christ to be the Messiah, was that of John the Baptist. We read, John i. 19. how the Jews sent to inquire of him, Whether he were the Christ or not; and he denied it, and pointed at Jesus, saying, Behold the Lamb of God; yet would not the Jews abide by this testimony of John, concerning the Messiah. Nevertheless, says Christ, I receive not testimony from John, that is, "John by his testimony added nothing to me; I was what I was, and I am what I am, before John testified of me, and since." Learn hence, That the divinity of Christ's person, and the verity of his doctrine, needs no man's testimony for the confirmation of it, being sufficiently confirmed by Christ's own authority, and his Father's testimony; I receive not testimony from man; that is, "I need it not, I desire it not upon my own account, but upon your's only, that upon the credit of John's testimony ye might believe on me, and be saved by me;" These things I say, that ye might be saved.

35 He was a burning and a shining light: and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

Observe here, John's character, and the people's carriage. 1. John's character; he was a light, a burning and a shining light: he had in him a light of knowledge, to enlighten, direct, and comfort others; and this his knowledge was accompanied with zeal; he was a burning light in his doctrine, and a shining lamp in his conversation: he had the light of knowledge in his head, the warmth of zeal in his heart, and the influence of both in this life. Learn hence, 1. That those whom God calls to the office and work of the ministry, he furnishes with abilities and endowments suitable to their great employments; he endows them with a light of knowledge, which is animated by the heat and warmth of zeal. 2. That ministerial gifts and abilities are not bestowed alike upon all, but dispensed variously. All are lights according to their measure, but all are not equally burning and shining lights for proportion and degree. 3. That the brightest burning and clearest shining lights in the church of Christ, have but their time in this world; they are subject, as well as other men, to the common condition of mortality, and the lamps of their lives burn out the faster, by lighting others to heaven. John was a burning and a shining light; but now is put out and gone. Observe, 2. As John's character, so the people's carriage; Ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light. Here is a threefold gradation; they rejoiced, they rejoiced in his light, and they rejoiced for a season. 1. They rejoiced. The word signifies that they leaped for joy, and danced about him as children do about a bonfire, when he first began his ministry among them. O, how warm are the affections of a people, when a pious and zealous minister comes first among them. 2. They rejoiced in his light, not in his heat. Or, they rejoiced in John's light, not in Christ's; for when they found that John bare record to Christ, they soon grew cold in their affection towards John. 3. They rejoiced only for a season; for an hour, as the word signifies. For a short time John's ministry was acceptable. Learn hence, 1. That it has been an old practice among the professors, not to like their pastors long, though they have been ever such burning and shining lights. John was not changed, but his hearers were changed; he did burn and shine in the candlestick of the church with equal light and lustre to the last; but they had changed their thoughts of him, and lost their esteem for him. Learn, 2. That as nothing in general is so mutable as the mind of man, so nothing in particular is so variable as the affections and opinions of people towards their ministers. The lamp of John's ministry was always alike burning and shining, his oil did not waste, but his hearers' zeal wasted, and their affection cooled: those whose gifts are not all abated, may yet find a great abatement in the acceptance of their gifts; therefore let no man live upon the breath of men; least of all let ministers live upon the popular air, or the speech of the people. O, let us live upon the credit which we have with God, and rejoice chiefly in his esteem. If our performances find acceptance with God, we are safe and happy, though they fall under contempt with men.

36 ¶ But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

The third testimony produced by Christ, to evidence and prove himself to be the promised Messiah, and Saviour of the world, is that of his miracles; which, by an omnipotent power, as God, he was enabled to work. Christ's miracles were speaking testimonies of his unity with the Father, and of the divinity of his person. Not so the miracles of his apostles; for he wrought his miracles in his own name, and by his own power and authority; but the apostles expressly declared the contrary, Acts iii. 12, 16. Why look ye so steadfastly on us, as if we by our own power had made this man whole? His name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong. Learn hence, That the testimony of Christ's own works, his miracles wrought in his own name, and by his own authority and power, is a clearer confirmation of his godhead, office, and doctrine, than the best of men's testimonies; yea, than John Baptist's own testimony, That he saw the Spirit descending on him.

(No. 24.)

37 And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape.

38 And ye have not heard his word abiding in you: for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not.

Here our blessed Saviour produces again the testimony of his Father, that he was the true and promised Messiah: this was given him both at his baptism and his transfiguration; when God the Father owned Christ to be his Son, by an audible voice from heaven, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Which testimony the Jews ought the more to have regarded, because though their forefathers had heard the voice of God at certain times, Exodus. xx. and Deut. iv. yet they in their times had never heard his voice. Learn hence, That the father's immediate testimony of Christ from heaven, is greater than all the testimonies given to him here on earth; greater than John's, greater than his miracles. The presence of the glorious Trinity, when that testimony was given, Matt. iii. ult. made that witness most awful and solemn.

39 ¶ Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me.

The next testimony which Christ appeals to, is the testimony of the scriptures; that is, the writings of Moses and the prophets, which Christ bids the Jews diligently search, and they shall find that they abundantly testified of him, and that all the prophecies and types were fulfilled in him. The word (search) signifieth to search, as men do for a golden mine in the bowels of the earth, which they must dig deep for, before they can come at. It intimates, 1. That there is an inestimable treasure lying hid in the holy scriptures, which we shall never fathom by a slight, superficial search. 2. That this inestimable treasure may be found out by the painful searcher; and it is the duty of all the members of the visible church to read and search the scriptures, which point out the way to eternal life.

40 And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.

Here our Saviour upbraids the Jews for their obstinate infidelity; that notwithstanding God the Father by a voice from heaven, and John the Baptist by his testimony on earth, notwithstanding all the miracles which they had seen wrought by Christ himself, and notwithstanding the scriptures, which they pretended so highly to esteem, did prove him to be the Messias, and the author of eternal life, which they professed to seek; yet such was their obstinacy, that they would not come unto him, nor believe in him. Ye will not come unto me, that ye may have life. Hence observe, 1. A choice and invaluable mercy, which Christ stands ready to bestow upon poor sinners, that is life, both spiritual and eternal. A life of grace, in order to a life of glory. Observe, 2. The gracious condition upon which this invaluable blessing may be had; and that is, upon coming to Christ, believing on him, and receiving of him. 3. Here is the true reason declared why sinners do miss of life and salvation by Jesus Christ, when he has so dearly purchased it for them, and does so freely tender it unto them, and that lies in their own wilfulness and obstinacy; Ye will not come unto me. Learn hence, That the true reason why so many sinners miss of salvation and eternal life, after all that Christ has done and suffered for them, is their own obstinacy and unwillingness to come to him, that they may have life. Man, by nature, has not only an inability, but a fixed enmity in his will against Jesus Christ.

41 I receive not honor from men.

42 But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43 I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

Here observe, 1. How little our Saviour sought the approbation and vain-glorious estimation of men; I receive not honor from men. The same should all his disciples and followers do; rest satisfied in the secret testimony and silent applause of their own consciences, without pumping for popular applause. Observe, 2. The dreadful sin which Christ charged upon the Jews, as the cause why they rejected him, I know that you have not the love of God in you. Oh! deplorable state and case, to be void of all true love to God! Love being the spring of all action, and the root of all true obedience; he that loves God, will not only sweat at his work, but bleed at his work too, if his work cannot be carried on without bleeding. But where love of God is wanting, and no care to please God is found, his authority is despised, his Son rejected: as the Jews here would not come to Christ, that they might have life, because they had not the love of God in them. Observe, 3. The high affront which the Jews offered to the Son of God in preferring any seducers or impostors before him, who came in their own names; whilst he was rejected, who came in the name of his Father. Learn hence, That though Christ was the great Ambassador of his Father, not a servant but a son, and had his mission, his approbation, and his testimony from heaven; yet so far did the perverseness and prejudices of the Jews prevail, that he was rejected, whilst impostors and deceivers, false christs and anti-christs, without any evidence or authority from God (because promising them a temporal kingdom) were embraced and entertained; I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; but if another (a seducer) should come in his own name, him ye will receive. As if Christ had said, You are incredulous to none but me; every cheat that has but wit or wickedness to tell you, "The Lord hath sent him," is believed by you; but though I come in my Father's name, showing a commission signed and sealed by him, and doing those works that none but a God can do, yet you receive me not. O unreasonable infidelity!

44 How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?

Here Christ tells the Jews, that it is impossible they should believe aright in him, because they were so in love with the praise of men, that they would own him for the Messias who could promise them a temporal kingdom, and in the mean time reject himself, who came authorized with the testimony and approbation of God; you will receive honor one of another, but reject the honor that cometh from God only. Learn, That such as ambitiously hunt after vainglory and respect from men, do evidence themselves to be regardless of God's approbation and acceptance.

45 Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust.

46 For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me.

47 But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?

Think not that I will accuse you; that is, that I only will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses; that is, the writings of Moses, which you pretend to depend upon, and to trust to; for had you believed his writings, that is, the prophecies and types contained in his writings, you would have been led by them to believe in me; for they all pointed at me, and received their accomplishment in me; but if Moses cannot be heard by you, I must expect no authority with you. Learn, 1. That the whole scope of Moses' ceremonial law, was to point out and prefigure Jesus Christ; Christ was the sum of the law, as well as the substance of the gospel; he was Abraham's promised Seed, Moses' great Prophet, Jacob's Shiloh, Esau's Emanuel, Daniel's Holy One, Zachary's Branch, and Malachi's Angel. 2. That such as believed the ancient prophecies before Christ came, did see their accomplishment in him, when he was come.

CHAPTER VI.

AFTER these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.

Observe here, How busy and industrious our holy Lord was about his Father's work, both on the sea, and on the land, both by night and by day; "His meat was to do the will of him that sent him, and to finish his work;" some have inquired into the reasons why Christ travelled by sea, as well as by land; and they seem to be these; 1. To show what his intent was in making the sea, namely, to be sailed upon, as the land was made to be walked upon. 2. That Christ might take occasion to manifest his deity, in working miracles upon the sea, as well as upon the land. 3. Might it not be to comfort and encourage sea-faring men, that dwell much upon the waters, in the midst of their distresses, to trust in and pray to such a Saviour, as had himself an experimental knowledge of the dangers of the sea? Some have farther observed, That after our Saviour's resurrection, we never hear of his sailing upon the sea more; for such a turbulent condition, which necessarily attends sea voyages, was utterly inconsistent with the stability and perpetuity of Christ's state, when he was risen from the dead; the firm land better agreeing with his fixed estate, than the fluctuating water.

2 And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased.

Observe here, What an exact knowledge Christ had, not only of all his followers, but of the motives and principles which did induce them to follow him; it was not the excellency of his person, nor the heavenliness of his doctrine, that drew the multitude at this time after him, but the novelty of his miracles, They saw the miracles which he did: it is better to feel one miracle wrought upon the heart, in changing and renewing that, than to see a thousand outward miracles wrought before our eyes.

3 And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

4 And the passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

5 ¶ When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

6 (And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do.)

7 Philip answered him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 One of his disciples, Andrew, ⁵Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, 9 There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?

10 And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11 And Jesus took the loaves, and, when he had given thanks, he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would.

12 When they were filled he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world.

This miracle of our Saviour's feeding five thousand persons with five barley loaves and two small fishes, is recorded by all the four Evangelists, and several particulars therein are very remarkable. Observe, 1. What a poor and slender provision the Lord of the whole earth hath for his family, for himself, for his disciples, and the multitude; nothing more than five barley loaves and two fishes. Teaching us, that these bodies of our must be fed, not pampered. Our belly must not be our master, much less our God; and as the quality of the victuals was plain, so was the quantity small; only five loaves and two fishes. Well might the disciples say, What are they among so many? The eye of sense and reason sees an utter impossibility of those effects, which faith can easily apprehend, and a divine power more easily produce. When men judge by sense and reason, and do not look to Christ's power, if extremities come, they are soon at their wit's end, and know not what to do. Observe, 2. How the great Master of this miraculous feast doth marshal his guests; he commanded them to sit down. None of the people reply, "Sit down, but to what? Here's the mouths, but where's the meat? We may soon be set, but when shall we be served?" Not a word like this, but they obey and expect. Lord, how easy it is to trust thy providence, and rely upon thy power, when there is corn in the barn, bread in the cupboard, money in the purse! But when our stores are empty, when our stock runs low, when we have nothing in hand, then to depend upon an invincible bounty, is a noble act of faith indeed. Observe, 3. The actions performed by our blessed Saviour. 1. He blessed the loaves; teaching us, by his example, never to use or receive the good creatures of God without prayer and praise, not to sit down to our food as a beast to his fodder. Christ broke the loaves! he could have multiplied them whole, why then doth he rather choose to do it in the breaking? Perhaps to teach us, that we may rather expect his blessings in the distribution of his bounty, than in the reservation of it. Scattering is the way to increasing, and liberality the way to riches. Again, 3. "He gave to his disciples, that they might distribute to the multitude;" he did not do it with his own hands, but by their's; doubtless it was to gain reputation to his disciples, from the people: the same course doth Christ take in spiritual distributions. He that could feed the souls of his people immediately by the hand of his Spirit, chooses rather by the hands of his ministers to divide the bread of life among them. Observe, 4. That reality and greatness of the miracle, They did all eat and were filled; they did eat, not a crumb or a bit, but to satiety and fullness. All that were hungry did eat, and all that did eat were satisfied, and yet twelve baskets of the fragments remained. More is left than was at first set on. It is hard to say which was the greatest miracle, the miraculous eating, or the miraculous leaving. If we consider what they ate, we may wonder that they left any thing; if what they left, that they eat any thing. Observe lastly, These fragments, though of barley loaves and fish bones, must not be lost, but gathered up: we must exercise frugality in the enjoyment of the greatest plenty. Lord! how tremulous will their account be, who, having large and plentiful estates, do consume them upon their lust! how will they wish they had been born to poverty and necessity, when they appear to make up their accounts before God!

15 ¶ When Jesus, therefore, perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone.

Here we have observable, The wonderful effect of the foregoing miracle; the people seeing so many thousands fed with five loaves, were so transported, that they concluded that Jesus was certainly the promised Messiah. Now the notion they had of the Messiah was this, that he should be a temporal prince, that should subdue all nations under his feet, and particularly free the Jews from the slavery of the Roman yoke, which was now upon their necks; forgetting what our Saviour had often told them, that his kingdom was not of this world, but within men; and that his business was to free men from soul slavery, not from civil subjection: however, upon this mistake, the Jews here in a furious zeal designed to take Christ by force, and make him their king; but our Saviour (who came not into the world to disturb the order of civil government) understanding their intentions, withdraws himself into a mountain, to avoid giving the least occasion for any such jealousy or suspicion.

He learn, That although Jesus Christ be the great King of his church, and doth exercise a spiritual kingdom in it, yet he came not into the world to be a temporal king, nor was his kingdom of this world, or ever designed to be prejudicial to the thrones of princes, and civil government of men. Therefore doth Christ withdraw himself and refuse all this offer, as no ways agreeable to him, or consistent with his design.

16 And when even was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea, 17 And entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum; and it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

18 And the sea arose, by reason of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs, they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh unto the ship; and they were afraid.

20 But he saith unto them, It is I; be not afraid.

21 Then they willingly received him into the ship: and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

Observe here, 1. The great danger the disciples were in, and the difficulties they encounter with, after they had enjoyed the sweet privileges of Christ's gracious presence with them. They were tossed upon a tempestuous sea. Learn thence, That it is not unusual, after sweet refreshments and manifestations from Christ unto his people, to meet with a stormy and sharp exercise of faith and patience; such was the lot of his disciples here: a constant gale of sweetness, an uninterrupted course of prosperity and happiness, as it is not to be expected here, so neither can it be enjoyed here, without great peril and danger. Observe, 2. What haste our Saviour makes towards his disciples, when they were tossed upon a tempestuous sea; Jesus drew nigh unto the ship. Nothing can separate between, nor keep Christ from his children and people in a suffering hour. He that waded through a sea of wrath to save his people, will walk upon a sea of water to succour and relieve them in an hour of tribulation. Observe, 3. The disciples not discerning Christ, not knowing him to be their Saviour, were afraid of him. Christ may be coming to save his people, and they not able at present to discern and apprehend him; but their fears may be highest, when their deliverer and deliverance is nearest. Observe, 4. How speedily Christ relieves them of their fears, by telling them who he was; It is I, be not afraid. It is a sufficient support in all our afflictions to be assured of Christ's gracious presence with us. Say but, O Saviour, It is I, and then let evils do their worst: that one word, It is I, is sufficient to allay all storms, and to calm a thousand tempests. Observe lastly, with what joy and gladness the disciples received and entertained Christ, in this hour of their distress: They willingly received him into the ship. Though the company of Christ is always sweet and welcome to his disciples and friends, yet never is it so very agreeable and desirable to them as in the hour of trial and temptation; then they willingly receive him, and joyfully welcome and entertain him.

22 ¶ The day following, when the people, which stood on the other side of the sea, saw that there was none other boat there save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone;

23 (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias, nigh unto the place where they did eat bread; after that the Lord had given thanks.)

24 When the people, therefore, saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus :

25 And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, Rabbi; when camest thou hither ?

26 Jesus answered them, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

27 Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him hath God the Father sealed.

Our blessed Saviour having wrought the foregoing miracle, feeding five thousand with five loaves, the people followed him in troops, from place to place. Christ, who knew their hearts, tells them plainly what was their end: they followed him indeed, but not for any spiritual excellencies they saw in him, or soul advantages they expected from him, but for bread: only to have their bellies fed with the loaves, not their souls satisfied with the bread of life. Oh! how seldom is Christ sought for his own sake, viz: Jesus queritur propter Jesum, Aug. How natural is it for men to seek Christ for sinister ends and bye-respects! but to seek him only for outward advantages, is the basest of bye-ends, and that which the soul of Christ exceedingly abhors. Labor not for the meat which perisheth. This prohibition must not be understood absolutely, but comparatively; not as if Christ intended to take them off from their lawful labors, and the business of their callings; but his meaning is, Labor not in the first and chief place for earthly things, which are all perishing; but for bread for your souls to live eternally by; even for the food of my heavenly doctrine, which will make them that feed upon it immortal: and thus the Son of man stands ready to give unto you: For him hath God the Father sealed: that is, by a special commission and authority, hath empowered to him to dispense all spiritual blessings to them that want and crave them. Learn hence, 1. That all the things of this life are perishing and fading. The best of outward comforts and enjoyments are meat that perisheth. 2. That it is the greatest of follies to labor intensely and inordinately for, and to set ourselves with all our might and strength to pursue and follow after, perishing things. 3. That Jesus Christ's holy doctrine, his heavenly grace, is food that never perisheth, nor diminisheth, how many soever partake of it, but makes all that partake thereof to be partakers of eternal life therewith. 4. That Jesus Christ is authorized, sealed, and commissioned, by his Father, to give eternal life to such as industriously labor after him, and will not be satisfied without him; him hath God the Father sealed; that is, Jesus Christ was sealed to the office of Mediator by God the Father: Christ was sealed at his baptism; sealed by his doctrine; sealed by his miracles; sealed by his resurrection; sealed by his unction, or super-eminent and unparalleled sanctification. Lord! where will the rejecters of Christ then appear at the great day, who have despised the authority of him, whom the Father commissioned to give eternal life to whomsoever he pleaseth.

28 Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we may work the works of God?

29 Jesus answered, and said unto them; This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.

Here the Jews, who were strict observers of the ceremonial law of Moses, and rested thereupon for salvation, inquire of our Saviour what they should do that they might please God? Christ directs them to the great duty of believing on himself, to own and acknowledge him to be the true Messiah, and as such to rely upon him alone for salvation; This is the work of God ye believe, &c. Learn hence, That for a penitent humble sinner to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ is a work highly pleasing and acceptable unto God. Christ calls faith the work of God, upon a threefold account: it is the work of his efficiency and operation; it is the work of his commanding; and it is the work of his approbation and acceptance, a work that God is highly pleased with, and greatly delighted in; This is the work of God.

30 They said, therefore, unto him, What sign showest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work?

31 Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

Here the Jews tell our Saviour, that, before they will believe in him, they must see some sign from him, to confirm his doctrine, and to prove him to be the Messiah; they acknowledged Christ had wrought a great miracle in feeding five thousand persons, with five barley loaves: but Moses fed their fathers in the wilderness, who were not less than six hundred thousand persons, with excellent manna from heaven, and this for forty years together; from whence they would seem to conclude, that they had more reason to believe Moses than Christ: not considering that Moses was but an instrument to obtain, by prayer, the manna at the hands of God: but Christ was an agent, and that, by a creating power inherent in himself, he multiplied the five loaves to the feeding of five thousand. Note here, from the Jews requiring a sign before they would believe, that he who publishes a new doctrine to the world, ought to confirm his mission by some miraculous operation. 2. That God honored Moses, his messenger, very much, and Christ, his minister, much more, in that both of them wrought great and special miracles for the confirmation of their mission. 3. That the Jews not believing Christ to be the true Messiah, upon so many attestations, and after his divine mission was confirmed by such miraculous operations, rendered their infidelity inexcusable, and their obstinacy invincible.

32 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.

33 For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

Upon the Jews mentioning manna to our blessed Saviour, he takes occasion to make a comparison betwixt himself, the bread of life, and manna, the bread of Moses; and that in three particulars. 1. It was not Moses that gave the Israelites that manna, it was God, at the prayer of Moses; but it was God that now offered them the bread of life, were they willing to accept it. 2. The manna was not given from heaven, that is, from the celestial heaven, but only from the air and clouds, which frequently in the scripture is called heaven: but Christ the bread of life is given and sent by the Father from the highest heaven, even the heaven of glory. 3. Manna was not true spiritual food effectively and of itself, but bodily food only: but Christ is real and spiritual bread, which gives life to lost and dead men; which manna did not, could not do. And whereas manna was peculiar to Israel only, Christ gives life to all sorts of persons, Gentiles as well as Jews; The bread of God giveth life unto the world. Learn hence, That as Christ is the truth and substance of all types in the Old Testament, so particularly, the manna was an illustrious type of Christ. In many things they agree; and in some they differ. They agree in their original: manna came down from above, so did Christ: manna was freely given, so is Jesus Christ the free gift of God: manna was not fit to be eaten as it lay in the field, but must be ground in a mill, or beaten in a mortar, and baked in an oven before it was fit for food: Christ was ground by his sufferings, bruised on the cross, scorched in the fiery oven of his father's wrath, that he might become a fit Saviour for us. Again, as the manna was gathered by the Israelites daily and equally, it was rained down upon their tents, and every man had his omer: thus is Christ, in the ministry of the word, daily offered to a lost world, and all that believed in him, shall share alike in the benefit of the justification, sanctification, and glorification from him; but now the manna and Christ differ in this: and the truth excels the type thus: there is a quickening, enlivening virtue, a life-giving, and a life-upholding power, in Christ the bread of life, which was never found in manna, the bread of Israel; and whereas manna only fed the body of an Israelite, and this only for a little time in the wilderness; Christ nourisheth the soul, the souls of all believers, be they Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, and this not for a time, but for eternity; The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

34 Then said they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread.

35 And Jesus saith unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

36 But I said unto you, that ye also have seen me, and believe not.

Observe here, 1. How the carnal Jews, hearing of the bread which Christ had commended so highly, and conceiving of it carnally, desire that they may partake of it constantly; Lord, evermore give us this bread: The commendation of spiritual things may move the affections, and quicken the desires of natural persons; but if their desires be not spiritual and serious, diligent and laborious, constant and abiding, they are no evidence of the truth of grace. Observe, 2. Christ discovers another excellent effect of this bread of life, which he had been recommending; that such as feed of it shall never hunger more; that is, inordinately; after the perishing satisfactions of this world; but shall find an all-sufficient fulness in him, and complete refreshment from him, for the preserving and perpetuating of their spiritual life: He that cometh unto me shall never hunger, &c. Observe, 3. How justly Christ upbraids the Jews for their obstinate infidelity; Ye have seen me, says our Saviour, yet ye believe not. Ye have seen me in the flesh, you have heard my doctrine, you have seen my miracles: I have done amongst you those works which never any man did, to convince you that I am the Messiah, yet ye will not own me to be such, nor believe on me; Oh the strength of infidelity and unbelief! The devil has as great an advantage upon men by making them strong in unbelief, as God hath by making his people strong in faith.

37 All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.

Our blessed Saviour having lamented the obstinate infidelity of the Jews in the foregoing verse, who, though they had seen him, would not believe on him; he doth in this verse comfort himself with the assured expectation, that there would be a number, which should certainly and infallibly come unto him; All that the Father hath given me, shall come unto me, &c. Here observe, 1. An account of the persons that shall come to Christ; All that the Father hath given him. There is a double gift of us to Christ. 1. In God's eternal purpose and counsels. 2. In our effectual vocation and calling, when our hearts are by the Holy Spirit of God persuaded and enabled to accept of Christ, as he is freely tendered to us in the gospel. Observe, 2. The gracious entertainment which Christ gives to those that come unto him; He will in no wise cast them out; where the positive is included in the negative; I will not cast them out; that is, I will kindly receive and graciously entertain them. Learn hence, 1. That both God the Father, and Christ his Son, are unfeignedly willing, and cordially desirous of the salvation of lost sinners. The federal transaction which was betwixt the Father and the Son from everlasting, above the salvation of lost sinners, evidently declares this. Learn, 2. That the merciful and compassionate Jesus will in no wise cast out or reject, but kindly entertain and receive, every penitent sinner that doth believably apply unto him for pardon of sin and eternal life; I will in no wise cast out; that is, I will not cast them out of my pity and compassion, out of my love and affection, out of my prayer and intercession, out of my care and protection;—I will not cast them out of my covenant; I will never cast them out of my kingdom; for my nature inclines me, my promise binds me, and my office, as Mediator, engages me, to the contrary.

38 For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.

39 And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day, 40 And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day.

In these words, our Saviour gives us the confirmation of the foregoing promise, that he will in no wise cast out those that come unto him, by assuring us, that it was the great end for which he came into the world. His Father sent him to do his will, and not his own: that is, not to do his own will without his Father's, but to do his own will and his Father's. For Christ, as God, had a co-ordinate will with his Father's, and, as man, a will subordinate to the will of his Father. Now it is the will of both Father and Son, that such as believe in him should be preserved from perishing, and be raised up by Christ at the last day. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ stands not only inclined by his own mercy and goodness to save repenting and believing sinners, but doth also stand obliged thereunto by virtue of a trust, committed to him from the Father. Therefore Christ mentions the will of him that sent him, as a reason of his fidelity in this matter. Learn, 2. That the Father's will and good pleasure is the original source, the fountain and first spring, from whence the salvation of believers doth proceed and flow. It is the Father's will that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life. Learn 3. That such as are given to Christ by the Father, and put as his trust into his keeping, he looks upon them as his charge, and stands engaged for the preservation of them. This is my Father's will, that of all which he hath given me, I shall lose nothing. Yet hath the Father so committed the care of believers to his Son, as that he keeps them still in his own hand. John x. 28, 29. My Father which gave them to me, is greater than all, and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. Learn, 4. From those words, I will raise him up at the last day, that the Lord Jesus Christ is truly, essentially, and really God. That person who can by his own almighty power raise the dead, must certainly be God. And this power Christ had. He raised others from the dead, and his own dead body from the grave also, by his own power; and therefore Christ says, I am the resurrection and the life; and I will raise him up at the last day. Doubtless he that spake these words, and made these promises, knew his own power to perform them; and that power must be omnipotent, and that act of omnipotence doth prove him to be God. It is true the disciples raised the dead, who yet were no God's, but with this difference, they raised the dead by Christ's power; but Christ raised others and himself also by his own power.

41 The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

42 And they said, Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?

43 Jesus therefore answered, and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves.

Although Christ had, in the foregoing verses, plainly asserted himself to be the true bread that came down from heaven, for the benefit of the world; yet the Jews understanding his words carnally, are offended with him, for pretending to come down from heaven, when they knew him to be the Son of Joseph and Mary. They understood nothing of his divine nature, nor of his miraculous conception by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost, and therefore were highly offended at him. Thence learn, that ignorance of Christ's divine nature was the ground and occasion of that contempt which was cast upon his person. Observe farther, the proof which Christ gave of his divine nature, in his knowing the hearts and thoughts of these murmuring Jews; Jesus said, murmur not among yourselves. Christ knows and observes the most secret murmurings and repinings that are found in the breasts of the children of men: and this his knowledge is an evidence and proof of his divinity that he is truly and really God.

44 No man can come to me, except the Father, which hath sent me, draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day.

In which words we have something necessarily implied, and something positively expressed. The misery of man in his natural and unsanctified state is here implied; he is far distant from Christ, and unable of himself to come unto him. By nature we are strangers, yea, enemies, unto God; enemies to the holiness of his nature, and to the righteousness of his laws; and as the state of unregeneracy is a state of enmity, consequently must it be a state of impotency: Without me, therefore says Christ, ye can do nothing; John xv. 5. that is, without interest in me, and influence of grace derived from me. Again, the truths we have expressed are these: 1. That all those who come unto Christ are drawn unto him. 2. That the drawing of sinful souls unto Jesus Christ is the special and peculiar work of God. This drawing is a powerful act, but not a compulsory act; God doth not draw any against their wills to Christ, but he inclines the wills of sinners to come unto him. He draws by effectual persuasion, and not by violent compulsion. 3. That all those who are drawn to Christ here, shall be raised up gloriously by him hereafter: I will raise him up at the last day. Such as are brought to Christ by the Father, Christ shall never abandon them till he has raised them up at the last day, and presented them blameless and completed before his Father, where they shall ever be with the Lord.

45 It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man, therefore, that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.

46 Not that any man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father.

47 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.

In these words our blessed Saviour confirms his former assertion, concerning his Father's drawing, from the prophecies of the Old Testament, which speaking of the days of the Messiah, foretold, that persons should be taught of God to embrace the Messiah; whence Christ inferreth, that every one who is thus taught, shall come unto him, and believe in him. Learn hence, 1. That the teachings of God are absolutely necessary to every man that cometh unto Christ in the way of faith. 2. That such shall not miscarry in the way of faith, who are under the special teachings and instructions of God; They shall all be taught of God, and he teacheth to profit, and that not only authoritatively, but efficaciously and effectually. Those whom God undertakes to teach, receive from him both an ear to hear, and a heart to understand. They shall all be taught of God, and they that are taught have heard and learned of the Father.

48 I am that bread of life,

49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.

50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.

51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: If any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.

In these verses, our blessed Saviour resumes his former doctrine, namely, that he is the object of saving faith, and the bread of life, which he compares with the manna, the bread of Israel. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, which manna was an illustrious type of Christ. Thus both came down from heaven; both were freely given of God without any merit or desert of men: both in a miraculous manner; both at first unknown what they were, and whence they came; both equally belonging to all; both sufficient for all, poor and rich. The manna, white in color, so clear is our Lord's innocence; pleasant like honey, so sweet are his benefits; beaten and broken before eaten, Christ on his cross, bleeding and dying; given only in the wilderness, and ceasing as soon as they came into the land of promise, as sacraments shall vanish, when we enjoy the substance in heaven. But though manna was thus excellent, yet the eaters of it were dead: but such as feed upon Christ, the bread of life, shall live eternally in bliss and glory. I am the living bread which came down from heaven, if any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever. Here we learn, 1. What a miserable creature man naturally is, in a pining and starved condition, under the want of soul food. 2. That Jesus Christ is the food of souls, which quickens them that are dead, and is unto the needy soul all that it can need; such spiritual food as will prove a remedy and preservative against death, both spiritual and eternal. I am the living bread.

52 The Jews, therefore, strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat?

53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.

54 Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day.

55 For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

56 He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

57 As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so, he that eateth me, even he shall live by me.

58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever.

59 These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

Observe here, How the Jews, understanding Christ after a carnal manner, were offended at what he had said: for they thought it was inhuman to eat man's flesh, and could not understand how the body of Christ could in such a sense be food to all the world. Hence note, That carnal persons put a carnal sense upon Christ's spiritual words, and so occasion their own stumbling. But yet, notwithstanding the Jews stumbling at our Saviour's expression, he doth not alter his words, but presseth more and more the necessity of feeding upon him by faith, in order to eternal life; "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Learn from hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ is the true spiritual food of all believers. 2. That those, and only those, who do by faith feed upon him, shall obtain a life of grace and glory from him; if we do not by faith feed upon him, we can have no evidence for a life of grace, no title to a life of glory. This place some papists produce to countenance the doctrine of transubstantiation, a bodily eating and drinking of Christ's flesh and blood in the sacrament. But it is evident that Christ treats not of the sacrament in this chapter, for the sacrament was not now instituted; therefore it is not a sacramental, but a spiritual feeding upon Christ by faith, that is here meant. For this eating gives life to the eater; all that eat are saved, and all that do not eat are damned; but this is not true of a sacramental eating; besides, this eating which Christ speaks of, he makes absolutely necessary to salvation: but some are saved that never fed upon Christ in the sacrament, as John the Baptist, and the thief on the cross. Lastly, If it be understood of the sacramental eating and drinking, woe be to the church of Rome, for denying the cup to the laity; because drinking of Christ's blood is here made as necessary, as eating of his flesh, in order to eternal life. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Observe, farther, The close and intimate union which is betwixt Christ himself and those that feed upon him: "He that eateth me, dwelleth within me, and I in him." As meat is turned into the eater's substance, so believers and Christ become one; and by feeding on him, that is, by believing in him, there followeth a mutual inhabitation; Christ dwelling in them, and they in him: this is true of a spiritual feeding upon Christ, but not of a sacramental eating. Nay, Christ carries it higher still, and tells us, that as there is a real union between the Father and him, and as the father lives who sent him, having an eternal fountain of life in himself: and the Son lives by the Father, having the same life communicated to him with his essence from the Father: in like manner, says Christ, he that eateth me, the same shall live by me. All which is certainly true of our spiritual feeding upon Christ by faith; but cannot be applied to a corporal feeding on him in the sacrament, as the papists would have it.

60 Many, therefore, of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, This is an hard saying, who can hear it?

61 When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this offend you?

62 What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?

The foregoing doctrine of our Saviour, concerning eating his flesh and drinking his blood, sounded so very harshly, that not only the common multitude, but some of them that had been his disciples, that is, who had given up their names to follow him, could not tell how to hear it. Our Saviour reproves their unjust stumbling at what he had said, that he was the bread which came down from heaven, and tells them that his ascension into heaven should prove the truth of his descent from heaven. Hence we learn, That Christ's arising from the grave, and ascending into heaven, by his own power, is an evident proof of his godhead, and that he really came down from heaven in respect of his divine nature, which condescended to be clothed with our flesh. "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?"

63 It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.

To convince the Jews that our Saviour did not mean a carnal and fleshly eating of his body, he tells them, That such an eating would profit nothing; but it is a spiritual eating of him by faith, that bringeth that quickening life of which he had spoken. It is the Spirit or divine nature that quickeneth; the flesh, or human nature, alone, separated from his godhead, profiteth nothing, and can give no life. Learn hence, That it is the godhead of Christ, united to the human nature, which adds all virtue, efficacy, and merit, to the obedience and suffering of the human nature. It is the Spirit, or divine nature of Christ, that quickeneth; the flesh, or human nature alone, profiteth nothing; and therefore the carnal eating of his flesh would do no good.

64 But there are some of you that believe not. For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray him.

65 And he said, Therefore said I unto you, That no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.

66 ¶ From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

Our blessed Saviour having thus cleared his doctrine, that he was the bread of life which came down from heaven, and that he is not to be carnally, but spiritually, fed upon: he plainly tells the Jews, That the true cause of their stumbling at his doctrine was their ignorance and unbelief; There are some of you that believe not. Upon which plain dealing of our blessed Saviour's, many unsound professors did wholly forsake him, and accompanied no longer with him. Learn hence, That multitudes, who have long professed Christ and his holy religion, may draw back, and fall from their profession, and finally revolt from him. 2. That it is an evil heart of unbelief which causes men to depart from Christ, and to make shipwreck of their profession.

67 Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?

68 Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.

69 And we believe, and are sure, that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God.

70 Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?

71 He spake of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve.

Our Saviour, finding many of his nominal disciples forsaking him, and departing from him, asks his apostles (the twelve) whether they would also go away? intimating that their departure would go nearer to him than the departure of all the rest. The nearer they are from whom they receive unkindnesses, the nearer do these unkindnesses go to our hearts: Will you, the twelve, also go away? Peter, as the mouth, and in the name of the rest, answers, That they knew none besides to whom they could go, and expect that happiness which they did from him. They that go from Christ can never hope to mend themselves, let them go whither they will: therefore it is as irrational as it is sinful to depart from Christ, who hath the words, that is, the promise of eternal life. Observe lastly, St Peter having made this profession for himself and the rest of the twelve, that they would not depart from Jesus, whom they believed to be the true Messiah, the Son of God; Christ intimates to Peter, that his charity was something too large in promising so much for them all; for there was one traitor among them, whose heart was as open to Christ, as his face was to them; he meant it of Judas Iscariot, of whose perfidiousness he gave them warning at this time. Learn hence, That the better any man is in himself, the more charitable is the opinion which he has of others. Charity inclines to believe others good till they discover themselves to be bad. Learn, 2. That Christ doth approve of our charitable judgment of others' sincerity, according to what we hope and believe, though we happen to be mistaken, and our judgment is not according to truth: Christ knew Judas to be an hypocrite at this time, but doth not reprove Peter for having a better opinion of him than he deserved. It is far better to err on the charitable than on the censorious hand; it is less offensive to Christ, and less injurious to ourselves.

CHAPTER VII.

AFTER these things, Jesus walked in Galilee; for he would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him.

Our blessed Saviour, knowing that the rage of the chief priests and pharisees in Judea and at Jerusalem was grown to that height that they were resolved to kill him: to avoid their fury he resolves to continue in Galilee, and would not come into Judea at present, nor go up to Jerusalem into the mouth of his enemies; his hour being not yet come. Learn hence, That so long as it was necessary for Christ to save and preserve himself from danger, he was pleased to use the ordinary means for his own preservation, namely, retirement, and withdrawing himself; Christ, as God, could have rid himself out of the hands of his enemies by a miraculous preservation; but he uses the ordinary means when they would serve their turn. And as he would not decline danger when his hour was come, so he would not run before it was come; but used all prudential means and methods for his own safety and preservation. "He would not come unto Judea, because the Jews sought to kill him."

2 Now the Jews' feast of tabernacles was at hand.

There were three great feasts which the Jews celebrated every year; namely, the feast of the passover, the feast of pentecost, and the feast of tabernacles; this last was observed in the month of September, after they had gathered in the fruits of the earth; whence it was also called the feast of ingathering: at this feast they went out of their houses, and dwelt in booths seven days, in remembrance of their living in tents or booths in the wilderness for forty years together, before they came to Canaan. Now the institution of this feast being to call the Israelites to the remembrance of their former condition in the wilderness, teaches us how prone and ready we are to forget our troubles, and the mercies wherewith our troubles have been sweetened, when once they are past and over. The Jews, when settled in Canaan, going out of their houses yearly, and dwelling in booths, did thereby testify, that present mercies had not made them forget former trials and troubles.

3 His brethren, therefore, said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy disciples may also see works that thou doest.

4 For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly: If thou do these things, show thyself to the world.

5 For neither did his brethren believe in him.

Observe here, 1. The advice which Christ's brethren, that is, his kindred, gave him, to render himself more famous and publicly known to the world: they advise him not to stay any longer in Galilee, an obscure place, but to go into the more noble and populous country of Judea, and work miracles there. But what high presumption was this in creatures to prescribe to Christ, and direct him whether to go, and what to do? Observe, 2. The reason they offer for their advice; For no man that seeketh to be known openly, will do any thing in secret: that is, "If thou wilt be thought to be the Messiah by thy working miracles, do them not in a corner; but go up to Jerusalem with us this next feast, that the great men may take notice of them." Such as hunt after reputation themselves, and are ambitious of vainglory and commendation from men, measure others, even the most holy and religious, by their own inclinations and dispositions: and wonder that others do not follow their measures for gaining reputation and respect. Thus did our Lord's brethren here: but the wonder ceases, if we consider the following words; Neither did his brethren believe in him. It is no new thing for the holiest servants of God to meet with great trials from their graceless friends. Christ met with this before us: his kindred, according to the flesh, not believing in him, were a sore trial and temptation to him. Some martyrs have confessed, that the hardest works they have met withal, have been to withstand the temptations, the tears, and entreaties, of their dearest and nearest relations.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come: but your time is always ready.

7 The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

8 Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast, for my time is not yet full come.

9 When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.

Here we have Christ's answer and refusal returned to his brethren's desire: he tells them, That they might go up to the feast of Jerusalem when they pleased, and as publicly; but it was not fit for him to appear so publicly, because the doctrine which he taught was odious to the pharisees, and the prevailing power at Jerusalem: he therefore resolves to go up privately, that he might not stir up the jealousy of the sabbhedrim; but for them, they were out of danger of the world's hatred; for, being the children of it, the world would love its own; but him it hated because he reproved its sins. Where we may remark, That though our Lord Jesus Christ was most freely willing, and ready, to lay down his life for sinners, when the time was come that God the Father called for it; yet he would not expose his life to hazard and danger unseasonably. Teaching us by his example, as not to decline sufferings when God calls us to them: so not to tempt God by running into them, when we may inoffensively avoid them. Your time is always ready, mine is not yet come 10 ¶ But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, not openly, but as it were in secret.

11 Then the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

12 And there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay, but he deceiveth the people.

13 Howbeit no man spake openly of him, for fear of the Jews.

Observe here, 1. How our blessed Saviour, who came to fulfil the law, goes to Jerusalem at the Jewish feast, according to the command of God; Exod. xxiii. Three times a year shall all thy males appear before me. Christ being made under the law, sheweth a punctual obedience to the law, and fulfilled it in his own person. Observe, 2. The different opinions which the Jews at Jerusalem do express concerning our Saviour; some allowing him the charitable character of being a good man; others traducing him as being a deceiver of the people. Our dear Lord, we see, when here on earth, passed through evil report and good report. Is it any wonder to find the friends of Christ branded with infamy and reproach, when Christ himself passes under the infamous character of a deceiver of the people? Some allowed him to be a good man; but others said, Nay, but he deceiveth the people.

14 ¶ Now, about the midst of the feast, Jesus went up into the temple and taught.

15 And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned;

16 Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

17 If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.

18 He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory; but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.

Observe here, 1. Though Christ went up to Jerusalem privately, lest he should stir up the jealousy of the pharisees against himself unseasonably; yet went he into the temple and taught publicly: his example teaches us thus much, "that although the servants of Christ may for a time, and in some cases, withdraw themselves from apprehended danger; yet, when God calls them to appear openly, they must do it courageously, without shrinking, though the danger be still impending." Jesus went up to Jerusalem, entered the temple, and taught. Observe, 2. So admirable was our holy-Lord's doctrine, that the Jews marvel how he should come to the knowledge of such divine mysteries, considering the meanness of his education. They were struck with admiration, but they wanted faith; whereas the least degree of saving faith is beyond all admiration without it. Observe, 3. Our Lord vindicates his doctrine, telling the Jews, that the doctrine he delivered was not his own; that is, not of his own inventing and devising; it was no contrivance of his, nor was it taught him by men: but received immediately from the Father, whose ambassador and great prophet he was. Again, when Christ says, My doctrine is not mine, that is, not only mine, but my Father's and mine. For as he was God equal with the Father, so he naturally knew all his counsels; and as man, had knowledge thereof by communication from his godhead. Learn hence, That the doctrine of the gospel is a doctrine wholly from God; he contrived it, and sent his own Son into the world to publish and reveal it. Christ was sent, and his doctrine was not his own, but his that sent him. Observe, 4. A double rule was given by our Saviour, whereby the Jews might know, whether the doctrine he preached were the doctrine of God. First, If a man walk uprightly, and doth the will of God in the best manner according to his knowledge; If any man will do his will, he shall know of my doctrine whether it be of God. There is no such way to find out truth, as by doing the will of God. The second rule by which they might know that his doctrine was from God, was this, because he sought his Father's glory, and not his own, in the delivery of it. He that seeketh his glory that sent him, that same is true. Hence learn, That the nature and scope of that doctrine which Christ delivered, eminently tending not to promote his own private glory, but the glorifying of his Father, is an undoubted proof and evidence that is doctrine was of God.

19 Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me?

20 The people answered and said, Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?

21 Jesus answered, and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

22 Moses, therefore, gave unto you circumcision (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers) and ye on the sabbath-day circumcise a man.

23 If a man on the sabbath-day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken, are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the sabbath-day.

Observe here, 1. That our Lord's having vindicated his doctrine in the former verses, comes now to vindicate his practice in healing the impotent man on the sabbath-day, for which the Jews sought his life, as a violation of the fourth commandment given by Moses. Our Saviour tells them, that notwithstanding their pretended zeal for the law of Moses, they more notoriously broke the sixth commandment, by going about to kill him, an innocent person, than he had broken the fourth commandment, by making a man whole on the sabbath-day. Hence learn, That it is damnable hypocrisy, when men pretend great zeal against the sins of others, and do allow and tolerate worse in themselves. This is for their practice to give their profession the lie: the Jews condemn our Saviour for a supposed breach of the fourth commandment; whilst they are guilty themselves of a read breach of the sixth commandment. Observe, 2. The ignominy and reproach which the Jews fix upon our blessed Saviour, in the height of their rage and fury against him. Thou hast a devil. The king of saints in heaven, as well as the whole host of saints on earth, hath been frequently smitten and deeply wounded with reproach. Christ was reproached for our sake, and when we are reproached for his sake, he takes our reproach as his own. Moses' reproach was the reproach of Christ, Heb. xi. 26. And he esteemed it a treasure, which did more enrich him with its worth, than press him with its weight. Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. Observe, 3. The wonderful meekness of Christ, in passing over this reproach and calumny, without one word of reply. Guilt is commonly clamorous and impatient, but innocence is silent and regardless of misreports. Our Saviour is not at the pains of a word to vindicate himself from their impotent censure, but goes on with his discourse, and justifies his own action, in healing a man on the sabbath-day, from the Jews' own practice in circumcising their children on that day, if it happen to be on the eighth day: and the argument runs thus: "If circumcision may be administered to a child on the sabbath-day, which is a servile kind of work, and bodily exercise, without blame or censure, why must I fall under censure for healing a man on the sabbath-day, thoroughly and perfectly, only by a word speaking?" Hence learn, That the law of doing good, and relieving the miserable at all times, is a more ancient and excellent law, than either that of the sabbath rest, or of circumcision upon the eighth day. A ritual law must, and ought to give place to the law of nature, which is written in every man's heart. As if our Lord had said, "If you may wound a man by circumcision on the sabbath-day, may not I heal one? If you may heal on that day one member of the circumcised, may not I make a man whole every whit. If you be at pains to cure such a one with your hand, may not I without pains cure a man with the word of my mouth?"

24 Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

From the foregoing argument, Christ draws an inference, or conclusion, That there is no making a judgment according to the first appearance of things: and that suddenness or rashness, prejudice or partiality, in judging, overthrows righteous judgment. This is the general application of what Christ had said before: and the particular application of it as to himself comes to this, Judge not according to appearance, but judge righteous judgment: as if Christ had said, "Lay aside your prejudices against my person, and compare these cases attentively and impartially with one another; and then see whether you can justly condemn me as a sabbath-breaker, and acquit yourselves." Such was the perfect innocency of our Saviour's actions, that he could, and did submit them to the reason and judgment of his very enemies.

25 Then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this he whom they seek to kill?

26 But lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him: do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?

27 Howbeit we know this man whence he is: but when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

28 Then cried Jesus in the temple, as he taught, saying, Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of myself, but he that sent me is true, whom ye know not.

(No. 25.)

29 But I know him, for I am from him and he hath sent me.

30 Then they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come.

31 And many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?

Our blessed Saviour having vindicated both his doctrine and practice, and appeared publicly in the temple, and speaking boldly there, the people of Jerusalem, knowing the hatred and enmity of the chief priests and rulers against him, do wonder that they did not apprehend him. Learn, Almighty God doth and can preserve his own, in the faithful discharge of their duty in such an admirable manner, that even their enemies themselves may wonder at it, and be astonished with it. Observe, 2. The argument which the Jews urged against our Saviour's being Christ, and the promised Messiah, that they knew whence he was, whereas when the Messiah cometh, no man shall know whence he is: now herein they assert a manifest untruth: for though Christ, in respect of his godhead, was prefigured by Melchisedec, who was without father or mother, without descent (that is, without; any that the scripture mentions) yet, in respect of his human nature, the Jews might know whence he was; for the scripture plainly pointed out the tribe, the family, the lineage, and the place of his birth. Observe, 3. That Christ being grieved at this impudent evil, doth reply unto it with much boldness and zeal; he cried, saying, ye both know me, and whence I am; but the Father that sent me, ye know not: "You know me as a man where I was born, and of what family I am, but you know not my divine nature, nor the Father from whom I am by eternal generation, and who hath sent me into the world." Observe, 4. What causeless rage appeared in these men against Christ, for declaring the truth unto them; they would have taken him by violence, had not the power and providence of God restrained them for the present, because his time to suffer was not yet come. Hence learn, That violence and persecution against the faithful dispensers of the truths of God, have been the lot and portion of such in all ages and generations: Christ experienced it; let his ministers expect it. Observe, 5. That although the rulers at Jerusalem were angry and enraged, yet the meaner and inferior sort of people believed on him, being convinced by the wonderful miracles which he had wrought amongst them, that he was the true and promised Messiah. For say they, whenever the Messiah comes he cannot do greater or more evident miracles than this man hath done. Learn hence, That although the grace of God be not ensured to, or entailed upon any sort of people; yet ordinarily, it is the meaner sort of people with whom it prevails most. Many of the common people at Jerusalem were believing, when the rulers there were persecuting: men that live in pleasure and at ease, see no need of dependance upon God, have little inclination or desire to further the gospel, and encourage either the dispensers or professors of it; nay, it is well if they do not turn persecutors.

32 ¶ The pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning him; and the pharisees and chief priests sent officers to take him.

33 Then said Jesus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me.

34 Ye shall seek me and shall not find me: and where I am thither ye cannot come.

35 Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will he go that we shall not find him? will he go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles and teach the Gentiles?

36 What manner of saying is this that he said, Ye shall seek me and shall not find me: and where I am thither ye cannot come?

Observe here, 1. How enraged the pharisees were, when they heard that so many of the common people were brought to believe in Christ, and to cleave unto Christ, insomuch that they sent public officers armed with authority, to apprehend our blessed Saviour; The pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take him. Learn thence, That nothing more enrages the enemies of religion, and draws trouble on the preachers and professors of it, than the success which the gospel at any time meets with. Observe, 2. Our Saviour tells them, that as they desired to be rid of him, so ere long they should have their desire: he would leave them, and go to his Father, and in his absence they would wish for his bodily presence again, but should not have it. Learn, The despisers of Christ have little cause to be weary of him, and to seek to put him away by violence and persecution; for their obstinate contempt of him will cause him to depart from them, and finally to forsake them. Observe, 3. How the Jews, not understanding our Saviour's words aright, reasoned among themselves, whether, by leaving of them, he meant to go into some pagan country, and teach the Gentiles the mysteries of the Jewish religion, which above all things they could not endure to hear. Learn hence, That it is the ordinary sin of a people privileged with the means of grace, not to be sensible of the hazard or danger of Christ's leaving and forsaking them; till at last he forsakes them finally, and casts them off, to their inevitable and unutterable condemnation. Thus did our Lord deal with the Jews here; I go my way, and whither I go ye cannot come.

37 In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink.

The feast of tabernacles (which is the first here meant) lasted eight days; the first and last of which were to be kept holy with religious assemblies and sacrifices: and it was a custom among the Jews, upon that solemn day, to offer up a pot of water unto God, which they drew out of the fountain of Siloam; with reference to this custom, Christ here cries with a loud voice, inviting the people to fetch and draw from him, as from a living fountain, all the sanctifying gifts and saving graces of the Holy Spirit. Learn hence, That Jesus Christ is the original and fountain of all saving grace, whom, if we thirst after, repair to, and by faith depend upon, as a Mediator, we shall certainly receive what influences of grace soever we want and stand in need of.

38 He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.

Here again Christ alludes to a Jewish custom: the Jews were wont at fountains to build great vessels of stone, and in the midst or belly of them to have pipes, through which the water passes. "Now," says Christ, "Thus shall it be with every one that believeth on me; he shall be abundantly filled with the spirit of God, in all the sanctifying and saving graces of it." Christ and his Holy Spirit are a living fountain, whose waters never fail: they are not a water-brook, but a spring of waters: we shall never miss of the waters of life, if we seek unto and wait upon Christ for them. For if we believe on him, out of our belly shall flow rivers of living waters sufficient for ourselves, and wherewith to refresh others.

39 (But this spake he of the spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)

These words are the Evangelist St. John's commentary upon the foregoing promise; he tells us, that Christ spoke this of the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, which did accompany the descent of the Holy Ghost at the feast of Pentecost. For the Holy Ghost was not yet given: that is, not so plentifully given; because Jesus was not yet glorified. Learn hence, That although the Spirit was in some measure given by God from the beginning to good men, yet the more plentiful effusion of it was deferred, till the ascension and glorification of Jesus Christ.

40 Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the prophet, 41 Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?

42 Hath not the scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?

43 So there was a division among the people because of him.

44 And some of them would have taken him: but no man laid hands on him.

In these verses an account is given of the various effects which our Lord's foregoing sermon had upon his hearers' hearts: some were so affected with it, that they believed him to be the great prophet promised to Israel, Deut. xviii. 18. Others apprehended him to be the Christ; others contradicted both, supposing him to be born not at Bethlehem, but in Galilee. And upon this diversity of opinions there arose a division amongst them: and some had a mind to have apprehended him, but, by an overruling providence, they were restrained from the doing of it at present. Learn hence, that diversity of opinions in matters of religion, even concerning Christ himself, have been even from the beginning. Some accounted him a prophet, others the Messiah; some thought him neither; but a grand impostor and deceiver. Our dear Lord, when here on earth, passed through evil report and good report; let his followers expect and prepare for the same; for innocence itself cannot protect from slander and false accusation.

45 ¶ Then came the officers to the chief priests and pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers answered, Never man spake like this man.

47 Then answered them the pharisees, Are ye also deceived?

48 Have any of the rulers, or of the pharisees, believed on him?

49 But this people, who knoweth not the law, are cursed.

Observe here, 1. How God restrained the rage and malice of Christ's enemies, till his hour was come: the officers of the chief priests, who were sent forth with a commission to apprehend him, returned without him: but with this honorable mention of him in their mouths, Never man spake like this man. Such is the power of Christ's doctrine, that even those that come unto it with prejudice and with a persecuting purpose, may be surprised by it, and though not converted, yet bridled and restrained: the preaching of the gospel doth sometimes restrain the violence of the hand, when it works no change in or upon the heart. Thus it was with these poor officers. Observe, 2. That the pharisees being more enraged at the reason which the officers gave for neglecting their office, than for the neglect itself, upbraided them, that they should suffer themselves to be so deceived, whereas none of the grandes, or learned rabbies, had owned him: only an accursed crew of ignorant people followed him, and doated on him. Here note, That when Christ came into the world, the great ones of the world not only refused to believe on him, but boasted of their unbelief, as an argument of their wisdom. Have any of the rulers believed on him? Oh no, they were too wise to believe! Faith is left to fools, and accounted folly by those wise men. Nay, farther, they count the common people cursed, who did believe on Christ. Oh prodigious stupidity! to account them accursed who receive Jesus Christ, the chiefest blessing: great men have not always the wisdom of a man, but more seldom have they the wisdom of a real christian. Great in honor, and wise in understanding, are a sweet couple, but seldom seen together.

50 Nicodemus saith unto them, (he that came to Jesus by night, being one of them).

51 Doth our law judge any man before it hear him, and knoweth what he doeth?

52 They answered and said unto him, Art thou also of Galilee? Search, and look: for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

53 And every man went unto his own house.

Here observe, 1. How God stirs up Nicodemus, though he durst not openly own Christ, yet to plead for him, that he might not be condemned before heard; this was a common rule of justice, and nothing but what might have been said on behalf of the greatest malefactor; he could not well have said less; but God so ordered it, that it was enough to divert the storm from falling upon Christ at this time. One word shall be sufficient to blow over a persecution, when God will have it so. Observe, 2. They answer Nicodemus with a taunt, a mock, and a scorn, that no prophet ever did rise out of Galilee, nor ever should. Therefore Christ arising out of Galilee, as they thought, could be no prophet. Observe lastly, That though they were more and more enraged, yet they disperse without concluding any thing against Christ, for that time every one went to his own home. There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord.

CHAPTER VIII.

JESUS went unto the mount of Olives.

2 And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he sat down and taught them.

The foregoing chapter gave us an account of a most excellent sermon, which our Saviour preached in the temple, at the feast of tabernacles. Now the feast being ended, Jesus did not tarry in the city all night, but went out of it two miles, as he frequently used to do, to the mount of Olives. Although it was so dangerous for him to be seen any more in Jerusalem, yet early the next morning he returns again to the city, enters the temple, and falls upon his work of preaching without fear, and with indefatigable diligence. O what a busy, useful life was this of our Saviour's! He spent the day in preaching in the temple, the night in privacy ad prayer on the mount of Olives; and the next morning he returns to his work of preaching again. Thus was he always holily and painfully employed. To glorify his Father, and to be useful and beneficial to mankind, was his food by day, and his rest by night. Lord, how little do we resemble thee, if, when thy life was all pain and labor, ours be all pastime, pleasure, and recreation.

3 And the scribes and pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst,

4 They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act,

5 Now, Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

6 This they said tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

7 So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

8 And again he stooped down and wrote on the ground.

9 And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last; and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.

10 When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more.

Our Saviour early in the morning entering upon the work of preaching: Observe, 1. What a mixed auditory he had, of scribes and pharisees, and common people. All sorts of persons came to hear him, but not all with the same intentions; the common people came to learn, but the scribes and pharisees came to cavil and carp; the latter came to tempt and ensnare him, the former to be taught and instructed by him. It is not our bare attendance upon ordinances, but the purity of our aim, and the sincerity of our intentions, in waiting upon God in them, that is, an evidence of our sincerity. Observe, 2. How the hypocrisy of these pharisees was gilded over with an appearance of sanctity, as if they were great lovers of chastity, and haters of uncleanness: they bring to Christ a woman taken in adultery, to be censured by him. One that had not known these pharisees, would have concluded them very holy and honest, very conscionable and conscientious persons; but Christ, who saw into their bosoms, soon found that all this was done only to tempt him. Thus a smooth tongue and false heart often accompany one another; when we see a glittering appearance, we have a reason to suspect the inside. Observe, 3. The punishment which the pharisees sought to have inflicted on this adulteress: it is death, let her be stoned; sometimes the punishment of adultery was burning, sometimes stoning, always death: Lord! how ought christians to blush, who have slight thoughts of the sin of adultery, which both Jews and pagans held ever deadly? Observe, 4. Their ensnaring question, Moses commanded that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou? The pharisees desire no better advantage against Christ, than a contradiction to Moses, their lawgiver: it has been an old stratagem to set Moses and Christ at variance, but they are fast friends; they are subordinate one to another, not opposed one against another. Moses brings us to Christ, and Christ to glory; fain would these colloquing adversaries draw Christ to contradict Moses, that they might take advantage of the contradiction to condemn Christ. Observe, 5. The wisdom and caution of our Lord's answer; he doth not excuse her crime; but bids her accusers look at home, and examine their own consciences, whether they were not guilty of the like, or as great a sin: he doth not say, "Let her be stoned;" this had been against the course of his mercy; he doth not say, "Let her not be stoned;" this had been against the law of Moses; but he so answers, that both his justice and mercy are entire; she dismissed, and they ashamed. It is a false zeal that is eagle-eyed abroad, and blind at home: such as are most wicked themselves, are oftentimes the most ready and skilful to spy out the faults and failings of others: we stand too near ourselves to discern our own miscarriages. The eye that sees every thing, sees not itself. Observe, 6. Though Christ abhorred the sin, yet he does not condemn the sinner, "Hath no man condemned thee; neither do I condemn thee:" says Christ. This Christ said, not to excuse the woman, or to connive at her offence, but to show that he declined the office of a civil judge, which was to pass sentence on criminals. He therefore doth not say, No man ought to condemn thee, but Hath no man condemned thee? Christ doth not execute the office of a magistrate in judging her to death; but of a minister, in calling her to repentance and reformation; how ought every one of us to keep within the bounds of our calling, when our Saviour himself will not intrench upon the office and functions of others? Observe lastly, Our Saviour's cautionary direction to this adulteress: Go, and sin no more. Where note, Christ doth not say, Go, and commit adultery no more, but, Go, and sin no more. It is not a partial repentance, or a turning away from this or that particular sin, which will denominate us true penitents, or entitle us to the pardoning mercy of God, but leaving of all sin, of what kind soever; therefore, says Christ, Go, and sin no more.

12 ¶ Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life.

13 The pharisees, therefore, said unto him, Thou bearest record of thyself: thy record is not true.

14 Jesus answered, and said unto them, Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.

15 Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man.

16 And yet if I judge, my judgment is true; for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me.

17 It is also written in your law, That the testimony of two men is true.

18 I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me.

19 Then said they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jesus answered; Ye neither known me nor my Father: if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.

20 These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as he taught in the temple: and no man laid hands on him, for his hour was not yet come.

Our blessed Saviour having baffled the design which the pharisees had upon him, and showed a spirit of divine wisdom, in delivering himself from that snare which they had laid for him, he returns to instruct the people in the treasury. And here note, 1. He instructs them in the nature of his office, which was, to enlighten all men with the knowledge of divine truth; so that they should not walk in darkness, either of sin or error, but he led to eternal life. Learn hence, That the great end and errand of Christ's coming into the world, was to give light unto poor souls that sat in darkness. Observe, 2. The exception which the pharisees made against our Saviour's testimony of himself: Thou bearest record of thyself, thy record is not true. Indeed, such is the corrupt nature of man, which is prone to seek itself, and hunt after vain glory, that it may render a person's testimony of himself suspected; but Christ, being true God that cannot lie, and coming out of the bosom of his Father, as his ambassador, his testimony of himself is above all exception, and ought to be credited without farther proof. Observe, 3. How Christ challenges his enemies, the pharisees, for judging carnally of him, and according to the meanness of his outward appearance, whereas he judged no man; that is, first, no man, as they judged according to outward show. Or, secondly, I judge no man; that is, at present. My proper work is not to condemn any, but to teach all; and my present office is that of a prophet, and not of a judge. My coming now is to instruct and save the world; my next coming will be to judge and condemn it. Observe, 4. Christ declares that he is not alone in the testimony given of himself, but that the Father did also testify and bear witness of him; and that according to their own law, the testimony of two was always accounted and esteemed valid. "Now, says Christ, if so much weight be to be laid upon the testimony of two men, how much more forcible should the testimony of the Father, and of him whom the Father hath sent, be to satisfy you, that what I say of myself is true? Learn hence, 1. That the Father and the Son, though one in essence and operation, yet are distinct persons. 2. That these distinct persons did bear joint witness concerning Christ. God the Father testified of him by a voice from heaven; and Christ as God, bare witness of himself as man, and as Mediator. Surely out of the mouth of two such witnesses, the truth of Christ's divine mission is sufficiently established.

21 Then said Jesus again unto them, I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins: Whither I go ye cannot come.

22 Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go ye cannot come.

23 And he said unto them, Ye are from beneath, I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world.

24 I said, therefore, unto you, That ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins.

Observe here, A dreadful threatening denounced by Christ against the obstinate and unbelieving Jews. Ye shall die in your sins; that is, in the guilt of your sins, under the power, and undergoing the punishments of your sins: Lord! what a sad word is this, Ye shall die in your sins; O better is it a thousand times to die in a ditch; for they that die in their sins, shall rise in their sins, and stand before Christ in their sins; such as lie down in sin in the grave, shall have sin lie down with them in hell to all eternity. The sins of believers go to the grave before them; sin dieth, while they live; but the sins of unbelievers go to the grave with them; While they live they are dead in sin; and by sin they fall into death: from which there is no recovery unto life. Observe, 2. The grand sin for which this great punishment is threatened, and that is the sin of unbelief: If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins. Plainly intimating, that of all sin, infidelity or unbelief is the grand damning sin under the gospel. The devil hath as great an advantage upon men, by making them strong in unbelief, as God hath by making his people strong in faith. Unbelief renders a sinner's case desperate and incurable; it doth not only procure damnation, but no damnation like it.

25 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning.

26 I have many things to say and to judge of you: but he that sent me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him.

27 They understood not that he spake to them of the Father.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me I speak these things.

The Jews hearing our Saviour denouncing such a terrible threatening against them, because they believed not on him in the foregoing verses; here they perversely asked him, Who he was? Our Saviour replies, That he was the same that he was from the beginning, even the very Christ; and that they were the very same, they were also the mortal enemies and opposers of the truth. But that the time was hastening, when they should be fully convinced who he was; namely, when they had lifted him up upon his cross, when he was risen again, and ascended into heaven, and brought that destruction upon them, which he had so often threatened. Learn hence, That the sufferings of Christ were clear and convincing demonstrations, both who he was, and what he was. The darkening of the sun, the quaking of the earth, the rending of the rocks, the opening of the graves, were such convincing proofs of his deity, that they could not but say, Verily, this was the Son of God.

29 And he that sent me, is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.

That is, he that sent and commissioned me for the great work of redemption, he is continually with me, both to assist and to accept me, I doing every thing that is agreeable to his holy will and pleasure. Hence learn, 1. That the work of redemption in the hands of Jesus Christ, was a work well-pleasing to God the Father; the work itself was highly pleasing to him, and Christ's way of managing it was well-pleasing also. 2. That the reason why it was thus well-pleasing to God, was, because he acted in a constant conformity to his Father's will, kept to his Father's commission, and executed his Father's commands, doing always those things that pleased him. Learn, 3. That as the Father and Christ was inseparable in respect to the unity of the divine essence; so the Father was always with Christ as Mediator, both to support and uphold him, to accept and reward him. The Father hath not left me alone, either in the doing of his will, or in the suffering of his pleasure. Learn, 4. That those who desire the gracious and special presence of God with them in all conditions, particularly in times of sufferings and trouble; they must make it their care and study to please God, and to observe his will in all things; then God will be with them in his guiding presence, in his strengthening presence, in his comforting, in his quickening, in his sanctifying, sympathizing, and accepting presence.

30 As he spake these words many believed on him.

31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

32 And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

Observe here, 1. The blessed fruit and success of our Saviour's foregoing discourse concerning his person and office. As he spake these words, many believed on him: not by their own natural power and ability, but by Christ's omnipotent and efficacious grace; he that spake to the ear, caused his word to reach the heart; Christ himself, that planted and watered, gave also the increase. Observe, 2. The love and care of Christ mentioned to these new converts; he watereth immediately these plants with wholesome advice and counsel. If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. Where note, It must be Christ's word, the true doctrine of the gospel, and this abided and continued in, which will evidence our discipleship. Observe, 3. A special privilege which shall follow upon abiding in the doctrine of Christ; they shall increase in the knowledge of it, and be made free by it. Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. Where note, 1. That man is naturally in bondage and captivity, by blindness of mind, by hardness of heart, by rebellion of will. 2. That the means appointed by God to set him at liberty from this captivity and bondage are the word of Christ, and the doctrine of the gospel. The truth shall make you free.

33 ¶ They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man; how sayest thou, Ye shall be free?

34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

35 And the servant abideth not in the house for ever; but the Son abideth ever.

36 If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

Observe here, How these carnal Jews understand all that our Saviour said, to bespoken in and after a carnal manner; when he spake to them before, of eating his flesh, and drinking his blood, they understood it grossly of his natural body. When he speaks to them here of a spiritual freedom from sin, they understand it of a civil freedom from servile bondage and subjection; alledging, They were Abraham's seed, and never in bondage to any man: which was a manifest untruth, they have been in bondage, in their ancestors, to the Egyptians and Babylonians; and in their own persons to the Romans. But this was not the bondage that Christ meant; but a spiritual slavery and thralldom under the dominion of sin, and power of satan; for he that committed sin, is the servant of sin; that is, whosoever doth habitually, wilfully, deliberately, and constantly, allow and tolerate himself in a sinful course, he is under the servitude and thralldom of sin. Every sinner is a bond slave; and to live in sin is to live in slavery. And this every man doth till the Son makes him free; then, and not till then, he is freed indeed. Learn hence, That interest in Christ, and continuance in his doctrine, sets the soul at liberty from all that bondage whereunto it was subject in its natural and sinful state. O happy exchange from the devil's slaves, to become Christ's freemen! and also freed from the rigorous exactions and terrible maledictions of the law.

37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed: but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you.

38 I speak that which I have seen with my Father; and ye do that which ye have seen with your father.

39 They answered, and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.

40 But now ye seek to kill me; a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God; this did not Abraham.

The Jews boasting again that they were Abraham's seed, and bearing themselves much upon it; our Saviour tells them, He knew they were so, his natural children according to the flesh; but not his genuine children according to the spirit: this he proves, because they did not tread in Abraham's steps, and do his works; for if either the temper of their minds, or the actions of their lives, were agreeable to Abraham, they would not seek, as they did, to destroy and kill him, only, for bringing the doctrine of salvation to them, which he had heard and learned of the Father. Thence learn, 1. How prone we are to glory in our outward privileges, and to rely upon them. Whereas these are arguments of God's goodness towards us, but no evidence of our goodness towards him. 2. That it is very dangerous and unsafe to pride ourselves in, and depend upon, any external privileges and prerogatives whatsoever: as our being born within the pale of the visible church, our descending from pious parents and holy progenitors; for unless we be followers of their faith, admirers of their piety, and imitate their example, we are none of their children; but belong to another father, as our Saviour tells the Jews in the other verses.

41 Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of fornication; we have one father, even God.

42 Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me; for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me.

43 Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word.

44 Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar, and the father of it.

In the former verses the Jews made their boast that they were the children of Abraham; in these, that they are the children of God. We have one father, even God. This our Saviour disproves, telling them that if God were their father, they would love him, as proceeding from him by eternal generation; and in his office employed by him as Mediator. Also, if God were their father, they would understand him speaking from God; whereas now they were so transported with malice, that they could not endure his doctrine with patience, though it came from God. All which were undeniable proofs, that they were not the children of God. Hence learn, That none can justly pretend any interest in God as his children, but they that love Christ, as being the express image of his Father's person, and do hear and receive his doctrine, as coming from God; this the Jews did not do; therefore, says Christ, they are not the Children of God. Observe farther, Having told them whose children they are not, our Saviour tells them plainly whose children they were. Ye are of your father, the devil. This appears by their being actuated by him, by their resembling and imitating him; their inclinations, dispositions, and actions, being all to fulfil the lusts of the devil. Now, as his servants we are whom we obey; so his children we are, whom we resemble. Learn hence, That men's sinful practices will prove them to be satan's children, let their profession be what it will: if in the temper of their minds, and in the actions of their lives, there be a conformity to satan's disposition, and a ready compliance with his temptations, they are certainly his children, what pretensions soever they make of being the children of God. None could pretend higher to the relation of God's children than the Jews did; yet, says Christ, Ye are the children of the devil, for his works ye do. Note hence, That the devil hath the relation of a father to all wicked men: and this fatherhood doth not proceed from the act of the father, but of the children; for the devil doth not make wicked men his children by begetting them; but they make the devil their father, by imitating of him.

45 And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46 Which of you convinceth me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47 He that is of God heareth God's words: ye, therefore, hear them not, because ye are not of God.

48 Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?

49 Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honor my Father, and ye do dishonor me.

50 And I seek not mine own glory; there is one that seeketh and judgeth.

Here observe, 1. The free reproof which Christ gave the Jews for their obstinate unbelief; because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not. 2. The challenge which he gives the worst of his adversaries; Which of you convinceth me of sin? So perfectly pure, innocent and spotless, was the doctrine and life of Christ, that although his enemies loaded him with slander and false accusation, yet none of them could justly convict of, much less, condemn him for, the least known sin. Observe, 3. The Jews being enraged at this free reproof, fell a railing at his person, charging him with being a Samaritan, possessed with an evil spirit. Our Saviour meekly replies, That he did not deal with the devil; but was honoring his Father in what he did, and said; and therefore his Father would take care of his honor, and judge between him and them. Here note, That though Christ used some sharpness in reproving the Jews and representing them to themselves; yet he answers with wonderful mildness and meekness, when he discovers his resentments of his own reproaches: how cool was Christ in his own cause; but warm enough in God's!

51 Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death.

52 Then said the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou hast a devil. Abraham is dead and the prophets; and thou sayest, If any man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death.

53 Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself?

54 Jesus answered, If I honor myself, my honor is nothing: it is my Father that honoreth me, of whom ye say, That he is your God:

55 Yet ye have not known him; but I know him: and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you: but I know him and keep his saying.

Observe here, 1. The blessed fruit and effect of observing our Saviour's doctrine: he that keeps my sayings shall never see death; that is, shall be secured from eternal misery, and enjoy eternal life. Observe, 2. How the Jews misunderstood our Saviour's words. He that keeps my sayings shall never see death; as if he meant a freedom from temporal death: and hereupon they looked upon him as beside himself, to promise a privilege which neither Abraham nor the prophets did ever enjoy. Whereas it was not exemption from temporal death, but freedom from eternal destruction, which our Saviour promised to them that keep his saying. Hence learn, That the misunderstanding of Christ's doctrine, and taking it in a carnal sense, has given occasion for the many cavils and objections made against it. Observe, 3. How Christ clears himself of all ambition in this matter, and shows that he did not make this promise of delivering his followers from death vain-gloriously, but that God, whom they called their father, had honored him with power, to make good whatever he had promised to them that keep his saying. Learn hence, That has Christ entirely sought his Father's glory, so the Father conferred all honor and glory upon Christ as Mediator; thereby testifying, how infinitely pleased he was with the redemption of mankind performed by him. "If I honor myself, my honor is nothing; it is my Father that honoreth me."

56 Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad.

That is, "Abraham having received a promise, that the Messiah should come of his seed, he exceedingly rejoiced to see the day of my coming in the flesh, though afar off, with the eye of his faith, and in a figure, in his sacrificed son Isaac; and this sight of his faith was so transporting, that he leaped for joy." Learn hence, That a strong faith gives such a clear sight of Christ (though at a distance) as produceth a holy delight and rejoicing in him.

57 Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?

58 Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.

59 Then took they up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself, and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by.

Observe here, 1. What a false and ridiculous construction the Jews make of our Saviour's words, as if he had affirmed that he had seen Abraham, and Abraham him, with bodily eyes: whereas Christ only asserted, that Abraham had seen his day: that is, he foresaw by faith the day of his incarnation, and coming in the flesh. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's positive asserting of his divinity, or that he had a being as God from all eternity: for, says he, Before Abraham was, I am. Where note, That Christ does not say, Before Abraham was, I was: but, Before Abraham was, I am; which is the proper name of God, thereby is signified the eternal duration and permanency of his being. The adversaries of Christ's divinity say, that before Abraham was, Christ was: that is, in God's fore-knowledge or decree: but this may be said of any other person as well as Christ, that he was in the fore-knowledge of God before Abraham was born. Whereas undoubtedly it was Christ's design in these words, to give himself some preference and advantage above Abraham, which this interpretation doth not in the least do. Observe lastly, how the Jews looking upon Christ as a blasphemer, for making himself equal with God, and for asserting his eternal existence, they make a furious attempt upon his life, by taking up stones to cast at him, as the Jews used to deal with blasphemers: but our Saviour delivers himself miraculously from their fury, and escapes untouched. Hence learn, That when arguments fail, the enemies of truth betake themselves to force and violence: They took up stones to cast at him. 2. That as Christ disappointed his own persecutors, so he can and will deliver his own people in their greatest extremity from their persecutors' rage and fury. 2 Pet. ii. 9. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished."

CHAPTER IX.

AND as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

The foregoing chapter acquainted us with a famous encounter which the pharisees had with our blessed Saviour in the temple at Jerusalem; this being ended, as he passed from the temple, he saw a man lying, possibly by the high-way, who was born blind; him Christ pitches upon as an object fit to exercise his divine power, in the cure and healing of. They that are blind by casualty, may perhaps be relieved by art and industry; but to cure one that is born blind, nothing less is required than an almighty power. Learn hence, That diseases and distempers, which are incurable by the ordinary course of nature, are not insuperable to Christ's power, nor impossible for him to help, but a proper object for him to magnify his power upon. Therefore it is here recorded, that this poor man was blind from his birth: such blindness being accounted incurable by natural means.

2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?

Here observe, Something implied or supposed; namely, 1. That all bodily afflictions and calamities do come upon us for sin. Whereas afflictions, although they always fall upon a sinner, yet they are not always sent to punish sin, but by way of purgation and prevention of sin. 2. It is here supposed, that as some afflictions come upon men for personal sins, so others come upon them for parental sins, and that children may and oftentimes do, very justly suffer for their parents' sins. 3. It is here supposed, that there is no other reason of a person's sufferings, but only sin: whereas, though sin be much and often the cause of sufferings, yet we may wrong God and man, yea, and sin too, to conclude it always the cause of suffering. 2. It is implied here, that there is a transmigration of souls from one body to another; the disciples supposed, that this soul, when it was in another body, sinned, and was now punished by being put into a blind body. This Pythagorean error was crept in among the pharisees, and the disciples here seemed to be tainted and infected with it. This may teach us, how far the holiest and wisest of men are from an infallible spirit, and that the best of men may be misled by a common error.

3 Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

Christ's answer must not be understood absolutely, as if he denied this man and his parents to be guilty of sin, for both he and they had sin enough, not only to deserve temporal blindness, but eternal darkness. The meaning is, that in afflicting this man, the Lord did not so much respect his or his parents' sin, as the manifestation of his own glory, in this miraculous cure. Christ doth not deny but that a man's own sin, and the sin of his parents, may be the procuring cause of blindness; but that neither the one nor the other was the cause in that man's case; but that the power and mercy of God might be seen in restoring this man to his sight, therefore was he born blind. Whence note, 1. That though sin be always the deserving, yet it is not always the procuring cause of affliction. 2. That we seldom think of, or hit upon, any other cause of affliction, but only sin; though the design of God looks beyond the sin of man in afflictions, yet man seldom looks beyond that, or thinks of any other design of God in afflicting, but only punishing for sin.

4 I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work.

5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.

Here our Saviour tells his disciples, That he was sent by God into the world, and had a great work assigned him by God, during his abode in it; namely, to instruct, reform, and save mankind; and what our Saviour says of himself, is applicable to every one of us in a lower sense? We are sent into the world to work out our own salvation in the first place, and then to promote the salvation of others as much as in us lies. Note, 1. That every one has a work to do in the world, a great work assigned him by God that sent him into it. 2. That the time allotted for the finishing and dispatching of this great work is a limited time, it is a short time; our working season is a short season; While it is day. 3. That after the working season is past and expired, there will succeed a night of darkness, in which there must be a cessation from work. The night cometh.

6 When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with clay.

7 And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam (which is, by interpretation, Sent.) He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.

Two things concurred towards the cure of this blind man, namely, an act of divine power on Christ's part, and an act of faith and obedience on the man's part. 1. An act of divine power on Christ's part; he tempers clay and spittle together, and anoints the man's eyes therewith, and behold he sees. What an improbable remedy and means was this to human reason! much fitter to put out a seeing man's eyes than to cure a blind man's. Had Christ pulled out his box, and applied some medicinal ointment to his eyes, then the praise had been ascribed to his skill, not to his power; but now it plainly appeared, that all the virtue was in Christ, not in the means. Lord! what great things canst thou do by weak and unlikely means; yea, by opposite and contrary means! but it is the praise of Omnipotency to work by improbabilities. From the contemptibleness of the means or instrument, always redounds the greater honor to the agent. Observe, 2. An act of faith and obedience on the man's part; "He went away and washed his eyes in the pool of Siloam, and returned seeing." Where note, 1. How Christ delights to exercise and try the faith of his people, by their subjection and obedience to difficult commands. 2. That true faith, joined with sincere obedience, never faileth the expectation of them that exercise it: especially in obeying the most hard and difficult commands. Therefore the Evangelist added, that the blind man, after washing, returned seeing.

8 ¶ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him, that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged.

9 Some said, this is he; others said, He is like him; but he said, I am he.

10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

11 He answered and said, A man that is called Jesus, made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight.

12 Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

The blind man, thus miraculously cured, returns with much joy to his neighbours and acquaintance, who confer with him about this matter; they inquire, Whether he was the person cured or not? Who was the person that cured him, and where that person was? He assures them, he was the very person that was blind, but now cured, and he that cured him was Jesus: that the means used was clay and spittle: but where the person was, or what was become of him, he knew not. Learn thence, 1. That the miraculous cures of God work a sensible alteration in men, not only in their own apprehension, but in the judgments of others. This miracle shined forth among the neighbours, who having seen and observed the blind man, admire his healing. Learn, 2. How frankly the blind man acknowledges, and how freely he confesses, that he was the person whom Jesus had healed; I am he. It is an unthankful silence to smother the works of God in affected secrecy; to make God a loser by his bounty towards us, is a shameful injustice. O God! we are not worthy of thy common favors, much less of spiritual blessings, if we do not publish thy mercies on the house-top, and praise thee for them in the great congregation.

13 ¶ They brought to the pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14 And it was the sabbath-day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

15 Then again the pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed and do see.

16 Therefore said some of the pharisees, That man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath-day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And there was a division among them.

Observe here, 1. How the Jews, who should have been full of silent wonder, and inclined to believe in Jesus Christ, so omnipotent an agent, are prejudiced against him, and bring the late blind man before the pharisees, our Saviour's professed enemies. Observe, 2. The time which our Saviour chose for working this cure, it was on the sabbath; many, if not most of Christ's famous miracles, were wrought upon the sabbath-day. Upon that day he cured the withered hand, Mat. xii. Upon that day he cured the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, John v. Upon that day he cured the blind man here. This Christ did probably for two reasons: 1. To confirm his doctrine which he preached on that day, by miracles:

therefore his preaching and working miracles went together.

2. To instruct the Jews (had they been willing to receive instruction) in the true doctrine, and proper duties of their sabbath; and to let them know, that works of necessity and mercy are very consistent with the due sanctification of the sabbath. It is hard to find out any time wherein charity is unseasonable: for as it is the best of graces, so the works of it are fittest for the best of days.

17 They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of him, that he has opened thine eyes? He said, He is a prophet.

18 But the Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

19 And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who you say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

20 His parents answered them, and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21 But by what means he now seeth, we know not: or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age, ask him: he shall speak for himself.

22 These words spake his parents, because they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue.

23 Therefore said his parents, he is of age, ask him.

Observe here, 1. How desirous the pharisees were to obscure the glory of this famous miracle which Christ had wrought: in order to which, 1. They re-examine the man, to know what his thoughts were of the person who had done this for him: they judged him to be an impostor and a great sinner: the man declares freely, That he believed him to be a great prophet. Hence we learn, That there may be, and sometimes is, more true knowledge of Jesus Christ in one poor man, than in a general council of learned rabbies. This blind man saw Christ to be a prophet, when the Jewish sanhedrim saw nothing in him but imposture. This man is not of God, says the council: Verily, he is a prophet, says the blind man. 2. They next examine his parents (being unwilling to believe the man himself) Whether he was their son, or not? If so, whether he were born blind? And if born blind, by what means he now sees? Lord! what obstinate and wilful blindness was found in these pharisees! How do they close their eyes and say, We will not see; What endeavours are here used to smother a miracle, which undeniably proved Christ to be the expected Messiah! They examine first the man, then his parents, then the man again; hoping, that being over-awed with fear, they would either deny, or at least conceal, the truth; but the more they strove to darken and obscure the truth, the more conspicuous and evident they made it, Great is truth, and will prevail, how many soever oppose it, and set themselves against it. Observe next, The wisdom and cautiousness of his parents' answer: they expressly own, the blind man was their son; that he was born blind; but for the way of his cure they wave that, possibly because they did not see this cure wrought; and fearing the sentence of excommunication, a decree being passed among the rulers, "That whoso confesseth Christ, shall be put out of the synagogue." Hence learn, 1. That excommunication or separation from the society of the people of God, is an ancient and honorable ordinance in the church of God, and as such to be revered and esteemed. 2. That this ordinance of God has been, and may be, abused by wicked men, and the edge of it turned against Christ himself, and his sincerest members. 3. That the fear of unjust excommunication must not discourage persons from confessing the truth, when called to it. The parents of the blind man durst not confess Christ, "for fear that they should be put out of the synagogue."

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, give God the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.

25 He answered and said, whether he be a sinner, or no, I know not; one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see.

26 Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

27 He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear: wherefore would you hear it again? will ye also be his disciples?

28 Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple: but we are Moses' disciples.

29 We know that God spake unto Moses; as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

Here we have an account of the pharisees farther practising upon this blind man, to rob Christ of the glory of this miracle; first, they insinuate with him, and then they frown upon him. First, they insinuate with him, saying, give God the praise. As if they had said, "Ascribe the cure to God, not to this man," whom they conclude to be a sinner, because he broke (as they thought) the sabbath. It is no new thing to see men pretend to aim at the glory of God, when at the same time they are maliciously opposing Christ and persecuting his members. Next, they attempted to frown this poor man into a denial of this miracle wrought upon him, or to persuade the people that it was a cheat: but it is wonderful to observe, how the boldness and confidence of this poor man increased, God giving him that wisdom and courage which all his adversaries were not able to resist or gainsay. Therefore the pharisees being angry at this boldness of the man, they revile him for being so silly, as to become a disciple to Christ, whose office and authority they knew not: whereas they were the disciples of Moses, whom they knew God spake unto. Learn hence, That such as are led by malice, and prepossessed with prejudice against Christ, will not only think basely of his person, but refuse to see the clearest evidence of his authority and commission. As for this fellow, say the malicious pharisees, we know not whence he is, or who gave him this commission.

30 The man answered and said unto them, Why, herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes.

31 Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth.

32 Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33 If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

In these verses the blind man proceeds to vindicate our blessed Saviour, who had cured him of his blindness, from the exceptions of the pharisees, and endeavours, by solid arguments, to convince them, that his cure (being born blind) was truly miraculous; and consequently proved Christ to be of God.

1. The man admires that Christ having wrought such a miracle upon him, they should be ignorant of his authority; "This is marvellous, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes." He lays down a general proposition, that no deceiver or false teacher is heard of God, or enabled by him to work such miracles as these, but only such faithful servants as do his will, as thus extraordinarily assisted by him. We know that God heareth not sinners; that is, such as love and delight in sin, such as are in a state of sin, and go on in a course of sin, God will not hear such, or answer the prayers of such. Indeed God sometimes hears a sinner's prayer in wrath, and refuses to hear a saint's prayer in mercy: but he never denies a saint's prayer in wrath, or hears a sinner's prayer in mercy. The proposition laid down is an eternal truth; God heareth not sinners; that is, so long as they purpose to continue sinners, and go on in a course of sin, and remain bold and presumptuous sinners. Learn thence, That none that live in a course of sin, can reasonably expect that God should hear them, and give an answer of prayer to them. "God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth:" that is, if a man feareth God, and worketh righteousness, him the Lord accepteth, heareth, and answereth. Learn hence, 1. That such as would be heard of him, and accepted with him, must be devout worshippers of him. 2. That it is not enough to prove men religious and acceptable with God, that they are devout worshippers of him, unless they walk in obedience to him, and do his will. If any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth. Observe, 3. How the blind man goes on to prove, that Christ had a special authority from God, and an extraordinary presence of God with him in what he did, because he had done such a work as was never done by Moses, or by any of the prophets, or by any person whatsoever, since the creation of the world. From whence he wisely and well infers, that Christ was a person authorized by and sent of God. Learn hence, 1. That Christ having done that which was never done before (namely, to give sight to one that was born blind) was an evidence of his omnipotency. 2. That this set of omnipotency proved him to be God. Whatever miracles the prophets wrought, they wrought them by Christ's power, but Christ wrought this and all other miracles by his own power. Observe lastly, How this blind man, though unlearned, judges more rightly of divine things, than the whole learned council of the sanhedrim. Whence we learn, That we are not always to be led by the authority of councils, popes, or bishops; and that it is not absurd for laymen sometimes to vary from their opinions, these overseers being sometimes guilty of great oversights.—Dr. Whitby.

34 They answered and said unto him, Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us? And they cast him out.

35 Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?

36 He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?

37 And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.

38 And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

Observe here, 1. A special instance of pharisaical pride; they account this poor man a vile person, whom heaven had marked by his native blindness for some extraordinary wickedness. How prone are we to judge them the greatest sinners, whom we observe to be the greatest sufferers! Observe, 2. From reviling they proceed to excommunicating; They cast him out; that is, out of the communion of the Jewish church. O happy man! who having lost a synagogue, hast found heaven! Behold this blind man, and admire him for a resolute confessor, stoutly defending the gracious author of his cure, against the cavils of the pharisees, and maintaining the innocence and honor of so blessed a benefactor. Observe, 3. Our Saviour's regard to this blind man, whom the pharisees had set at nought and excommunicated: He finds him out, reveals himself more fully to him, and directs him to believe in him. Where observe, That the miracle which Christ had wrought upon the blind man, did not convert him, and work faith in him, till Christ revealed himself unto him, and enabled him to discern the truth of what he revealed. Learn hence, That miracles confirm faith, but miracles alone cannot work faith. The blind man had experienced a miracle wrought upon him, yet remains an unbeliever, till Christ said, I am he. Observe, 4. How readily the man receives the Lord Jesus Christ by faith, upon the forementioned revelation of himself unto him: he instantly said, Lord, I believe; and, in testimony thereof worship him; that is, as God incarnate, as God manifested in the flesh. Thence learn, That true knowledge of the Son of God will beget faith in him; and true faith in him will be productive of homage and adoration, of obedience and subjection to him. He that knows Christ aright, will believe, and he that believes, will worship and obey: He said, Lord I believe. And he worshipped him.

39 ¶ And Jesus said, for judgment I am come into this world: that they which see not, might see: and that they which see might be made blind.

In these words our Saviour declares not the intentional design, but the accidental event, of his coming into the world, namely, 1. That those who were blind might receive sight. 2. That those who presume they see, and know more than others, for despising the gospel, and shutting their eyes against the light of it, should be left in darkness, and by the just judgment of God be more and more blinded. Those who shut their eyes wilfully against the clearest light, and say they will not see; it is just with God to close their eyes judiciously, and say they shall not see.

40 And some of the pharisees, which were with him, heard these words, and said unto him, Are we blind also?

41 Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.

Observe here, 1. How the pharisees, who watched all opportunities to ensnare our Saviour, look upon these last words as reflecting upon them; as if Christ did insinuate that they were blind; Are we blind also? They that shut their eyes and will not see the light which Christ offers to them, are the worst of blind ones. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's reply to the pharisees' question, If ye were blind; that is, simply ignorant of your duty, and without the means of knowledge and instruction, you should have no sin: that is, comparatively to what you have: you should not have had so much sin and guilt upon you as now you have, by shutting your eyes against the light. But now you say we see: that is, being puffed up with the knowledge which you have, as if ye were the only men that saw; this proud conceit of yours renders your condition incurable, and your sin remaineth unpardonable. Learn hence, 1. That it is a far greater sin to condemn the known laws of God, than to be ignorant of them: pride is a greater hindrance of knowledge than ignorance, because the proud man thinks he wants no knowledge. 2. That the most exalted knowledge is insufficient to salvation, without a suitable and correspondent practice. The pharisees had the key of knowledge at their girdle, yet our Saviour tells them of double damnation: Lord! how sad it is to know Christ in this world, as that he will be ashamed to know us in another world!

CHAPTER X.

VERILY, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

2 But he that entereth in by the door, is the shepherd of the sheep.

3 To him the porter openeth: and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

4 And, when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice.

5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

6 This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

Our blessed Saviour having in the end of the foregoing chapter upbraided the pharisees for their blindness and ignorance in the mysteries of religion, notwithstanding the high conceit which they had of their own knowledge; he proceeds in this chapter further to convince them, that they were blind leaders of the blind, though they thought and looked upon themselves as the only guides and teachers of the people.—And in order thereunto, he propounds a parable of the true and false shepherd, which represents a good and bad pastor and teacher, and gives us a fourfold mark and character of a good shepherd. Observe, 1. The good shepherd enters in by the door: that is, he has his vocation and mission from Christ; he comes into the church regularly, in a right and approved way and manner; not by any clandestine methods, or indirect means. To him the porter openeth: that is, the Holy Spirit, who openeth the hearts of men to receive Jesus Christ, and the doctrine of the gospel, which the faithful shepherds deliver in his name, and by authority received from him. Learn hence, That all faithful pastors have a lawful call to the work of the ministry; they enter by the right door, and execute their trust in a right manner; but such as, without a call from God, unwarrantably thrust themselves into the ministry, are no better, nor no other than thieves and robbers in God's account. Observe, 2. Another property of a good shepherd is this, That he calleth his sheep by their names. This importeth three things: 1. A special love that he bears to them. 2. A special care that he has over them. 3. A particular acquaintance with them, that he may know how to apply himself suitably to them; which, though it be eminently verified in Christ; yet it is the duty of every faithful pastor and under-shepherd, in his measure, to labor after. Observe, 3. The good shepherd leadeth out his sheep into good pastures, that is, he feedeth them with sound doctrine; nourishes them with the word, of life. Whereas the hireling, or false shepherd, whatever he may do for his own sake, he has no regard to Jesus Christ; to the honor of his person, to the edification of his church, or the salvation of souls; but his design is to raise and enrich himself, and so he may compass that, he cares not how many souls perish through his neglect. Observe, 4. The last property of the good shepherd, here mentioned, is this. That he goeth before his sheep, as the shepherd doth before his flock; namely, by a holy life, and unblameable conversation: he treads out those steps before the people, which they take in their way towards heaven. And the sheep follow him, and are guided by him. He leadeth out his sheep, and goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice.

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep.

8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

9 I am the door: by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10 The thief cometh not but to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

Observe here, 1. The character which Christ gives of himself, I am the door of the sheep: that is, the only way and means by which sinners have access to God, and can obtain salvation: the only door by which sinners are entered into the kingdom of grace, and admitted into the kingdom of glory. Learn hence, That there is no possible way of access to God for fallen man, but by Jesus Christ. As there is no way of entering the house but by the door, and those that so enter are safe: in the like manner, such as come unto God through Jesus Christ, in the way of faith and holy obedience, shall be put into a secure condition, and at last obtain eternal salvation. Observe, 2. The end and design of Christ in coming into the world, asserted and declared by himself; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. But had not his people spiritual life before he came into the world? Yes, he gave life to his people before his coming, in a measure sufficient to supply their necessity; but since his coming, he gives it in such a super-abounding measure, as may testify his divine bounty: they shall not barely live, but live abundantly, that is, their spiritual life shall abound through the upholding, strengthening, quickening, and comforting presence of his holy spirit; for having conveyed spiritual life unto his people, in their regeneration and conversion, he will cause it to increase more and more in their sanctification, until it arrive to a complete perfection in their glorification. Observe lastly, The character which our Saviour gives of the scribes and pharisees in general, and those false Christs and false prophets, which went before him, in particular; he styles them thieves and robbers; All that ever came before me, were thieves and robbers. Observe, He doth not say, All that were sent before me, but all that came before me, were thieves and robbers. So that Christ doth not speak this of the true prophets, who were sent by God before him, but of the false Christs and false prophets, that came of themselves without any commission from God. The meaning is, all persons that came before me, pretending to be what I am, the true Messias, as did Theudas and Judas of Galilee, &c. they were thieves and robbers: that is, they only sought their own advantage, while they deceived and ruined you. Learn hence, That whoever took upon them the office and person of the Messias before Christ, or whosoever have since usurped a lawful calling in his church, without his commission, they are in Christ's account no better than murderers, thieves, and robbers, and they ought to be so in the people's esteem. The sheep did not hear them.

11 I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

12 But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth; and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14 I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.

15 As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father; and I lay down my life for the sheep.

In these verses our Saviour evidently proves himself to be the true Shepherd of his church, by the marks and signs, by the properties and characters of a good shepherd, which were eminently found with him; namely, to know his flock, to take care of them, and to lay down his life for them. 1. Jesus Christ, the great shepherd of his church, hath an exact and distinct knowledge of his flock; I know my sheep, with a three-fold knowledge, with a knowledge of intelligence and observation; he knows them so as to observe and take notice of them, with a knowledge, and approbation, and acceptance; he knows them so as to approve and own them, with a knowledge of care and protection; he knows them so as to defend and keep them. Thus Christ knows his sheep, and is also known of them; that is, he is believed on, beloved, and obeyed by them. 2. He lays down his life for his flock. And for this doth he eminently deserve the title of the good shepherd. (As for his power, he is styled the great Shepherd.) A good shepherd indeed, who not only gives his life to his sheep, but gives his own life by way of ransom for his sheep! This example of Christ, the great and good shepherd, in laying down his life for his sheep, teacheth all subordinate and inferior shepherds, to prefer the good of their flock even before their own lives.

16 And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice ; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

Here Christ proves himself to be the true shepherd of his church from another property of a good shepherd, which is to take care for the increasing and enlarging of his fold, by bringing in the Gentiles to it ; and by breaking down the partition wall, to make one church both of the Jews and Gentiles. Christ calls the Gentiles his other sheep, by way of anticipation, because shortly they were to be so, and united together with the believing Jews into one sheepfold : and whereas he says, he must bring those sheep in, we are to understand it not of a necessity of co-action, but of a necessity of compact ; it being a federal agreement betwixt the Father and himself, that both Jews and Gentiles should be one flock, inclosed in one fold, and presented to his Father as a glorious church. Hence learn, How endearing our obligations are to the dearest Jesus, that he should account us Gentiles, who were afar off, his sheep (we being so in respect of his eternal purpose) and make it his care, and esteem it his charge, to call us home, and bring us into his fold, the church, that we might be saved amongst the remnant of the true Israelites. Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold, them also I must bring.

17 Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

18 No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself : I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.

Hence note, 1. That Jesus Christ certainly foreknew his own death and resurrection. 2. That Christ was a volunteer in dying. He laid down his life, none could have taken it from him. It is true, his death was a violent death, but a voluntary sacrifice : he died violently, but yet voluntarily : the hand of his enemies could never hurt him without his own consent. 3. That as Christ died voluntarily with respect to himself, so in a way of subjection to his Father's command ; This commandment have I received from my Father. 4. That this voluntary submission of Christ to die for us, was the ground of his Father's love to him. Therefore doth my Father love me ; because I lay down my life. Although the Father had many reasons to love the Son, yet none was stronger than this obedience of his to death, even the cursed death of the cross, for the redemption and salvation of lost sinners ; therefore did the Father love him with a more exceeding love, because he laid down his life for his sheep.

19 ¶ There was a division, therefore, again among the Jews for these sayings.

20 And many of them said, He hath a devil, and is mad : why hear ye him ?

21 Others said, These are not the words of him that hath a devil : can a devil open the eyes of the blind ?

Here the evangelist shows what different effects this sermon of our Saviour had upon the Jews : many of them calumniate and slander him, as one possessed and mad, and therefore not to be heard and minded : others of calmer thoughts said, That the doctrine he taught, and the late miracle which he had wrought in curing the blind man, were abundantly sufficient to confute such a groundless slander. Learn hence, That the doctrine of Christ meeting with diversity of dispositions, it is no wonder that it occasioned different effects, to the softening of some, and hardening others : even as the same sun that melteth the wax, hardeneth the clay ; yet is not this to be imputed to the doctrine of our Saviour, but to men's corruptions which oppose the truth, and the maintainers of it. There was a division again amongst them.

22 ¶ And it was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication, and it was winter.

This feast was not of divine, but human institution ; it was appointed by Judas Maccabeus, and continued eight days, as an anniversary commemoration for the repairing of the temple. Now our Saviour was so far from reproving the Jews for observing this feast, which was of human institution, that he graced the solemnity with his own presence. Hence observe, That our Saviour held communion with the Jewish church, and did, without scruple, conform himself to the observation of their rites and customs, although they were not originally of divine institution. Learn, 2. That such a christian as doth peaceably comply with the practice of the church, in whose communion he lives, in the observation of those different rites and customs which are used by her, acts most agreeably to our Saviour's practice and example. Who can with any show of reason censure christians for observing the feast of the nativity, who see Christ himself observing the feast of dedication ? Certainly no person of sober principles ever questioned, but that ecclesiastical rulers and civil magistrates have a power to appoint public days of thanksgiving yearly, for the commemoration of mercies, which ought never to be forgotten. From our Saviour's presence at this feast, Grotius well notes, That festival days, in memorial of public blessings, may piously be instituted by persons in authority, without a divine command.

23 And Jesus walked in the temple in Solomon's porch.

24 Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou make us to doubt ? If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly.

25 Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not ; the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me :

26 But ye believe not ; because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you.

In these verses we have recorded a new and fresh debate betwixt our Saviour and the Jews, and therein we have observable, 1. The time of this debate, verse 22. It was at the feast of dedication, in the winter, our Saviour taking that opportunity to publish his doctrine, when a concourse of people were gathered together at that solemnity. Observe, 2. The place of this debate, in Solomon's porch. Although the temple and porch built by Solomon were destroyed by the Babylonians, yet when the temple was rebuilt, there was a porch like it, which retained the ancient name. Observe, 3. The debate itself: If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly. Not that they affected the knowledge of the truth, but only designed to ensnare him: for if he had affirmed himself to be the Messias, he had brought himself in danger of the Roman governor; because the Jews expected the Messias to be a temporal prince, that should deliver them from the Roman power. Now if Christ had declared himself such a Messias as the Jews expected, it might have cost him his life. Therefore his hour being not yet come, he answers with his usual prudence and wariness to their ensnaring question. Learn hence, That Christ's enemies are full of subtle policies, and can turn themselves into all shapes, that, if possible, they may entrap and ensnare him; and accordingly they pretend here great earnestness of desire to be satisfied, whether he was indeed the true and promised Messias; when in truth they had another design. Observe, 4. The wisdom and caution of our Saviour's answer; he refers them to his miracles, The works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me. Our Saviour's miraculous works were sufficient for the Jews to have grounded and bottomed their faith upon, and to have confirmed them in the belief, that he was the promised and expected Messias, had not prejudice, obstinacy, and malice, blinded their eyes, that they could neither see nor consider. Observe lastly, How Christ points out to these Jews the true cause of their infidelity; which was not the obscurity of his doctrine, but their not being his sheep; that is, not as yet converted, they not having the properties of his sheep, which he sets down in the following verses. Learn hence, That men's final unbelief under the means of faith, is a clear evidence of their being in a lost and perishing condition. Infidelity is the sin that doth consign a man over to damnation; and to such as sit under the gospel, doth not only procure damnation, but no damnation like it.

27 My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me:

Here observe, 1. That all sincere and faithful christians are Christ's sheep, and he is their great and good shepherd. This relation implies tender affection, powerful protection, and plentiful provision. The tenderness of Christ's affection towards his sheep, appears by pitying their infirmities, by having a fellow feeling with them in their sufferings, by suiting their temptations to the degrees of their graces. His care in providing for them appears, in affording to them the holy scriptures, the ministry of the word, the administration of the sacraments, and the operation of his Holy Spirit, to make all efficacious and effectual to them. His protection of them discovers itself, by preparing them for trials, by supporting them under them, by delivering them out of them, and by sanctifying all to them causing them to work together in subserviency to his own glory, and his people's good. Observe, 2. That Christ's sheep hear Christ's voice, and answer the call of their great Shepherd. They hear the voice of Christ speaking to them in the scriptures, in the ministry of the word, in their own consciences, in providences; and they hear Christ's voice speaking to them, in and by his Holy Spirit; and as they hear Christ's voice, so do they answer his call: now the right answer to the call of Christ in the gospel, is a present answer, a willing answer, and an abiding answer. Observe, 3. That all Christ's sheep do follow him their shepherd. They follow him, 1. In his doctrine; and, 2. In his example, in his contempt of the world, in his freedom in reproving sin, in the holiness and heavenly-mindedness of his conversation, in his meekness and patience, in charity and universal goodness, and as he was a mighty pattern of prayer. Observe, 4. That Christ, the great and good Shepherd, knows all his sheep. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them. He knows them, so as to distinguish them, so as to observe and take notice of them, so as to own and approve them, so as to take care of them, and provide for them. And as the Lord knoweth who are his, so he knoweth who are not his too; as he knows his sheep, so he knows the goats also, and their place will be at his left hand. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them.

28 And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand.

29 My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all: and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

Observe here, 1. The promise made by Christ unto his sheep, namely, the promise of eternal life, and perseverance in grace, till they come to the full fruition of it in glory, "I give unto them eternal life, and none shall pluck them out of my Father's hand." Observe, 2. The confirmation he gives of this from his own and his Father's power, which is employed, engaged, and concerned, for them, and for their perseverance and preservation, notwithstanding all opposition to the contrary. "My Father which gave them me is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." Learn, 1. That eternal life is the portion of Christ's sheep. 2. That eternal life is the gift of Christ. 3. That eternal life is now given to Christ's sheep: they have it now in the purchase, in the promise, and in the first fruits. 4. That all Christ's sheep are put by God the Father into Christ's hand for security. My Father hath given them me. 5. The Father doth so intrust Christ with his sheep, as yet to take care of them himself; they are in the Father's hand, as well as in the Son's, and their being in the hands of both, doth assure them of the certainty of their perseverance. None shall pluck them out of my hand: none shall be able to pluck them out of my Father's hand; implying that there are many that would pluck them out of their hands, sin, satan, the world, &c. but they shall be kept by the Almighty power of God, through faith unto salvation; for who can be too strong for omnipotent power.

30 I and my Father are one.

That is, one in essence and nature, one in authority and power, and not barely one in will and affection, one in concord or consent. That this is the genuine signification of the words, appears by a threefold argument. 1. From the original words; it is not said, I and my Father are one person in the masculine gender, but in the neuter, I and my Father are one thing. Now if that thing be not the Divine Being, they cannot be one; for since the Father is confessed to be God, the Son cannot be one thing with the Father, if he be not God too. 2. It appears from the context; our Saviour, in the preceding verses, ascribed the preservation of his sheep to the power of his Father; None can pluck them out of my Father's hand; and he ascribes it also to his own power; None shall pluck them out of my hand; plainly intimating, that his sheep were equally safe in his own hand, as well as in his Father's; for, says he, I and my Father are one; that is, one in power; and, if they be one in power, they must be one in nature: unless we make an almighty creature, which is a contradiction. 3. It appears evidently by what follows in the next verse, that the Jews understood our Saviour in this sense; why else did they take up stones to stone him? We stone thee, say they, for blasphemy, because thou, being a man, makest thyself God. The Jews took our Saviour's meaning aright, and were satisfied, that when he said, I and my Father are one, he asserted himself to be God, and deserved to die; and well he had deserved it, if he had not been God. The adversaries of our Saviour's divinity, to elude the force of these words, which make so much against them, interpret the words thus, I and my Father are one; that is, say they, we are one in will and affection, one in concord and consent: this is a truth, but not the great truth contained in these words: for thus believers are one with God, and one with one another; namely, by an harmony of wills and desires: so far as they are regenerated, God's will and theirs are unisons, they will and desire the same thing, and are of one heart and one mind. But God and Christ are one, in a much higher sense than Christ and believers are one; namely, one in essence and nature, one in authority and power, Christ being consubstantial with God. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ is for the nature co-essential, for dignity co-equal, and for duration co-eternal with the Father. 2. That although Christ be one in essence with the Father, yet are they distinct persons one from another, I and my Father, we are one. Learn hence, That the Son being one in essence, one in power, one in consent and will, with the Father, they are both equally concerned for the perseverance of the saints, for preserving them in grace, and for bringing them to glory. None shall pluck them out of mine or my Father's hand: for I and my Father are one. If the power be the same, the essence must be the same.

31 Then the Jews took up stones again to stone him.

32 Jesus answered them, Many good works have I showed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?

33 The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy, and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God.

Observe here, 1. How the Jews understood our Saviour affirming, that he and his Father are one; that is, one in essence and nature, and himself a person equal with God. This they looked upon as blasphemy in him, to arrogate to himself what is proper to God only. Observe, 2. That the Jews looked upon it as a piece of justice in them to stone Christ for this apprehended blasphemy; Then the Jews took up stones to stone him. According to the law of God, the blasphemer was to be stoned to death, but then he was first to be judiciously tried and judged; but such was the furious and fiery zeal of these Jews, that in a tumultuous manner they attempt to stone him to death. Lord! how far doth the fury of men, in opposing truth, outstrip the true zeal of the faithful servants in defending truth! Observe, 3. With what meekness our Lord receives this horrid indignity of stoning (for it is probable, that some stones were cast at him, he saying, For which of these works do ye stone me?) he clears his own innocence, and expostulates with them for rewarding him evil for good: Many good works have I showed you from my Father; that is, by my Father's authority and commission; I have been sight to the blind, feet to the lame, a tongue to the dumb, and hearing to the deaf; do any of these works deserve such usage as stoning at your hands? Learn hence, That such was the perfect and spotless innocence of Christ in all his actions, that he durst and did appeal to the consciences of his most inveterate adversaries; For which of these works do ye stone me?

34 Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?

35 If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the scripture cannot be broken;

36 Say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God?

Here our Saviour by a twofold argument vindicates himself from the imputation of blasphemy, in asserting himself to be God. 1. Because the Old Testament gave to magistrates and judges the title of Gods, as Ps. lxxxii. 6. I have said ye are gods. Now Christ argues strongly from the less to the greater, thus: "If judges and magistrates may be called gods, because they are commissioned by him, and derive their authority from him, how much more is that title due to me, who am sanctioned, separated, and ordained for a Mediator, and appointed to the work of redemption, before I came into the world, and consequently was God from all eternity?" This place the Socinians (those professed adversaries of our Saviour's godhead) produce to prove, that Christ was not God by nature, but only in respect of his sanctification and mission. It is a certain truth, that he that was sanctified and sent, was the Son of God; but he was not therefore the Son of God, because sanctified and sent. His sanctification was not the ground of his sonship; but his sonship was the cause of his sanctification. Christ was not therefore God's Son because he was sanctified and sent; but he was therefore sanctified and sent, because he was his Son. He was a Son before he was sent, even from eternity, otherwise, it must have been said, that God sent him to be his Son, and not that God sent his Son. This supposes him before he was sent to have been actually his Son, as certainly he was, from before the foundation of the world; Prov. vii. 23. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.

37 If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not.

38 But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him.

Here we have a second argument, by which our Saviour proves, that it was no blasphemy to call himself God; but that he was God in very deed: namely, an argument taken from his works: If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not; and the argument runs thus: if (says Christ) I do those miraculous works, which no power less than a divine power can effect, then you ought by these works to be led to believe and acknowledge, that I am truly and really God; but the works which I do are the effect and product of an omnipotent power, therefore you ought to believe, that I am one in essence with the Father, there being a mutual in-existence of one person in the other, so that the Father is in me, and I in him: and thus I and the Father are one. Learn hence, That Christ never required of his disciples and followers an implicit faith, or a blind obedience; but as he submitted his doctrine to the trial of reason, so he submitted his miracles to the examination and judgment of sense; therefore he says, If I do not the works of my Father, that is, divine works, believe me not to be a divine person.

39 Therefore they sought again to take him: but he escaped out of their hands.

40 And went away again beyond Jordan, into the place where John at first baptized: and there he abode.

41 And many resorted unto him and said, John did no miracle: but all things that John spake of this man, were true.

42 And many believed on him there.

Observe here, 1. The violence and fury of these unbelieving Jews against the holy and innocent Jesus! They sought again to take him. Observe, 2. The prudential care of Christ for his own preservation; his time being not yet come, he withdraws from Jerusalem, the nest of his enemies, and goes beyond Jordan; when Christ was persecuted in one city he fled to another; he has sanctified a state of persecution to his ministers and members by his own being in it. It is no disgrace for any of them to fly, when their Captain did it, and bids them do it, saying, When they persecute you in one city, flee unto another. Observe, 3. The success of Christ's ministry beyond Jordan: Many resorted to him, and believed on him. This place about Jordan was the place where John had exercised a great part of his ministry, and now, many years after John's death, the fruit of his ministry appears; for many believed on him there; that is, about Jordan, where John had preached and baptized. Learn hence, That the labors of faithful ministers may seem to be lost, and lie long like seed under the ground, and yet at last by some new watering may spring up, and the fruit appear in abundance. Here John's ministry about Jordan hath fresh fruit upon Christ's coming, long after John was dead. Observe 4, The dignity of Christ above John, John did no miracle; but Christ did all. The wisdom of God so ordered it, that though the Old Testament prophets, Elijah and Elisha, wrought many miracles for the confirmation of their divine mission, yet John the Baptist coming immediately before Christ, as his messenger and forerunner, wrought none, for these three reasons probably: 1. That so the glory of Christ in working miracles, when he came upon the stage of his ministry, might be the more clear and evident. 2. That the evidence of Christ being the Messiah might be the more clear by the miracles which he wrought. 3. That the minds of the people might not be divided and distracted between John and Christ, and that there might be no pretence or competition between them: Therefore John did no miracle; but all things that John spake of Christ were true.

CHAPTER XI.

NOW a certain man was sick, named Lazarus, of Bethany, the town of Mary and her sister Martha.

2 (It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick.)

3 Therefore his sisters sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick.

4 When Jesus heard that, he said, This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

This chapter relates unto us the miraculous power of Christ, in raising of dead Lazarus, which, as it was one of his last so it was one of the greatest miracles which he wrought, and yet we find none of the Evangelists make mention of it, but only St. John; the reason is supposed to be this, because when the other evangelists wrote their history, Lazarus was then alive; (for Epiphonius says, he lived thirty years after he was raised by Christ) and probably, the mention of this relation might have brought Lazarus into danger and trouble; but St. John wrote his gospel after Lazarus' death. This miracle was a sufficient demonstration of Christ's Godhead: none but an almighty power could recal a man four days dead, from a settled corruption to a state of life. None but he that created Lazarus could thus make him anew. Here observe, 1. The tender sympathy of these two endeared sisters with their afflicted brother; they feel his sorrows, and acquaint their Saviour with his sufferings. Lord! behold, he whom thou lovest is sick. They do not say, Our brother that loves thee is sick; he whom thou lovest is sick; thereby pleading not the merit of Lazarus, but the merit of Christ. For how can the love of Christ, which is infinite and eternal, have any cause but itself? Note, The person whom Christ loved is sick, and dies. Learn hence, That strength of grace, and dearneſs of reſpect, even from Christ himſelf, cannot prevail either againſt death or againſt diſeaſes. Lazarus, whom Christ loved, is ſick. Obſerve, 2. The gracious answer which Christ ſent to the ſiſter's meſſage; This ſickneſs is not unto death; but for the glory of God; that is, this ſickneſs ſhall not bring upon him ſuch a death as he ſhall remain under the power of, to the general reſurrection; but is only deſigned to give me an opportunity of glorifying God, by exerting my miraculous power in reſtoring him to life. Learn hence, 1. That as God's own glory is his ſupreme aim and end in all his actions, ſo in particular it is deſigned by him in ſending afflictions upon his people, to glorify his power and wiſdom, mercy and love, in and upon them. The ſaints' ſickneſſes are all for the glory of God. 2. That God is glorified when his Son is glorified: as none do honor the Father who do not honor the Son; ſo the Father accounts himſelf glorified, when the glory of the Son is advanced. This ſickneſs is for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5 Now Jeſus loved Martha, and her ſiſter, and Lazarus.

6 When he had heard, therefore, that he was ſick, he abode two days ſtill in the ſame place where he was.

7 Then after that ſaith he to his diſciples, Let us go into Judea again.

8 His diſciples ſay unto him, Maſter, the Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee; and goeſt thou thither again?

9 Jeſus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day he ſtumbleth not, becauſe he ſeeeth the light of this world.

10 But if a man walk in the night, he ſtumbleth, becauſe there is no light in him.

Obſerve, 1. What an happy, becauſe an holy and religious family was here, and much honored by Christ: Jeſus loved Martha, Mary, and Lazarus; wherever true piety dwells, it draws the eye and heart of Christ towards it. Christ had frequently and familiarly lodged under their roof, and he rewards them for their entertainment with his love; Jeſus loved Martha and her ſiſter. Where note, That Martha is here named firſt, though elſewhere Mary had the precedence, to ſhow, no doubt, that they were both equally dear to Christ.

Obſerve, 2. That although Christ loved Lazarus, yet he ſeems to neglect him, he delays going to him for ſome days: but could Christ abſent himſelf from one ſo long, whom he loved ſo well? We find he did. Let us take heed then that we do not miſinterpret Christ's delay. He ſeldom comes at our time, but never ſtays beyond his own; our Saviour had a double end in ſtaying thus long; namely, for greatening of the miracle, and confirming of their faith. Had Christ gone before Lazarus was dead, they might have attributed his recovery rather to the ſtrength of nature, than to Christ's miraculous power; or had Christ raiſed Lazarus as ſoon as he was dead, they might peradventure have thought it rather ſome trance or ecſtacy, than a death and diſſolution; therefore Christ ſtays ſo many days, that God might be the more glorified, and his own omnipotent power the more magnified. We learn then, That when Christ delays to help them whom he dearly loves, it is always for wiſe ends and holy purpoſes. Obſerve, 3. How the diſciples, though they were dearly affected to Lazarus (for they had learned to love where their Maſter loved) yet they diſcourage Christ from going to him into Judea, for fear of violence offered to him, "Maſter, the Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee, and goeſt thou thither again?" Here the diſciples pleaded for their Maſter's ſafety, at the ſame time aiming at their own; they were to go with him into Judea, and they well knew that their danger was inwrapped in his, therefore they ſeek to divert him from his intention. O how has the fear of ſuffering made many of the friends of Christ decline an opportunity of glorifying God, and doing good to others! But cannot God give ſafety in the miſt of danger, if he pleaſeth? Let us then not chooſe our way according to our own apprehenſion, either of danger or ſafety: but as we ſee God going before us, if our call be clear, let us go on with courage, whatever difficulties lie in our way. Obſerve, 4. How our Saviour corrects theſe fears of his diſciples, by acquainting them with his call from God, to undertake this journey into Judea. "Are there not twelve hours in the day? If a man walk therein, he ſtumbleth not: but in the night he ſtumbleth." As if Christ had ſaid, "As he that walks in the day is in no danger of ſtumbling, but in the night he is in danger; ſo as long as I have a call from God, and my working time laſts, there is a divine providence that will watch over me, and ſecure me from all danger; now my day is not fully ſpent, and therefore it is in the power of mine enemies to precipitate my paſſion, or to bring the night of ſufferings upon me before the appointed time: but ere long the night will come on, the working time will be over, and then ſhall both I and you ſtumble upon death; but while the day laſteth we are ſafe." Learn hence, 1. Every man has his twelve hours, that is, his working time, assigned him by God in this world. 2. Whiſt theſe hours are not ſpent, and whiſt his working time is unexpired, he ſhall not ſtumble, he ſhall not die, he ſhall not be diſabled from working, while God has any work for him to do; neither the malice of men, nor the rage of devils, ſhall take him off till his work be finiſhed. 3. Every man has his night as well as his day, in which he muſt expect and prepare to ſtumble; that is, to fall by death: for, when God has done his work by us and with us, he will withdraw his protection from us, but not his care over us. We ſtumble upon death, and fall into the grave; but God receives us to himſelf, and at the end of our working ſeaſon rewards us for our work.

11 Theſe things ſaid he: and after that he ſaith unto them, Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of ſleep.

Obſerve here, 1. Our Saviour coming near to Bethany, tells his diſciples that Lazarus ſleepeth; that is, plainly, he was dead. This ſhewed his omniſciency, and that he was truly God; for he had received no advice of his death from any perſon, but as God he knew that he was deceaſed.

Observe, 2. The sweet title given both to death and Lazarus; death is called a sleep, Lazarus is styled a friend; yet Christ says, not my friend but our friend Lazarus sleepeth; intimating that gracious familiarity and mutual friendship which was betwixt himself and all his members. Learn hence, 1. That all true believers are Christ's friends. 2. That the friends of Christ must die as well as others. 3. That their death is but a sleep. Our friend Lazarus sleepeth. It followeth, but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep. Observe, Christ says not, We will go and awake him, but I will go, and I will awake him. The disciples, who were companions in the way, must not be partners in the work; witnesses they may be, actors they cannot be; none can awake Lazarus, but the Maker of Lazarus. Who can command the soul to come down and meet the body: and who can command the body to rise up and meet the soul, but that God that created both soul and body? Lord; it is our comfort against the dread and terror of death, that our resurrection depends upon thy almighty power. I will go that I may awake him out of sleep.

12 Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.

13 Howbeit Jesus spake of his death; but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep.

14 Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

15 And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe: nevertheless, let us go unto him.

16 Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow disciples, Let us also go, that we may die with him.

Observe here, 1. How desirous the disciples were that Christ should not go to Bethany where Lazarus was. Bethany being within two miles of Jerusalem, where the seat of our Saviour's enemies was. But our Lord, knowing his call to be clear, resolves to go; Nevertheless, says Christ, let us go unto him. O love stronger than death! the grave cannot separate betwixt Christ and his friends: other friends accompany us to the brink of the grave, and there they leave us to worms and dust; for death hath both horror and noisomeness to attend it: but for thee, O Saviour, the grave-stone, the earth, the coffin, are no bounders of thy dear respects. Blessed be God, that neither life nor death can separate from the love of Christ; but even after death and burial he is graciously affected to those he loves. Christ has a gracious regard to the dust of his saints; though his holy ones see corruption, they shall not always lie under the power of corruption; their dead bodies are a part of the undoubted members of Christ's mystical body. Blessed be God, the time is coming, when Christ shall knock at the doors of his children's graves, and call them up out of their bed of dust, and they shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live. Observe, 2. The wise and holy design of Christ in delaying to go to Bethany till Lazarus was dead; namely, that he might at once raise Lazarus' dead body, and his disciples' faith, confirming them in the belief, that he was the Son of God, and the true Mes-sias. But could the faith of the apostles want confirmation, who had seen so many miracles wrought by our Saviour, and had lived under his ministry all the time of it? Yes; the faith of the most eminent saints, even of the apostles themselves, wants confirmation in this state of weakness and imperfection, and is capable of growth. I am glad for your sakes, that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe. Observe, 3. The great passion which Thomas expresses upon the notice given by Christ of Lazarus' death? plainly, Lazarus is dead, says Christ; Let us go, and die with him, says Thomas. Oh what passionate and impatient expressions do sometimes drop from our mouths, on occasion of the death of our dear relations! we are ready to be so affected with the death of our friends, as to wish ourselves out of the world, that we might be with them. But we must remember, that it is God that appoints us our several posts, and particular stations, which we must keep, till the wisdom of God sees fit to remove us.

17 Then when Jesus came, he found that he had laid in the grave four days already.

18 (Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, about fifteen furlongs off.)

19 And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

20 Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

21 Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22 But I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.

Observe here, 1. The length of time which Christ designedly delayed before he would come to Lazarus' grave; he was not above six miles off Bethany, being within two miles of Jerusalem, and Jerusalem within four miles of Bethabara, where Christ now was, and yet our Saviour comes not of four days; doubtless, that the miracle of Lazarus' resurrection might be the more conspicuous and remarkable. Christ could as easily have cured Lazarus being sick, as have raised him being dead, and as easily have raised him the first day, as the fourth day; but that had not carried along with it such a full conviction of Christ's almighty power. Therefore, that he might draw the eyes of their faith more stedfastly to behold and admire his almighty power, our Saviour defers his coming till Lazarus had been dead four days. Observe, 2. The civil usage of mourning with those that mourned for the dead: anciently they mourned thirty days, and sometimes forty, for a dear relation. Numb xx. 29. During which time, neighbours and friends came to visit and relieve them in their sadness, with such consolatory arguments as they had. Christian religion doth not condemn natural affection: human passions are not sinful, if not excessive; to be above the stroke of passions is a condition equal to angels: to be in a state of sorrow without the sense of sorrow is a disposition beneath the beasts: but duly to regulate our sorrows, and set boundaries to our grief, is the wisdom, the duty, the interest, and the excellency, of a Christian. As to be above all passions, will be our happiness in heaven, so to regulate and rectify our passions, is a great part of our holiness on earth. Observe, 3. Although Martha was a true mourner for the death of her brother, yet she doth not so far indulge to grief, but upon the first notice of Christ's approach, she arises to go forth to meet him, with a mournful moan in her mouth, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Where observe, how faith and infirmity were mixed together; faith appeared in that firm persuasion which she had of Christ's power. Hadst thou been here, my brother had not died. But then her infirmity appeared in limiting Christ both to time and place; to place, If thou hadst been here: as if Christ could not (if he had pleased) save his life, absent as well as present. Then to time, Now he stinketh; as if she had said, "You are come, but, alas! too late; you have stayed too long, he is past recovery, the grave hath swallowed him up." As if death would not deliver up his prisoner at the command of Christ: Oh! the imperfect composition of the best of saints! what a mixture of faith and infirmity is found in the holiest and best of Christians! This also farther appears in her next words, ver. 22. I know that whatsoever thou shalt ask of God, he will give it thee: she seems not to believe that Christ was able to raise him by his own immediate power, but must obtain power of God to do it, as the prophets were wont to do that raised the dead. She thought Christ a person highly in God's favor, but scarce believed him able to raise Lazarus by his own power; had her faith extended to a belief that Christ was equal with the Father, and that the fulness of the godhead dwelt in him, she would not have questioned his power to raise him from the grave; for though Christ as Mediator did apply himself by prayer to God at the raising of dead Lazarus, ver. 41, 42, yet as God, he had a power of himself to raise Lazarus, an Almighty power, communicated with his essence from the Father, by an eternal and ineffable generation.

23 Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again.

24 Martha said unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

25 Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live.

26 And whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die. Believest thou this?

Here observe, 1. Christ's meek answer to Martha's passionate discourse. He takes no notice of the forementioned failings, but comforts her with a promise of her brother's resurrection; Thy brother shall rise again. Thence learn, That the knowledge and belief of the general resurrection is, and ought to be, a sufficient support under the loss of our endeared friends, who die in the Lord. Observe, 2. That the doctrine of the general resurrection was no new doctrine; Job believed it, chap. xix. 26. Daniel published it, chap. xii. 1. The pharisees had a notion of it; but Martha here makes it an article of her faith, I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Observe, 3. How Christ particularly instructs Martha in the cause of her resurrection, acquainting her, that he himself is the author and efficient cause of it; I am the resurrection and the life; that is, I am the author and principal efficient cause of the resurrection; and this with respect to both natures: 1. His divine nature is the efficient cause of the resurrection; he shall raise our bodies out of the dust, by the power of his godhead. 2. His human nature is the exemplary cause or pattern of the resurrection; for which reason Christ is called the first born from the dead. For though some were raised before him, yet was his resurrection the cause of their resurrection. Hence St. Paul argues, from Christ's resurrection, the certainty of the resurrection of his members: Christ and believers are one mystical body, therefore is not Christ perfectly risen till all his members are risen with him. Indeed Christ's personal resurrection was perfect when he arose, and all believers arose representatively in him: yet till all believers arise personally, the resurrection of Christ has not received its utmost perfection; but there is somewhat behind of the resurrection of Christ. Most fitly then might our Saviour assert, I am the resurrection and the life. Observe, 4. That Christ not only asserts himself to be the resurrection, but also the life; I am the resurrection and the life; that is, I am the cause of life natural, spiritual, and eternal; And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die; that is, eternally! though his body shall die because of sin, yet his spirit shall live because of righteousness.

27 She saith unto him, Yea, Lord; I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world.

28 And, when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary, her sister, secretly, saying, The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

29 And as soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him.

30 Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31 The Jews then, which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary that she rose up hastily, and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

32 Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died, Observe here, 1. The full confession which Martha makes of her faith in Christ: Thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world. A confession which comes nearest to that of St. Peter, (Matt. xvi. 16.) of any that we meet with in scripture; nay, it seems more full than Peter's confession; for those additional words, Which should come into the world, are not in his confession; the sum is, she believed Christ to be the very Messiah who was typified and prefigured, prophesied of, and promised to, the Old Testament saints, as the person that in the fulness of time should come into the world for the redemption and salvation of it. Thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world. Hence learn, That Christ is never rightly believed in, nor regularly depended upon, for salvation, except he be owned and acknowledged to be the eternal Son of God. Martha was now fully persuaded of Christ's divine nature, of which the best of the disciples, till after our Saviour's resurrection, had but a faint and uncertain persuasion. Observe, 2. How earnest and intent our Saviour was to dispatch the errand he came upon, namely, to raise Lazarus from the grave, and to comfort the two mournful sisters: he would not so much as enter the house, till he had effected his work; and therefore he goes straight to the grave, which probably was the place where Mary met him: Lord! It was thy meat and drink to do the will of thy Father: it was thy meat and drink by day, thy rest and repose by night. How unlike are we to thyself, if we suffer either our pleasures or our profits to divert us from our duty! Observe, 3. What haste and speed Mary makes to attend upon our Saviour; she arose quickly, and came unto him. Mary's love added wings to her motion. The Jews observing her hasty motion, have a loving suspicion that she is gone to the grave to weep there; but their thoughts were too low; for whilst they supposed that she went to a dead brother, she was waiting upon a living Saviour. And she that used to sit at Jesus' feet, now falls at his feet, with an awful veneration; the very gesture was supplicatory. And her humble prostration was seconded with a doleful lamentation, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Where observe, a mixture of faith with human infirmity. Here was strength of faith in ascribing so much power to Christ, that his presence could preserve from death; but here was infirmity in supposing the necessity of Christ's presence for this purpose. Certainly he that did raise him from death, being present, could have preserved him from dying, being absent, had he pleased. This was Mary's moan, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died; full of affection, but not free from frailty and infirmity; however Christ takes no notice of her errors and infirmity: but all the reply we hear of is a compassionate groan, which the following verses acquaint us with.

33 When Jesus, therefore, saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, 34 And said, Where have ye laid him? They say unto him, Lord, come and see.

35 Jesus wept.

36 Then said the Jews, Behold, how he loved him!

37 And some of them said, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died.

Observe here, 1. The condolency and tender sympathy expressed by our Saviour upon this occasion: He groaned in his spirit, and was troubled; or, as the original has it, he troubled himself, intimating that our Saviour's passions were pure and holy, not like ours, muddy and mixed with sinful imperfection. The commotions of his affections were like the shaking of pure water in a chrysal glass, which still remains clear; and they arose and were calmed at his pleasure; he was not overpowered by them, but had them at his command. Learn hence, That as Christ took upon him the human nature, so he did assume also human affections, thereby evincing himself to be our brother and near kinsman, according to the flesh. Learn, 2. That the passions and affections which our Saviour had, and expressed, were always holy and innocent; he was not without them, but he was above them; they did never violently and immoderately trouble him, but when he pleased he troubled himself. Jesus groaned in spirit, and troubled himself. Observe, 2. How our Saviour manifests his condolency and tender sympathy with Martha and Mary, by his weeping. Jesus wept: partly from compassion, and partly for example; in compassion first to humanity, to see how miserably sin had debased the human nature, and rendered man like unto the brute beasts that perish. Secondly, in compassion to Lazarus, whom he was now about to bring back into a sinful and troublesome world. Thus St. Jerome, Non flevit Christus lachrymus nostras, &c. "Christ, says he, did not weep for our tears, he mourned over Lazarus, not because dead, but because now to be brought again to life." Again, Christ wept for our example, to fetch sighs and tears from us, at the sight of others' miseries, and especially at the funerals of our godly friends. Learn hence, That mourning and sorrow, and this expressed by tears and weeping, is an affection proper for those that go to funerals, provided it be decently kept within due bounds, and be not excessive; for immoderate sorrow is hurtful to the living, and dishonorable to the dead; neither is it an argument of more love, but an evidence of less grace. Note, 3. How the Jews, observing Christ's sorrow for, admire his love to dead Lazarus: Behold, how he loved him! Christ's love to his people is admirable and soul-amazing: such as see it may admire it, but can never fully comprehend it. Note, 4. How some of the malicious Jews attempt to lessen the reputation of our Saviour, not willing to own him to be God, because he did not keep Lazarus from dying: as if Christ could not be the Son of God, because he did not at all times, and in all cases, exert and put forth his divine power. Whereas Christ acted freely, and not necessarily, governing his actions by his own wisdom, as he saw most conducing to the ends and purposes of his own glory.

38 Jesus, therefore, again groaning in himself, cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it.

39 Jesus said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, by this time he stinketh; for he hath been dead four days.

40 Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.

42 And I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which stand by, I said it, that they may believe that thou has sent me.

43 And when he had thus spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44 And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

In these verses we find our Lord addressing himself to the miracle of raising Lazarus from the grave. First, he commands them to take away the stone. But could not that voice which raised the dead, remove the stone? Yes, no doubt; but it is always the will of Christ that we put forth our utmost endeavours, and do what we can in order to our own deliverance. To remove the stone and untie the napkin, was in their power; this, therefore, they must do; but to raise the dead was out of their power; this, therefore, Christ will do alone. Our hands must do their utmost before Christ will put forth his help. The stone being thus removed, his eyes begin; they are lifted up to heaven, his Father's throne, from whence he expects to derive the power: his tongue seconds his eyes, and prays unto his Father. Christ, as God, wrought this miracle by his own power. Consider him as a Mediator, and so he looks up to his Father by prayer, yet we hear of no prayer, but a thanksgiving only. Christ's will was his prayer; whatever Christ willed, God granted; Christ and his Father having one essence, one nature, and one will. Neither was it fit for Christ to pray vocally and audibly, lest the unbelieving Jews should say, he did all by intreaty, nothing by power: Observe farther, That as Christ, when he spake to his Father, lifted up his eyes; so, when he spake to dead Lazarus, he lifted up his voice, and cried aloud. This Christ did, that the strength of the voice might answer the strength of the affection, since we vehemently utter what we earnestly desire: also, that greatness of the voice might answer to the greatness of the work; but especially that the hearers might be witnesses that this mighty work was performed, not by any magical enchantments, which are commonly mumbled forth with a low voice, but by an authorative and divine command. In a word, might not Christ utter a loud voice at the raising of Lazarus, that it might be a representation of that shrill and loud voice of the last trumpet at the general resurrection which shall sound into all graves, and raise all flesh from the bed of dust? Observe next, As the manner of our Lord's speaking with a loud voice, so the words spoken by him; Lazarus, come forth. Mark, Christ doth not say, Lazarus revive; but, as if he supposed him already alive, he says, Lazarus, come forth: to let us know that they are alive to him who are dead to us. Mark also, What a commanding word this was, Come forth. Not that it was in the power of these loud commanding words to raise Lazarus, but in the quickening power of Christ which attended these words. O blessed Saviour! it is thy voice which we shall, ere long, hear sounding into the bottom of the grave, and raising us from our bed of dust. It is thy voice that shall pierce the rocks, divide the mountains, and echo forth throughout the universe, saying, Arise ye dead, and come to judgment. Observe lastly, How readily obedient Lazarus was to the call and command of Christ; He that was dead came forth: and if Lazarus did thus instantly start up at the voice of Christ in the day of his humiliation, how shall the dead be roused up out of their graves by that voice which will shake the powers of heaven, and move the foundations of the earth, in the day of his glorification! Question. But where was Lazarus' soul all that while he was dead? If in heaven, was it not a wrong to him to come from thence? If not, doth it not prove that the soul sleeps as well as the body? Ans. Souls go not to heaven by necessitation, as the fire naturally and necessarily ascends upwards; but are disposed of by God as the supreme Governor; those that have served him to go to heaven, and those that have served the devil to go to hell, and those that are not adjudged to either place, but are to live presently again upon earth, as Lazarus was, are reserved by God accordingly: whether shut up in the body as in a swoon, or whether kept in the custody and hands of an angel not far from the body, waiting his pleasure, either to restore it to the body, or to return it to its proper place of bliss or misery, the scripture has not told us whether; and it would be too great curiosity to inquire, and greater presumption to determine.

45 Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

46 But some of them went their ways to the pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

47 ¶ Then gathered the chief priests and the pharisees a council, and said, What do we: for this man doeth many miracles.

48 If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come, and take away both our place and nation.

Observe here, 1. The different effects which this miracle had upon these Jews who were present at the raising of Lazarus; some of them believed on Christ; but others, persisting in their unbelief, went to the pharisees and informed against him. Notwithstanding all the evidence which our Saviour gave of his being the Messias, by the miracles which he wrought, yet many rejected him, and refused to believe in him, to their unutterable and inevitable condemnation. Observe, 2. How greatly disturbed the pharisees were upon the account of our Saviour's miracles: knowing how proper an argument they were to convince men, they concluded, that if Christ were suffered to go on and work miracles, he would draw all men after him. Learn hence, That Jesus proved himself to be the true Messiah by the miracles which he wrought, his enemies themselves being judges. For we find here, the worst of our Saviour's enemies were afraid of his miracles, that by them he would draw all men after him; If we let him alone, all men will believe on him. Observe, 3. What was the ground of the pharisees' fear, if they let Christ go on to work miracles, that he would have so many followers as would alarm the Romans, and awaken their jealousy, and cause them to come upon them with an army, to deprive them of the little liberty they indulged them, and take away their place and nation: their place; that is, their place of worship, the temple: and their nation; that is, bring the whole body of the Jewish nation to utter destruction. Learn hence, How vain the enemies and opposers of Christ and his kingdom do endeavour to color their quarrel with some specious pretences, that they may hide the odiousness of their practices from the eye of the world, and may not be openly seen to fight against God. Thus the pharisees here persecute our Saviour, not as the Messiah (though the miracles he wrought were a sufficient evidence that he was such) but as one who would bring ruin upon their nation. "If we let him alone, the Romans will come, and take away both our place and nation."

49 And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the highpriest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all.

50 Nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

51 And this spake he not of himself: but being highpriest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation:

52 And not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.

The foregoing verses acquainted us with the apprehension which the chief priests had of the necessity of taking away the life of our blessed Saviour; "Lest the Romans should take away both their place and nation." Now here in these verses Caiaphas, the highpriest, delivers his opinion for the preventing of this danger; he tells the rest, that they ought not to boggle at the matter, but come to a positive and peremptory resolution to provide for the public safety, right or wrong; and that it is a great folly to prefer one man's life, though ever so innocent, before a nation's welfare; a most wicked and devilish speech! as a judge he regarded not what was lawful, but as a wicked politician he consulted what was expedient; he declares, that one man, though ever so good and holy, though ever so just and innocent, had better die than a whole nation suffer; as where it is in any case unlawful to do evil that good may come. Learn hence, That although it be the duty of all persons to pray for, and endeavour after, the public welfare of a church and nation, whereof they are members: yet it is altogether unlawful to promote the greatest national good, by wicked and unlawful means. Observe farther, How God, overruled the tongue of Caiaphas beyond his own intention, prophetically to foretel that great good which, by our Saviour's death, should redound to the world, and that the fruit and benefit of his death should not only extend to the Jews, but to the Gentiles also: and that he should gather in one body, or church, all that truly believe in him, though far and wide dispersed upon the face of the earth. Hence learn, 1. That the spirit of prophecy did fall sometimes upon very bad men, and God has been pleased to reveal some part of his mind to the worst of men. Thus Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar had in their dreams a revelation from God, what things he intended to do. Learn, 2. That it is consistent with the holiness of God, sometimes to make use of the tongues of the worst of men, to publish and declare his will. Caiaphas here, though a vile and wicked man, was influenced by God to prophecy and speak as an oracle. Almighty God may, when he pleases, employ wicked men this way without any prejudice to his holiness. "This Caiaphas spake not of himself, but being highpriest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation."

53 Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death."

54 Jesus, therefore, walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

55 ¶ And the Jew's passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem, before the passover, to purify themselves.

56 Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?

57 Now both the chief priests and the pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he were, he should show it, that they might take him.

Observe here, 1. How baneful and destructive evil counsel is, especially out of the mouths of leading men, and how soon embraced and followed. Caiaphas no sooner propounds the putting of Christ to death, but from that day forward they lie in wait to take him. The highpriests had satisfied their consciences, and now they make all possible speed to put their malicious designs and purposes in execution. Observe, 2. The prudential care and means which our Lord used for his own preservation: to avoid their fury, he withdraws himself privately into a place called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples. Learn, As Christ himself fled, so is it lawful for his servants to flee, when their life is conspired against by their bloody enemies, and the persecution is personal. Observe, 3. When the time was come that he was to expose himself, when the time of the passover drew near, in which he, being the true Paschal Lamb, was to be slain, to put an end to that type, he withdraws no more, but surrenders himself to the rage and fury of his enemies, and dies a shameful death for shameless sinners, as the next chapter more at large informs us.

CHAPTER XII.

THEN Jesus, six days before the passover, came to Bethany, Where Lazarus was, which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead.

The latter end of the foregoing chapter acquainted us with the prudential care of Christ in withdrawing from the fury of his enemies in and about Jerusalem, who were consulting his destruction: his time not being fully come, he gets out of the way of his persecutors: but now the passover being at hand, which was the time that this Lamb of God was to die as a sacrifice for the sins of the world, our Lord comes forth, first to Bethany, and then to Jerusalem, not fearing the teeth of his enemies, but with a fixed resolution to encounter death and danger for the salvation of his people. His example teacheth us, That although we are bound by all lawful means and prudential methods to prevent ourselves from the unjust violence of our persecutors, yet when God's time for our sufferings is come, and we evidently see that it is his will that we suffer, for his sake, we ought to set our faces very cheerfully towards it, and resign up ourselves to the wisdom and will of God. Thus did Christ here, chap. xi. 54. we find he withdrew from suffering, his hour not being then come: but now when the passover was nigh at hand, which was the time when he was to suffer, he sets his face towards Jerusalem, and withdraws no more.

2 There they made him a supper, and Martha served: But Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him.

3 Then took Mary a pound of ointment, of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair; and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

4 Then saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him, 5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6 This he said, not that he cared for the poor: but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

7 Thensaid Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this.

8 For the poor always ye have with you; but me ye have not always.

In these verses, an account is given of our Saviour's entertainment at Bethany after he had raised Lazarus. A supper is made for him, at which Martha served, and Lazarus sat with him, but Mary anoints Christ with precious ointment. Where note, 1. The action which this holy woman performed; she pours a box of precious ointment upon our Saviour's head, as he sat at meat, according to the custom of the eastern countries at their feasts. I do not find that any of the apostles were at thus much charge and cost to put honor upon our Saviour as this poor woman was. From whence learn, 1. That where strong love prevails in the heart, nothing is adjudged too dear for Christ, neither will it suffer itself to be out-shined by any examples. The weakest woman that strongly loves her Saviour will vie with the greatest apostle, and piously strive to express the fervour of her affection towards him. Observe, 2. How this action was resented and reflected upon by murmuring Judas, who valued this ointment at three hundred pence, and grudged the bestowing of it upon Christ. He accused this holy woman of needless prodigality. Lord! how doth a covetous heart think every thing too good for thee? He that sees a pious action performed, and seeks to lessen or undervalue it, shows himself possessed with a spirit of envy. Judas' invidious spirit makes him censure an action, which Christ highly approved. Hence learn, That men, who know not our hearts, may, through ignorance or prejudice, censure and condemn those actions which God doth commend, and will graciously reward. Happy was it for this poor woman, that she had a more righteous judge to pass sentence upon her actions than wicked Judas. Observe, 3. How readily our holy Lord vindicates this poor woman: she says nothing for herself, nor needs she, having such an advocate who gives the reason for her action: she did it for my burial. As kings and great persons were wont in those eastern countries, at their funerals, to be embalmed with odours and sweet perfumes, so, saith our Saviour, this woman, to declare her faith in me, as her King and Lord, doth with this box of ointment, as it were beforehand, embalm my body for its burial. True faith will put honor upon a crucified as well as a glorified Saviour. This holy woman accounts Christ worthy of all honor in his death, believing it would be a sweet smelling sacrifice unto God, and savour of life unto his people.

9 Much people of the Jews, therefore, knew that he was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead.

Observe here, It was not zeal, but curiosity, which brought these persons at this time to Christ; they had an itching desire to see Lazarus, to inquire after the truth of his death, and possibly after the state of the dead, and the condition that separated souls are in after death. Thus the miracles of Christ drew many followers of his person, who were never converted by his doctrine. It was the sin of many, when Christ was here, upon earth, that they flocked after him, rather out of curiosity than out of conscience, and chose rather to gaze upon his works, than to fall in love with the worker. The multitude here came to Bethany, not for "Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also."

10 ¶ But the chief priests consulted, that they might put Lazarus also to death;

11 Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

Observe here, 1. The unreasonableness of that rage and madness, which was found in the chief priests against Lazarus; "They consulted together how they might put Lazarus to death." But supposing that Christ had spoken blasphemy, in making himself equal with God, supposing that he had broken the sabbath, by curing the man that was born blind, on that day; yet what had Lazarus done, that he must be put to death? But from hence we learn, That such as have received special mercy and favor from Christ, or are made the instruments of his glory, must expect to be made the mark and the butt of malicious enemies. Christ had highly honored Lazarus, by raising him from the grave: and here there is a resolution against his life, whom Christ had thus highly honored: "The chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus to death also." Observe, 2. The cause why the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus to death; namely, "Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus." That is, many of the Jews seeing the miracle of Christ's raising Lazarus from the grave, were drawn thereby to believe in Jesus Christ; and this so enraged the chief priests against Lazarus, that they sought to put him to death. Learn hence, That nothing so engages the enemies of Christ, as the enlargement of his kingdom, and the sight of the number of believers daily increasing. This provokes the devil's wrath, and his servants' rage.

12 ¶ On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, 13 Took branches of palm-trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna, Blessed is the King of Israel, that cometh in the name of the Lord.

14 And Jesus, when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written, 15 Fear not, daughter of Sion; behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

16 These things understood not his disciples at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of them, and that they had done these things unto them.

Here we have recorded the carriage of the multitude towards our Saviour, when he came near the city of Jerusalem: they take palms in their hands, and go forth to meet him, and cast their garments on the ground before him to ride upon: yea, they do not only disrobe their backs, but expend their breath in joyful acclamations, and loud hosannas, wishing all manner of prosperity to their meek but mighty King. In this prince-like, yet poor and despicable pomp, doth our Saviour enter the famous city of Jerusalem. Lord! how far wast thou from affecting worldly greatness and grandeur? Thou despisest that glory which our hearts fondly admire: yet because Christ was a King, he would be proclaimed such, and have his kingdom confessed, and applauded, and blessed: yet, that it might appear that his kingdom was not of this world, he abandons all worldly magnificence.

17 The people, therefore, that were with him, when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.

18 For this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19 The pharisees, therefore, said among themselves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after him.

20 ¶ And there were certain Greeks among them, that came up to worship at the feast:

21 The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

22 Philip cometh and telleth Andrew; and again, Andrew and Philip told Jesus.

Observe here, 1. How the multitude at Jerusalem came forth to meet Christ, when he was making his public entry into the city, hearing the fame of his miracles; "For this cause the people also met him, for that they had heard that he had done this miracle." Observe, 2. How, amongst others who came forth to meet our Saviour, certain Greeks, or Gentile proselytes, who came up to worship in the outward court of the temple, apply themselves to Philip, that he would help them to a sight of Jesus. Sir, we would see Jesus. It is probable that this desire to see Christ, in these persons, proceeded from curiosity only. But if it did produce true faith in them, we may hence infer, that a spiritual sight of Christ, by the discerning eye of a believer's faith, is the most glorious, and consequently the most desirable sight in the world; and so must needs be, for it is a soul-ravishing, a soul-satisfying, a soul-transforming, and a soul-saving sight. This sight of Christ by faith will constrain a soul highly to admire, and greatly to commend him. It will incline a soul to choose him, and cleave unto him, and will set a soul a longing for the full fruition and final enjoyment of him. Luke ii. 29. Mine eyes have seen thy salvation; now let thy servant depart. Observe lastly, How the envious pharisees were galled, and cut to the heart, to see such a multitude, both of Jews and Greeks, crowding out of the city to meet Jesus in his triumphant entrance into the city. The pharisees said, behold the world is gone after him. Learn hence, That in the day of Christ's greatest solemnity and triumph, there will not be wanting some persons of such a cankered disposition, that they will neither rejoice themselves, nor can they endure that others should. This was the case of the wicked pharisees here.

23 ¶ And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25 He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal.

Observe here, 1. How our blessed Saviour entertains his followers with a discourse concerning his approaching death and suffering: The hour is coming that the Son of man shall be glorified. Observe, 2. How he arms his disciples against the scandal of the cross, by showing them the great benefit that would redound by his death unto all mankind; and this by a similitude taken from grain. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone. That is, as corn unsown, lodged in the barn, or laid up in the chamber, never multiplies nor increases: but sow it in the field, and bury it in the earth, and it multiplies and increases, and brings forth a plentiful crop; so if Christ had not died, he had remained what he was, the eternal Son of God, but he had had no church in the world; whereas his death and sufferings made him fructify: that brought a plentiful increase of exaltation to himself, and salvation to his people. Observe, 3. How plainly our Saviour dealt with his followers; he did not deceive them with a vain hope and expectation of temporal happiness, but tells them plainly, that all that will be his disciples, must prepare for sufferings, and not think their temporal life too dear to lay down for him when he calls them to it, this being the surest way to secure unto themselves life everlasting. “He that loveth his life shall lose it, but he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal.” Learn hence, That the surest way to attain eternal life is cheerfully to lay down our temporal life, when the glory of Christ, and the honor of religion, requires it at our hand.

26 If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor.

That is, “If any man assumes the title, and enters into the sacred engagement of being Christ's servant, let his conversation correspond with his profession, and let him be willing to follow me in the thorny path of affliction and sufferings from this assurance, That all his grievous sufferings shall end in eternal joys: “Where I am there shall my servant be, and him will my Father honor.” Learn hence, 1. That all that will be Christ's servants, must be his followers: they must obey his doctrine, and imitate his example. 2. That Christ's servants must not expect better usage at the hand of an unknown world, than he their master met with before them. 3. That such as serve Christ by following of him, shall at death see him as he is, and be with him where he is: Where I am, there shall also my servant be. 4. That God will crown the fidelity and constancy of Christ's servants, with the highest dignity and honor: “If any man serve me, him will my father honor.”

27 Now is my soul troubled: and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour.

28 Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

Whilst our Saviour was thus preaching of his own death and sufferings, a natural horror of his approaching passion (though such as was without sin) seizes upon him; his Father giving him a taste of that wrath which he was to undergo upon the cross for our sins. Hereupon he betakes himself to prayer, Father, save me from this hour; this was the harmless inclination of his sinless nature, which abhorred lying under wrath, and therefore prays against it; yet (as it were) recalling himself, he submits to what his office, as our surety, required of him, and prays again unto his Father to dispose of him as may most and best conduce to the purposes of his glory; Father, glorify thy name. Learn hence, 1. That mere trouble is no sin; Christ's soul was troubled; Christianity doth not make men senseless; grace introduceth no stoical stupidity. 2. That fear of death, especially when accompanied with apprehensions of the wrath of God, is most perplexing, and soul amazing. My soul is troubled, and what shall I say? 3. No extremity of sufferings ought to discourage us from laying claim to that relation, which God stands in to us as a Father; Our Saviour, in the midst of his distress, calls God Father: Father, save me from this hour. 4. In the extremity of our sufferings, we may be importunate, but must not be peremptory in our prayers; as Christ in his agony prayed more earnestly, so may we in ours, but always submissively; “Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour.” 5. That our exemption from suffering may sometimes be inconsistent with the glory of God, Father, save me from this hour; Father, glorify thy name. Observe lastly, The Father's answer to the Son's prayers: “There came a voice from heaven, saying, I have glorified it, and will glorify it again.” That is, as God the Father had been already glorified in his Son's life, doctrine, and miracles; so he would farther glorify himself in his death, resurrection, and ascension; as also by the mission of the Holy Ghost, and the preaching of the gospel for the conversion of the Gentiles to the ends of the earth. Learn hence, That the whole work of Christ from the lowest degree of his humiliation, to the highest degree of his exaltation, was a glorifying of his Father; he glorified his Father by the doctrine which he taught, he glorified his Father by the miracles which he wrought, by the unspotted innocency of his life, and by his unparalleled suffering at his death; by his victorious resurrection from the grave, and by his triumphant ascension into heaven.

29 The people, therefore, that stood by and heard it, said that it thundered; others said, An angel spake to him.

30 Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes.

31 Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out.

32 And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

33 (This he said, signifying what death he should die.)

Observe here, 1. The way of God in speaking to his people by a voice in thunder for the greater declaration of his glory and majesty. Thunderings and lightnings usually attended the voice of God, even in consolations, and when he spake comfortably to his own servants. Oh! how dreadful and terrible then must the voice of God be to his enemies, when he shall come in flaming fire, to render vengeance to them! If there were such dread and terror, such thunderings and lightnings at the giving of the law: Lord! what will there be another day, when thou comest to punish the violation of that law! Observe, 2. The end why God the Father now spake with an audible voice to Christ his Son: it was for his consolation, and the people's confirmation. His soul being troubled, he stood in need, as Mediator, of comfort from his Father: and the people had here a farther and fuller confirmation of his being the promised and true Messiah, that so they might believe in him, This voice came not because of me: that is, not only or chiefly because of me, but to confirm your faith in the belief of this great truth, that I am the Son of God, by whom the Father hath glorified, and will further glorify his name. Observe, 3. Our Saviour declares a double effect and fruit of his death and passion. 1. The judgment of this world; "Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out." That is, my death will be the devil's overthrow; will bring down sin, and deliver the world from the tyranny and dominion of sin and Satan. Thence learn, 1. That Satan is the prince and ruler of all those who live in sin; not a prince by legal right, but by tyrannical usurpation. 2. That this usurper, Satan, will not quit his possession, unless he be cast out. 3. That Christ by his death has cast out Satan, dethroned him, and deprived him of his tyrannical usurpation. Now is the prince of this world cast out, that is, I will shortly by my death deliver the world from the slavery of sin, and dominion of Satan, and particularly from that idolatry, which the greatest part of the world was then in slavery under. The second effect and fruit of Christ's death which is here declared, is his drawing all men unto him: When I am lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me. There is a twofold lifting up of Christ: the first ignominious, when he was hung upon the cross; the second glorious in the preaching of the gospel: by this he draws all men unto him; that is, by the preaching of the gospel, he calls and invites all persons to himself; he offers the benefits of his death to all, and gathereth a church to himself out of the Gentiles as well as the Jewish world. Learn, 1. That all persons are naturally unwilling to come to Christ, they must be drawn. 2. That Christ meritoriously by his death, and instrumentally by the preaching of the gospel, draws sinners unto himself. 3. That it is not a few, or small number, but a very great number, consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, bond and free, persons of all nations, sexes, ages, and conditions, whom Christ draweth: not that all are effectually drawn to Christ, so as savingly to believe in him: but, by the preaching of the gospel, they are called and invited to him, and the benefits of his death are offered to them. Thus Christ being lifted up upon his cross, and on the pole of his gospel, draws all men unto him; that is, doth what is sufficient to prevail with all men to believe on him, and to render those that do not so, everlastingly inexcusable.

34 The people answered him, We have heard out of the law, that Christ abideth for ever: and how sayest thou, The Son of man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of man?

35 Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you; walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness, knoweth not whither he goeth.

36 While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light. These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide himself from them.

Observe here, 1. The objection which the Jews make against our Saviour's being the true Messiah. Their argument runs thus: "It was foretold under the law, that Christ or the Messiah abideth for ever; but thou sayest, the Son of man must be lifted up and die. How then canst thou be the promised Messiah?" The answer is, "In his state of humiliation unto death, he was lifted up; but, in his state of exaltation, he abideth for ever." Learn hence, that Christ's lifting up by death, and his abiding for ever, do very well consist together; for both are true of him, the one in his state of humiliation, the other in his state of exaltation. Observe 2. Our Saviour returns no answer to their cavilling objection, nor doth he undertake to demonstrate how his sufferings and his abiding for ever are consistent: but gives them intimations that he was the light of the world, and advises them, whilst they had the light with them, to prize it highly, and improve it faithfully. "Yet a little while is the light with you, walk whilst ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you." Note here, 1. A choice and singular privilege enjoyed; the light is with you, a personal light, Christ; a doctrinal light, the gospel; both these brought with them a light of knowledge, answering our darkness of ignorance; a light of grace and holiness, answering our darkness of sin, which we had brought upon ourselves; and a light of joy and comfort, answering the darkness of misery and horror, which we lay under by reason of our guilt. Note, 2. The time of enjoying this privilege limited: yet a little while is the light with you. The time of a people's enjoying the light and liberty of the gospel, is a limited time, it is a short time. Note, 3. A duty enjoined by Christ answerable to the privilege enjoyed by us; Walk whilst ye have the light. An uniform and constant course of holy walking, according to the rule of the gospel, is the indispensable duty and obligation of all those that enjoy the light and liberty of the gospel; namely, to walk according to the precepts and commands of the gospel, answerable to the privileges and prerogatives of the gospel, answerable to the helps and supplies of grace which the gospel affords, and answerable to the glorious hope and expectation which the gospel raises us unto. Note, 4. A danger threatened to the neglecters of this duty; lest darkness come upon you; namely a darkness of ignorance and judicial blindness, a darkness of error and seduction, a darkness of horror and despair, and the fatal and final darkness of death and hell; for all contempters of gospel-light, there is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever, where sin and torment run parallel; their torment makes them sin, and their sin feeds their torment.

37 ¶ But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him:

38 That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

39 Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again, 40 He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts: that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their hearts, and be converted, and I should heal them.

41 These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, and spake of him.

The place which our Evangelist alludes to, is Isa. vi. ver. 3. "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts, the whole earth is full of his glory." From whence a clear argument for Christ's divinity may be thus drawn. He whom Isaiah saw environed with seraphims, and praised as most holy by them, was the true and eternal God; for such acclamations belong to none but the great Jehovah, God blessed for evermore. But, says St. John, it was the glory of Christ that Isaiah saw in his vision, it was Christ whom he called, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts; therefore Christ is undoubtedly God, blessed for evermore. For the evangelist was not speaking of the Father, but the Son, and cites these words out of Isaiah; so that it was the glory of the second person that Isaiah saw and spake of, if the words of the Evangelist be of any credit. Besides, the angels are too holy to give acclamations belonging to God, to any but him that is God. Observe here, 1. The astonishing infidelity and unbelief of the Jews who heard our Saviour's doctrine, and were eye witnesses of his miracles; though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him. Let not the faithful ministers of Christ be discouraged, and over much dejected, at their want of success in dispensing the gospel, when they observe and consider the small success of our Saviour's own ministry in the hearts and lives of his hearers: yea though his ministry was accompanied with miracles, and though his miracles were many in number, mighty in nature, clear and obvious to sense, being wrought before their eyes, yet his ministry succeeded not, and his miracles prevailed not: Lord, what little success has the offer of Christ in the gospel met with, from the first original tender to this day! Obstinate infidelity, and cursed hypocrisy, draw more souls to hell than all the devils in hell. Observe, 2. How the present infidelity of these unbelieving Jews was long before foretold, and prophesied of, by the prophet Esaias, chap. liii. 1. Lord, who hath believed our report? That is our preaching, Where note, That Isaiah's complaint of the small success of his preaching, was a prophecy and prediction of the like success that Christ and his ministers should have under the gospel. Learn hence, That the gospel in all ages has met with more that have rejected it by unbelief, than have savingly entertained it by faith. Isaiah complained before Christ, and his apostles and ministers in every age since, that few have believed their reports. Observe, 3. That though the present unbelief of the obstinate Jews was long foretold by the prophets of God, yet the prophets' prediction was no cause of their unbelief, or that which laid them under an impossibility of believing: but the fault lay in their own obstinate will, with respect to which, by the just judgment of God, they were blinded and hardened, for their contempt of Christ the promised Messiah. When men close their eyes wilfully, and say, they will not see, it is just with God to close their eyes judicially, and say, they shall not see. He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts, &c. Learn hence, That the infidelity of the people is to be resolved into the perverseness of their own wills, and the evil disposition of their own hearts, not to any judicial blindness or obduration wrought by God upon them, antecedent to their own sin: God's act of hardening was consequential upon their sinning.

42 ¶ Nevertheless, among the chief rulers also many believed on him: but because of the pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue:

43 For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.

Observe, 1. That though the generality of the Jews were thus hardened under Christ's ministry and miracles, yet there were some, and those of the chief rank, even rulers, that did believe on him; that is, they were under strong and powerful convictions, that he was the true and expected Messias. Even in times and places where obstinacy and infidelity most prevail, the ministry of the word shall not be altogether without its fruit; Christ here had some, and those of the rulers too, who believed on him, when others under the same word were hardened; Nevertheless, among the chief rulers also, many believed on him. Observe, 2. That though many of the chief rulers had a secret belief, or an inward persuasion, that Christ was the promised and expected Messias, yet it was not sufficient to make them openly own and confess, and avow him to be such, for fear of excommunication from the pharisees; They did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue. Slavish fear of men, and suffering by them, has hindered many from believing on Christ, and kept more from an open owning and confessing of him. Because of the pharisees they did not confess him. Observe, 3. As the fear of suffering on the one hand, so the love of reputation on the other, kept them from owning and confessing Jesus to be the Christ; They loved the praise of men more than the praise of God; that is, they valued honor and applause from men, more than honoring and approving them. There is no greater snare to draw persons from their duty, than inordinate love and affection to their own credit and reputation. Oh! how often is the applause and commendation of men preferred before the testimony and approbation of God! Here was their snare; They loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.

44 ¶ Jesus cried, and said, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me.

45 And he that seeth me, seeth him that sent me.

46 I am come a light into the World, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness.

47 And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.

48 He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

49 For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak.

50 And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.

In these verses we have our Saviour's farewell sermon to the Jews, concerning his person, office and doctrine; as touching his person, he acquaints them with his divine nature, his oneness and equality with the Father; and accordingly challenges not only the assent, but also the obedience and adoration of their faith. "Jesus cried, saying, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me." That is, he that believeth on me, doth not believe on a mere man, but on him that is truly and really God, as well as man; and therefore he being true God, one in essence, and equal in power and glory, with the Father, their believing in him was believing in God the Father that sent him. Observe, 1. The argument which our Saviour uses, to prove that believers in Christ do believe in the Father: He that seeth me, seeth him that sent me. That is, "He that seeth me spiritually, and by faith, seeth my Father to be one with me in essence, though not in person; and he that seeth me in my miraculous works which I do, seeth him also that sent me, by whom I do these mighty works. Learn hence, That we do not see Christ aright with the eye of our faith, unless we see him, and believe him to be truly and really God; one with, and equal to the Father; He that seeth me, seeth in me him that sent me. Learn, 2. That the Father is not to be seen but in the Son; nor can believers know what the Father is, but by seeing what the Son is; and what they see the Son to be, that the Father is in him; For he that seeth me, seeth him that sent me. Observe, 3. The dreadful judgment which Christ denounces against all unbelievers; and such as reject him, by rejecting of his gospel; for though, at Christ's first coming, his errand was not to judge the world, but to save the world, that is, to offer the tenders of salvation to lost sinners; yet at his second coming he would judge them at the last day: when the word preached to them, and rejected by them, will give a judicial testimony against them. Learn hence, 1. That Christ and his doctrine are inseparable: to receive his doctrine, is to receive him; and to reject his doctrine is to reject him. 2. That such rejecters of Christ and the doctrine of the gospel, shall not escape the judgment of Christ at the great day. 3. That at the great day, were there no other witness against the rejecters of Christ and his gospel, but the word preached, yet that alone will be sufficient both for their conviction and condemnation. The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. The word is now the rule of living, and it shall be hereafter the rule of judging: now it is the rule by which we must live to Christ, then it shall be the rule by which we shall be judged of Christ. Observe, 4. The argument and reason which our Saviour produces, to prove that the word of God, and the doctrine of the gospel, slighted and rejected, should condemn sinners at the great day; namely, from the divine authority of his doctrine; for albeit his doctrine was his own, as he was true God, yet as man and as Mediator, it was not his own, but the Father's which sent him; so that his word and doctrine being divine, and the Father's as well as his (for he did not speak of himself, that is, of himself and alone without the Father) it is sufficient to judge and condemn all the rejecters and despisers of it.

Learn thence, 1. That though the doctrine of the gospel be Christ's own, as he is truly and really God, yet it was not his own as mere man, exclusive of the Father, who is one God with him, and who gave him a commission and instruction, as Mediator, to preach and publish the glad tidings of the gospel: For, says he, I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me gave me a commandment. 2. That the doctrine which Christ delivered by command from the Father, doth point out the way to eternal life, and will bring lost sinners thereunto, if they sincerely believe it and obey it: I know that his commandment is life everlasting. 3. That therefore sinners who reject the doctrine of Christ contained in the gospel do highly dishonor, offend and affront both the Father and Son, and bring upon themselves a just and righteous judgment; and expose themselves to unutterable and inevitable condemnation. "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."

CHAPTER XIII.

NOW, before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come, that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own, which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

2 And supper being ended, (the devil having now put it into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him.)

3 Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hand, and that he was come from God, and went to God;

In this chapter is recorded the history of our Saviour's washing his disciples' feet, an action full of humility and condescension, and propounded to his followers' imitation. The circumstance of the time is here noted, when this act was done; namely, at the feast of the passover, when the time of our Saviour's departure is at hand; and having constantly and immutably loved his own, he expresses the permanency of his love towards them to the end, by this action of his, in washing their feet. Here note, How Christ chose the time of the Jewish passover to suffer in, that he might prove himself to be the substance of that type; that he was the true paschal Lamb, who by the sacrifice of his death, did atone divine pleasure, and taketh away the sins of the world. Observe, 2. The means which the wisdom of God permitted, to bring the Lord of life to an ignominious death: and that was the treason and perfidiousness of one of his own disciples, Judas Iscariot.—Where observe, 1. The person betraying, Judas; Judas a professor and a preacher; Judas an apostle, being one of the twelve, whom Christ had chosen out of all the world to be his dearest friends. Can we wonder to find friends unfriendly or unfaithful towards us, when our Saviour had a traitor in his own house? Observe, 2. The heinousness of Judas' sin in betraying Christ; he betrayed Christ Jesus a man, Christ Jesus his Master, Christ Jesus his Maker! the first was murder, the second treason. Lord! it is no strange and uncommon thing for the vilest of sinners, and most horrid impieties, to be acted by persons making the most eminent profession of thy holy religion. Observe, 3. What hand the devil had in the sufferings of our Saviour: he put it into Judas' heart to betray Christ, that is, he did suggest and inject such thoughts into his mind, which Judas instantly closed with. The devil, being a spirit, has a quick access to our spirits, and can instil his suggestions into them. As Christ did breathe upon his disciples, and they received the Holy Ghost, and were filled with the Spirit; so satan breathes filthy suggestions into the spirits of men, and fills them with all manner of wickedness, even with the spirit of hell itself. "The devil put it into the heart of Judas to betray him."

4 He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments, and took a towel, and girded himself.

5 After that he poureth water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

Observe here, The admirable humility and great self-denial of our Lord and Master: he arises from supper, whilst his disciples sat still, and he that came in the form of a servant, performs all the offices of the meanest servant to his disciples; he lays aside his supper garments, he girds himself with a towel, pours water into a bason, and begins to wash and wipe their feet, which lay out behind them, as they leaned at the table, all which was a most servile employment. Learn hence, That the wonderful humility of Christ inclined him to do the meanest office of service unto his people, even to become a servant to them in the day of his humiliation; and though now glorified in heaven, he retains the same compassionate heart towards them as when here on earth; hereby instructing us, that it is our duty in whatever station Providence shall place us in the world, to stoop to the lowest offices of love and service towards our fellow-brethren.—Lord! thou hast left the most amazing instance of self-denial for our encouragement and example. Quest. But how far doth this example bind us? Ans. It does not oblige to the individual act, but to follow the reason of the example; that is, after Christ's example, we ought to be ready to perform the lowest and meanest offices of love and service to one another.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter saith unto him, Lord, dost thou wash my feet?

7 Jesus answered, and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now: but thou shalt know hereafter.

8 Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet: Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me.

9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

10 Jesus saith unto him, He that is washed needeth not, save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit : and ye are clean but not all.

11 For he knew who should betray him : therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

Observe here, 1. How Simon Peter refuses to admit of such a condescending act from Christ, his Lord and Master, as the washing of his feet. Lord ! thou shalt never wash my feet : it is a sinful humility to refuse the offered favors of Christ, because we are unworthy to receive them. Though we are not worthy of Christ and of his love ; yet Christ is worthy of us and of our faith. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's reply to Peter's refusal. 1. He tells him, That there was more in it than the bare act of washing did at first sight import, and that he should know hereafter what he did not understand now. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." Learn hence, 1. That the servants of God themselves are oftentimes much to seek, and cannot apprehend and understand at present the actings and dealings of God with them : they understand not either the intent or the even of God's dispensations. 2. That although God's dealings with his children and people are for a while in the dark, and are not presently made known ; yet there will come a time for the clearing and evidencing of them, when they shall understand that all his dispensations were in mercy to them. The second part of our Saviour's reply to St. Peter follows, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me ; as if Christ had said, "Peter, this external act of mine in washing thy feet, doth signify something farther, and imports my washing of thy soul from the guilt and defilement of sin, without which thou canst neither have interest in me, nor communion with me." Learn hence, 1. That so universal is the pollution of sin, that every soul stands need of washing. 2. That Christ washeth all that have a part and interest in him, both from the guilt and pollution of all their sins. Observe, 3. That St. Peter now understanding better what was meant by this outward washing : namely, that it did signify and represent the cleansing of the soul from the defilement of sin ; he is so far from refusing that Christ should wash his feet, that he offers his hands and head, and all to be washed by him ; Lord, not my feet only, &c. Learn hence, That so thoroughly sensible are the saints of the filthiness and pollution of sin ; that they desire nothing more than an inward, thorough, and prevailing purification of their whole man, by the blood and Spirit of the Lord Jesus. Observe, 4. Our Saviour's reply to St. Peter's last request, He that is washed, needeth not, save to wash his feet ; plainly alluding to the custom of those countries, where going abroad barefoot, or with thin sandals, covering only a small part of their feet, they had frequent occasion to wash their feet, but need not to wash their whole bodies ; in like manner, the saints and servants of God who are already washed and cleansed by the blood of Christ from the guilt of their sins, and have a real work of renovation and sanctification begun in them by the Spirit of Christ, they ought to be daily purging and purifying their affections and actions, and laboring daily after further measures and degrees of sanctification. Learn hence, 1. That the holiest, the wisest, and the best of saints, whilst here in a world of temptation, do stand in need of a daily washing by repentance, and according to their renewed and repeated acts of sin. 2. That all justified persons are in God's account clean persons ; Ye are clean, but not all ; that is you are justified and pardoned, sanctified and cleansed, all of you, excepting Judas, whose heart was known to Christ, though his hypocrisy was hid from the disciples.

12 So, after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was sat down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you :

13 Ye call me Master and Lord : and ye say well, for so I am, 14 If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

15 For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

16 Verily, verily. I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord ; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him.

In these words our Saviour declares to his disciples his intention and design in washing of their feet ; namely, to teach them, by his example, the duty of humility : that as he had performed that act of abasement towards them, so should they be ready to perform all offices of love and humble condescension one towards another : "Behold, I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done unto you." Learn thence, That humility and mutual condescension amongst the members and ministers of Jesus Christ, is a most necessary grace and duty, which the Son of God not only taught by his doctrine, but recommended and enforced by his example. Observe farther, The argument which Christ makes use of to press the imitation of his example upon them ; and that is drawn from the titles given to him by his disciples ; Ye call me Master, and Lord, and so I am. Now servants ought to imitate their masters, and subjects to obey their Lord and King. Christ is a Master to teach and direct : a Lord to govern and protect. As he is a Master, we are to learn in his school : as he is a Lord, we are to serve in his house : he must be submitted to as a Prince, as well as relied upon as a Saviour. It is in vain to expect salvation from him, if we do not yield subjection to him. Another argument which our Lord makes use of to press his disciples to imitate his example, is drawn from the dignity and superiority over them : "The servant is not greater than his Lord." As if Christ had said, "Though you, my disciples, are to have a very high and honorable station in the gospel-church, yet let not this swell you with pride, but be you mutually condescending to each other, remembering you are yet but servants to myself, and ought to be so to one another, and the servant is no greater than his Lord." Learn hence, 1. That whatever dignity Christ confers upon his servants and officers, yet he is over them all, superior to them, and above them. 2. That the consideration of Christ's dignity, and his ministers' meanness, ought to keep their minds humble and lowly, and far from affecting superiority over their brethren; "The servant is not greater than his Lord; nor he that is sent, greater than he that sent me."

17 If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

Our Lord here intimates unto us these two things: 1. The necessity of knowledge, in order unto practice. 2. The necessity of practice, in order unto happiness. A man may know the will of God indeed, and not do it; but he can never do the will of God (acceptably) and not know it. The knowledge of God's will and our duty, is necessary to the practice of it. The knowledge of our duty, and the practice of it, may be and too often are separated; but the practice of religion, and doing what we know to be our duty, is the only way to true happiness. Learn thence, 1. That Christ doth not approve of a blind obedience in his people, but requires that their practice and obedience be founded upon understanding and knowledge. 2. That the first care of those that will be Christ's disciples and followers must be this, with all seriousness to apply themselves to the knowledge of their Master's will. 3. That next to the knowledge of our duty, our first and chief care must be, to practise every thing that we understand and know to be our duty. That a right knowledge and practice of our duty, will certainly make us happy: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

18 ¶ I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the scripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me.

If the choosing spoken of here be understood of eternal election, a choosing to everlasting life, then it affords a strong argument to prove Christ to be God: thus, he that is the author of eternal election, is God; but Christ is such; "I know whom I have chosen." Consider Christ as God, so we are chosen by him; consider him as Mediator, and so we are chosen in him." If the choosing here be meant of choosing to the work of the apostleship, then our Saviour tells his disciples, that it need not seem strange to them, that he chose one to be an apostle, whom he knew would prove a traitor; for hereby that scripture prophecy, Psalm xlii. 9. would be fulfilled: "He that eateth bread with me, hath lifted up his heel against me;" which though it was literally spoken of Achitophel's treachery against David, yet was it prophetically spoken of Judas's treason against Christ; and the expression of "lifting up the heel," is metaphorical, taken from a fed beast, that kicks against his master. Learn hence, That Christ did, as his followers do, daily suffer, not only from open enemies, but from bosom and familiar friends. Lord! how many are there in the world, who by profession lift up their hand unto thee, who yet by reason of rebellion lift up their heel against thee!

19 Now, I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he.

Here another argument occurs, to prove the divinity of our blessed Saviour, from his foreknowledge of Judas's treason! The person who, the time when, and the place where were all known to Christ; "I tell you before it come to pass." The argument lies thus: he that foresaw the future actions of men, and infallibly foreknew the future events and issues of things, is certainly God; but Christ did this, therefore he is really God. And he tells us here, That for this very reason he foretold now the treason of Judas: "Now I tell you before, that when it comes to pass, ye may believe that I am he." What he doth He mean? What He could foretell so many things to come, which did not depend upon necessary, but contingent causes only! This He was not a mere man surely, for he knows not what will be done on the morrow; but must be real God, because he knew all things, not by revelation, as the prophets knew things to come, but by immediate inspection, and simple intuition: so that we may say with Peter, "Lord thou knowest all things;" because thou "knowest all things," thou art God.

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send, receiveth me: and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me.

Let his apostles should think that for the treachery of one of them, they should all become odious and abominable to the world, our Saviour encourages and gives them an assurance, that there should be those that should receive them, and that he would take it as kindly as if they received himself: "He that receiveth you, receiveth me." Learn hence, That it is a sweet encouragement to the ministers of Christ unto a faithful discharge of their duty, that Christ and the Father account that the respect paid to the ministers of the gospel, is paid to themselves: and on the contrary, that all the contempt cast upon them, reflects upon themselves: He that receiveth you, receiveth me: and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me."

21 When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, That one of you shall betray me.

22 Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake.

Oh what an astonishing word was this, "One shall betray men!" one of "my disciples" shall betray me! yea, "One of you," my disciples and apostles, shall do it! well might they look one upon another with sorrow and amazement, to hear that their master should die, that he should die by treason, and that the traitor should be one of themselves; yet do they not censure one another, but suspect themselves, saying, Master is it I? not, Master, is it Judas? Learn hence, 1. That it is possible for secret wickedness to lurk, yea, for the greatest villany to lodge in the hearts of professors, in whose conversation appeareth nothing that may give a just suspicion to others. Learn, 2. That it is both the duty and property of the disciples of Christ, to have so much candour and brotherly love, as not rashly to censure, and judge one another, but to hope the best of others, and to fear the worst of themselves.

23 Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom, one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved.

24 Simon Peter, therefore, beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spoke.

25 He then lying on Jesus' breast, saith unto him, Lord, who is it?

26 Jesus answered, He it is to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

27 And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest do quickly.

28 Now, no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast: or, That he should give something to the poor.

30 He then, having received the sop, went immediately out: and it was night.

Observe here, 1. The character given of St. John the beloved disciple: he leaned on Christ's bosom: that is, he had most intimate converse with Christ, one whom Christ treated with greater freedom and familiarity than the rest, and one that knew more of his heart than most of his disciples. We commonly call a very near friend, a bosom friend. Learn, That although Christ had an endeared love for all his disciples and followers, yet there were degrees in Christ's own love, and he had a familiarity with some disciples beyond others, whilst he was here upon earth, even as now in heaven, though his heart be towards all his children here on earth, yet he is pleased to let out more kind manifestations of himself, and more sensible evidences of his love towards some than towards others. John was the disciple that lay in Jesus' bosom. Observe, 2. The way which our Saviour took to discover Judas to the rest of his disciples, not by naming him, but by giving him a sop; partly because he would not give Judas any provocation by mentioning his name, and partly because the sign of eating the sop was most agreeable to the prophetic prediction, Ps. xli. 9. "My own familiar friend, who did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me." Observe, 3. The time when Judas received the sop, and the consequence that followed upon his receiving of it; it was at that time when he had, with an unbelieving heart, and an unthankful spirit, been eating the passover, which was a type of Christ. Now "Satan enters into him;" that is, takes fuller possession of him, and he gives himself up more freely and fully to the devil's conduct and suggestion. Satan gets possession of wicked men gradually and by degrees; not all at once; the only way to be safe is to resist the beginnings of sin; for, when Satan once gets footing, it is hard to prevent a more full possession. Observe, 4. The place where Judas now was, namely, at Bethany, some miles from Jerusalem, and it was now night; yet so intent was he upon the devil's work, that away he trudges to Jerusalem, and at that time of night repairs to the high priests, and sells his Saviour into their hands. O what a warmth and zeal was here in the devil's cause! Men given over by God, and possessed by Satan, are so restless and unwearied in sin, that neither by day nor by night can they cease from the contrivance and execution of it.

31 ¶ Therefore when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in him.

32 If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

Observe here, 1. Our blessed Lord calls his death his glory; "Now is the Son of Man glorified;" that is, now is the time at hand when I am to die, and shall by my death finish the work of man's redemption, and thereby eminently glorify God. God the Father was eminently glorified in the obedience and sufferings of his dear and only Son. It is true that the sufferings of Christ were ignominious in themselves, yet were they the way to his own glory, and his Father's also; for by them he redeemed a lost world, trampled upon Satan, triumphed over sin; and the Father was exceedingly glorified by the Son's giving obedience to his will, and so cheerfully suffering: "Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in him."

33 Little children, yet a little while I am with you, Ye shall seek me; and, as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say to you.

Observe here, An endearing appellation, a sweet title given by Christ to his disciples, "Little children;" intimating that tender affection which he bears unto them, though now upon the point of departing from them. Learn thence, That whatever Christ's dealings are or may be with his people, in respect of his removing or withdrawing from them, yet he still retains the relation of a Father to them, and will in his absence from them, exercise such a care over them, as parents have of their young and tender children; so much doth the title of little children imply and import. Observe farther, The plain intimation which our Saviour gives to his disciples of his death being very nigh, (for it was the very next day) he tells them he is going to heaven; "and whither he went, they could not come;" that is, not presently; they should follow him, their forerunner, afterwards; but at present he had a great deal of work for them to do, though his own work was done; and till they had finished their work, "whither he went they could not come." Learn hence, That though it be rest which the saints may lawfully desire, an everlasting rest with Christ in glory, yet must they not refuse to labor, whilst their Lord will have it so. Till their work be done, whither Christ is gone they cannot come: "Ye shall seek me; but whither I go," at present "ye cannot come."

34 A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

Our Saviour having mentioned his departure from his disciples in the former verse; "I go away, and, whither I go ye cannot come:" in this and the following verses, he gives them a strict charge, that in his absence they should love one another. This he calls a "new commandment:" not that it was new in regard of institution, but of restitution: not new in regard of the substance of it, for it was a branch of the law of nature, and a known precept of the Jewish religion; but he calls it a new commandment, 1. Because purged from the cold corrupt glosses of the pharisees, who had limited this duty of love, and confined it to their own countrymen; whereas Christ enlarges the object, and obliges his disciples to love all mankind, even their very enemies. 2. Because this duty of love was so greatly advanced and heightened by our Saviour, as to the measures and degrees of it, even to the laying down of our lives one for another. 3. It is called a new commandment, because urged from a new motive, and enforced by a new example, "As I have loved you," that ye also love one another. Never was this duty so effectually taught, so mightily encouraged, so much urged and insisted upon, by any teacher, as our Saviour; and never was there such an example given of it as his own. 4. It is a new commandment, because with the rest it was never to wax old; but to be always fresh in the memory and practice of Christ's disciples to the end of the world.

35 By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.

To recommend the foregoing duty of loving one another, with the greater advantage, our Saviour tells us here, that it will be the best evidence of our relation to him as sincere disciples: By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples. The disciples of John were known by the austerity of their lives, the disciples of the pharisees by their habit and separation from other men. Christ will have his disciples known by their profound affection to each other, which in the primitive times was so conspicuous, that the very heathens did cry out and say, See how the christians love one another! Here observe, 1. Our Saviour doth not say, By this men shall conjecture and guess that you belong to me, as being my disciples, but they shall certainly know it. 2. He doth not say, By this shall ye know yourselves to be my disciples, and one another to be so; but by this shall all others know it as well as yourselves. 3. He doth not say, By this shall all men know that ye look like my disciples, but that you are indeed what you pretend to be, namely, by your loving one another. 4. Christ doth not say, by this shall the world know that ye are my disciples; namely, by your assembling often together in my house of prayer, by your frequent fastings, by your reading the scriptures daily, by your hearing sermons weekly, by your receiving sacraments monthly; all these put together, will be no sufficient evidence of your discipleship, if you keep up a secret grudge in your hearts one against another; but "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another. Learn hence, That one of the best proofs and evidences we can have of our relation to Christ, as his sincere disciples, is a hearty love and good will one towards another.

36 ¶ Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards.

37 Peter said unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake.

38 Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow until thou hast denied me thrice.

Here we find Peter reflecting upon what our Saviour had said just before, verse 33. "Whither I go, ye cannot come:" he is inquisitive to know of Christ whither he went. Our Lord tells him that for the present he could not follow him, but should hereafter; he was not yet strong enough to suffer for him, as he should and did afterwards. St. Peter, grieved at this, rashly resolves to follow him, though he should die for his sake. Christ advises him not to be over confident of his own strength and standing, for he should deny him thrice, within the time of cock crowing. Observe here, 1. How that fond conceit, which our Lord's disciples had of his temporal kingdom here in this world, did abide and continue with them to the very last; for when Christ spake of leaving them, by ascending into heaven, Peter understands him of a removal that was earthly, from one place to another, whereas Christ intended it of a removal from earth to heaven. The opinion, that the Messiah was to be a temporal prince, and that his kingdom should be of this world, was so deeply rooted in the minds of the Jews, that they stumble at it fatally; and Christ's own disciples had so drank in the notion, that they wonder to hear Christ say, that he is going from them, and that whither he goes they cannot come. Observe, 2. That Christ's disciples shall certainly follow their Master afterwards, and be for ever with the Lord; but they must wait their Lord's time, and finish their Lord's work; they must patiently wait for their change, and not peevishly wish for it; for, though they do not follow Christ presently to heaven they shall follow him afterwards. Observe, 3. The greatness of St. Peter's self confidence: I will lay down my life for thy sake. Good man! he resolved honestly, but too, too much in his own strength. Little, O little did he think what a fever he should be in the wind of temptation, if once God left him to the power and prevalency of his own fears! The holiest of men knows not his own strength, till temptation brings him to the trial. Observe lastly, How detestable St. Peter's presumption and self-confidence was to Christ, and how fatal and pernicious to himself; Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? As if Christ had said, "Peter, thou savest more than thou canst do; thine own strength will fail thee, and thy self confidence deceive thee; I know thy heart better than thou dost thyself; and I foresee, that "before the cock crows thou shalt deny me thrice." Thence learn, that none are so near falling, as those that are most confident of their own standing.

CHAPTER XIV.

LET not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.

2 In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you.

3 And if I go and prepare a place for you (I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also.

4 And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

Our blessed Saviour in the foregoing chapter, having acquainted his disciples with his approaching death, by the treachery of Judas, their hearts were thereupon overwhelmed with grief and trouble. Accordingly in this chapter, by sundry arguments, he comforts his disciples against the perplexity of their fears and sorrows. Observe, 1. How Christ addresses himself to his disciples in a very endearing and affectionate manner; "Let not your hearts be troubled." Whence learn, 1. That the best and holiest of God's children and servants, whilst here in an imperfect state, are subject to desponding, and disquieting, and distrusting fears. 2. That no work is more delightful to our Saviour, than to comfort the troubled and perplexed spirits of his servants. Observe, 2. The remedy Christ prescribes for the calming their present fears, and for arming them against future troubles, and that is, Faith in the Father and in himself: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Hence learn, 1. That God is the supreme object of faith: his unchangeable love and faithfulness, with his infinite power in the accomplishing of his promises, is the security of believers. Learn, 2. That Christ, as Mediator between God and guilty creatures, is the immediate object of our faith. Learn, 3. That Christ's being the true and proper object of our faith is a proof of his being truly and really God. Christ doth here assert his own deity in the substance of the command, in making himself an object of faith in conjunction with God the Father: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Observe next, The arguments of consolation which Christ propounds for the support of his disciples, under the sorrow which they had conceived for his approaching departure. 1. He tells them, That heaven, whither he was now going, was his father's house, a place of happiness, not designed for himself alone, but for many more to enjoy perpetual rest and abode in, as in everlasting mansions: "In my Father's house are many mansions." Heaven is God's house, in which he will freely converse with his domestics, his children and servants, and they shall enjoy full glory there, as in a quiet and capacious habitation. A second ground of comfort is, that he assures them, he will come again and receive them to himself, that they may live together with him in the heavenly mansions. This promise Christ makes good to his saints, partly at the day of their death, and perfectly at the day of judgment, when he shall make one errand for all, and take up all his children to himself, and make them completely happy, both in soul and body, with himself. Learn hence, That though Christ has removed his bodily presence from his friends on earth, yet his love to them is not ceased, nor will he rest satisfied till he and they meet again, eternally to solace themselves in each other's company: "I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." A third argument for consolation is, that notwithstanding Christ was to leave them, yet they knew whither he went: namely, to heaven, and which was the way thither; "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." It contributes much to the comfort of believers, as to know God and heaven, so to know the way that leads thither, that so they may be armed against all the difficulties of that way.

5 Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way?

6 Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me.

Observe here, 1. How Thomas, and probably divers others of the apostles, notwithstanding all that Christ had said to the contrary, did still dream of a temporal kingdom, and supposed him to speak of some earthly palace which he was going to, and therefore he tells our Saviour, he knew not whither he was going; but Christ meaning not a temporal but a heavenly kingdom, tells them that if they intended to follow him, and be with him in heaven, he himself was the only way thither; "I am the way, and the truth, and the life:" that is, I am the true and living way to the Father; And; "no man cometh to the Father, but by me!" that is, no man can have any access to God by prayer, or any other act of religious worship here on earth, or any access to God in heaven, but by me, as Mediator. As if Christ had said, "I am the Author of the way that leadeth unto life, that Teacher of the truth which directs to it, and the Giver of that life which is to be obtained by walking in it: I am the way, and the truth, and the life."

7 If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him.

8 Philip saith unto him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us.

9 Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father?

10 Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father, that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

11 Believe me that I am in the Father; and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake.

Observe here, 1. What a gross conception the apostles had, and St. Philip in particular, of the divine nature and being, as if God the Father could be seen with mortal eyes. "Shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us. It is not easy to determine what degrees of ignorance may consist with saving grace; doubtless, as the degrees of revelation and means of knowledge are more or less, so a person's ignorance is more or less excusable before God. Observe, 2. How meekly our Saviour reproves their ignorance, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?" and then proceeds to instruct them in; and further acquaint them with the oneness of himself with the Father, and the personal union of the divine and human nature in himself. Learn hence, That the Father being invisible in his essence, to know or see him with mortal bodily eyes is impossible; but he was seen in his Son, who is the express image of the Father, being one in essence with him, and one in operation also:—"He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father."

12 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do: because I go unto my Father.

Here Christ gives his disciples a promise of enduring them with power after his departure to work miracles, in some respects greater than what he wrought himself: not greater in regard of the manner, for he wrought by his own power, and they wrought all in his name, but greater in regard of the matter of them; particularly, their speaking with strange tongues, their giving the Holy Ghost by laying on of hands, their healing diseases by the very shadow of the bodies, but especially by their wonderful conversion of the Gentiles from idolatry to serve the living God. When St. Peter converted three thousand at one sermon, then Christ made good his promise, the disciple at that time appeared to be above his Master; Christ all this time was angling for a few fishes, and caught but an hundred and twenty, Acts i. 15. whilst Peter comes with his drag net, and catches three thousand at one cast; the reason might be because Christ was not properly to be the builder, but the foundation itself. He subjoins the reason of all this: "Because I go unto my Father; that is, to send down, and pour forth upon you my apostles, the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost; which was the great cause of the apostles' miraculous operations. Hence learn, That it pleased the wisdom of Christ to do greater things by the hands of his weak servants here in the world, than he was pleased to do himself, who was God over all blessed for evermore.

13 And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

No. 27.

14 If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

In these words our Saviour produces another argument to quiet his disciples' hearts under their perplexity and trouble for the loss of his bodily presence; he assures them, that whatever comforts they enjoyed by his presence, they shall obtain by their prayers. Observe here, 1. The qualification requisite in prayer; we must pray in Christ's name, that is, for the sake of his merits and mediation, in obedience to God's command, and with an eye to his glory, and for things agreeable to his will, and for things which his wisdom sees good for us. To pray in Christ's name, is more than to name Christ in prayer. It implies three things; 1. To look up unto Christ as having purchased for us this privilege, that we may pray; for it is by the blood of Christ that we draw near to God, and that a throne of grace is open for us. 2. To pray in the name of Christ, is to pray in the strength of Christ, and by the assistance of the Holy Spirit of Christ. 3. To pray in the name of Christ, is to pray in the virtue of the present mediation of Christ: believing that what we ask on earth, Christ obtains in heaven. To pray thus is no easy matter: yet unless we do pray thus, we do not pray at all. Observe, 2. The promise made to such prayers; "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do;" he saith not, that will my Father do; but that will I do, to testify his divine power and oneness with the Father. This evidently proves him to be God. Observe, 3. The repetition of the promise for the further confirmation of it: "If ye will ask any thing in my name, I will do it;" The promise is doubled for the confirmation of it, that so we might be free from all fears and doubts of being heard, when we put up our prayers to God, in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, for things agreeable to his will. Learn hence, That although the children of God have sometimes many jealousies and fears arising in their minds concerning the answer of their prayers, yet they are altogether groundless; for it is most certain their desires shall be granted them, so far as the wisdom of God sees fit and convenient for them; and for that reason our Saviour redoubles the promise: "If ye will ask any thing in my name, I will do it."

15 ¶ If ye love me, keep my commandments.

In these words our Saviour implicitly reproves his disciples for their fond way of expressing their love to him, by doating upon his bodily presence, and sorrowing immoderately for his absence, and he expressly warns them to evidence their love to him by their obedience to his commands; "If ye love me, keep my commandments. Where observe, Christ requires an obedient love, and loving obedience.—Love without obedience is but dissimulation; obedience without love is but drudgery and slavery. Such a love as produces obedience, must be a dutiful love; a love of reverence and honor to him as a commander, and an operative and working love, a labor of love, as the apostle calls it: Not waiters, but workers, are the best servants in Christ's esteem. And such an obedience as is the product of love, will be a willing, easy, and cheerful obedience, a pleasing and an acceptable obedience, a constant and abiding obedience: all other motives without love are servile and base, and beget in us the drudgery of a slave, but not the duty of a son: He that fears God only, is afraid of smarting; but he that loves God is afraid of offending. Learn hence, That the best and surest evidence we can have of our love to the Lord Jesus Christ, is an humble, cheerful, universal, and persevering obedience to his commands: "Keep my commandments;" that is, endeavour without reserve; for though we cannot keep the commandments to a just satisfaction, yet we may perform them to a gracious acceptance. And the word My, my commandments, is a sweetening and alleviating word.—Moses' law, an unsupportable load, but Christ's law an easy burden. The law from Sinai, dreadful: the law from Zion, gracious; it pardons weakness, and accepts sincerity.

16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;

17 Even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

Christ comforteth his disciples here, with a promise of the mission of the Holy Spirit, to supply the want of his bodily presence. Where observe, 1. The procurer of this blessing, and that is Christ, by his prevailing prayer, and powerful intercession; "I will pray;" it runs in the future tense; and so it is a promise of Christ's continual intercession. As long as Christ is in heaven, a christian shall not want a supply of comfort and consolation here on earth. Observe, 2. The author and donor of the blessing, and that is, God himself, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give." The Father, that is my Father, your Father, and he that is the Father of comfort and consolation: "I will pray, and he will give." It is an expression of great assurance. Observe, 3. The blessing itself; the Holy Ghost, called here; "Another Comforter." Where note, 1. The divinity of the Holy Ghost; he that will supply the comforts of Christ's presence must be as Christ is, the God of all comfort. Note, 2. The person of the Holy Ghost: he is a divine person, not a divine quality or operation; then we might call him a comfort, but not a comforter. Note, 3. The office and employment of the Holy Ghost; "He is a comforter;" that is an advocate and intercessor to sue for us; an encourager, and one that administers consolation to us; and as he is an Holy Spirit, so are his comforts holy comforts. Observe, 4. The stability of this blessing; "That he may abide with you for ever;" The best of our outward comforts are sudden flashes, not lasting flames; but the consolations of the Holy Spirit are strong consolations, they are abounding consolations, and everlasting consolations; especially the Holy Spirit will be the comforter of good men in the day of affliction, in the day of temptation, and at the hour of death, when all other comforts flag and fail.—Observe lastly, The additional title given to the Holy Ghost, he is called "the Spirit of truth;" partly in opposition to satan, who is called a lying spirit, partly because he teacheth and revealeth the truth, leadeth his people into all truth, and sealeth and confirmeth truth to the souls of believers; he is the spirit of truth, both in his essence and his operations. Learn hence, That as the Holy Spirit is true in his essence and nature, so is he true in his office as a comforter to good men: all his consolations being real and solid, and free from imposture and delusion.

18 I will not leave you comfortless: I will come unto you.

Here observe, 1. The condition which the disciples were in upon the account of Christ's removal from them, and that was sad and comfortless; fatherless or orphans, as the word signifies. Learn hence, That Christ's departure, or the loss of his gracious presence, is very sad and comfortless to a pious soul; well might the disciples here lament and mourn upon the occasion of Christ's leaving of them, seeing thereby they should be deprived of his doctrine and instructions, of his advice and counsel, and of the benefit of his holy and instructive example. Observe, 2. The care of Christ for his disciples in reference to this their sad and disconsolate condition: "He would not leave them comfortless." Where note, He doth not say, I will not suffer you to be comfortless, but I will not leave you so; that is, he will not desert or disown them in their comfortless condition; he will not leave them, either in point of affection, or in point of activity; he will not cease to love them, nor cease to bestir himself for them.—Learn hence, That Christ will not leave his friends in a sad and comfortless state and condition, though for a time they may be brought into it: "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come unto you." Christ coming here unto them, is to be understood of his coming to them by his Holy Spirit; in the gifts of it, in the graces of it, and in the comforts of it: thus he did not long leave them comfortless, but at the feast of Pentecost came to them again.

19 Yet a little while and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me; because I live, ye shall live also.

20 At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you.

Here our Saviour foretels his approaching death, that within a little time the men of the world should see him no more; for though he rose again, the world saw him no more after his death: for we read of no appearance of him after his resurrection to any, but to his disciples only. Indeed the hour is coming when the world shall see him again; namely, at the day of judgment, when every eye shall behold him with terror and amazement. Observe farther, The consolation given to his disciples, "Ye shall see me; and because I live, ye shall live also." Because I am raised from the grave, I will quicken your dead bodies in the grave, and ye shall live also; and as I live by my ascension into heaven, so shall you my disciples live a life of grace here, and a life of glory with myself hereafter. Learn hence, That a believer's spiritual life is derived from Christ, who, by his spirit, communicates a quickening virtue to all his members; "Because he lives, they shall live also." See how Christ binds up their life together with his own! As if he had said, "Whilst there is vital sap in the root, you that are branches in me shall not wither and die." Observe, lastly, A farther privilege insured to believers after Christ's ascension, and the spirit's mission; they should more perfectly understand the essential union betwixt Christ and the Father, and the mystical union betwixt Christ and his members! "At that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, &c. The knowledge which the saints now have of the mysterious and mystical union, is but dark and imperfect; but in heaven they shall understand these things clearly; then and there the essential union of Christ and his Father, and the mystical union between Christ and believers, will be more clearly understood, than we are capable to understand them in this our imperfect state.

21 He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

Our blessed Saviour in these words repeats what he had before enjoined at verse 15, namely, to evidence the sincerity of our love to him, by the universality of our obedience to his commands: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Where note, 1. The necessity of knowledge in order unto practice. 2. The necessity of practice in order unto happiness. We must first have Christ's commandments, before we can keep them: we must have them in our understandings and judgments, in our wills and affections; not have them only in our eyes to read, in our ears to hear, or in our mouths to talk of them, but to hide them in our hearts, that we may not sin against Christ, in the wilful violation of them. Farther, we must keep, as well as have these commandments. This denotes an universal, diligent and persevering obedience to them. Hence learn, That although many loose professors pretend love to Christ, because they hear, read, know, and can talk of, his commandments; yet in Christ's account none do truly love him, but those who make conscience of their obedience to him: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Observe next, the gracious promise of Christ to such as thus express their love unto him. 1. "He shall be loved of my Father and of myself." And shall he not be loved of the Holy Ghost too? Yes, no doubt, but why is he not named then? Because the Son dwelleth in us by the Spirit, and sheds his love abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." 2. "I will manifest myself unto him;" that is, such obedient christians shall not only enjoy the fruit and benefit of my love, but they shall enjoy the sense of my love, and experience the sensible manifestations and inward diffusions of my love in their own souls. Learn hence, That the only way to have Christ love us, and to let out his love upon us, and to know that he loves us, is to look diligently to our obediential walking with him and before him. We may as rationally think to nourish our bodies with poison, as to enjoy the manifestation of Christ's love in a way of sin.

22 Judas saith unto him, (not Iscariot) Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us and not unto the world?

Some understand these words of a temporal manifestation, and think that Judas the brother of James, who spake them, still expected that Christ should be a temporal prince, and have such a kingdom as should be conspicuous to all the world, and therefore puts the question, How he could possibly show himself to his disciples, and the world not see him? Others understand it of a spiritual manifestation; as if he had said, "Lord! who or what are thy disciples, that we should enjoy more special manifestations of thy love to us, than to the rest of the world? Why should we be dignified by such distinguishing favors upon others?" Learn hence, 1. That there is a real difference put by Christ betwixt his own children and the world, in the matter of special manifestations. 2. That there being no cause from the creature why Christ should make this difference, his discriminating grace is matter of just and great admiration. Well might the apostle out of a deep admiration, say, "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?"

23 Jesus answered, and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

24 He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.

Observe here, How our Saviour still goes on to direct and encourage his disciples to evidence the sincerity of their love to his person, by the universality of their obedience to his commands; and tells them how great their advantage would be by so doing. For first, "The Father would love them;" that is manifest his favor to them in farther dispensations of grace and comfort. Learn thence, That all the manifestations of divine love to the souls of believers, depend upon their close walking with God in the paths of holiness and strict obedience. Secondly, "We will make our abode with him." He shall have Father and Son's company. An allusion to a parent that has many children: he will be sure to live with them that are most dutiful to him; and most observant of him. The expression of "making their abode" with us, denotes that sweet and intimate fellowship which shall be betwixt God and us, and the perpetuity and constancy of it at all times; till we are taken up by him into heaven, he will make his abode with us, by the indwelling presence of his Holy Spirit, the graces and comforts whereof shall abide with us for ever.

25 These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

26 But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

Here we have a repeated promise of the mission of the Holy Ghost, called "The Comforter," and his special office declared; namely, to teach and to bring to remembrance what Christ had taught: "He shall teach you all things." As the Spirit of God is the great Comforter, so he is the Special Teacher of his children; he teacheth condescendingly, stooping to the meanest capacities; he teacheth efficaciously, inclining the heart to receive instruction, as well as opening the ear to hear it; he teacheth plainly and clearly, unerringly and infallibly; he is truth itself, and therefore his teachings are most true. And as the Holy Spirit is the saints' Teacher, so is he also their Remembrancer: "He shall bring all things to your remembrance;" that is, all truths needful to be known and necessary to salvation. Here note, That the Holy Spirit teaches nothing but what Christ himself taught; the Spirit teaches in the word, and by the word, but never teaches any thing contrary to the word: "He shall teach and bring to remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."

27 Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

As if our Lord had said, "Whatever outward trouble the world gives you, be not afraid of it before it comes, nor troubled at it when it is come, for I will give you inward peace in the midst of all your outward troubles. Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Where note, That Christ's peace is vastly different from that peace which is given or enjoyed by the world; the world may wish peace, yet never intend it; or they may wish it, yet not be able to give it; but Christ's peace is real and effectual, solid and substantial; the world's peace is only a freedom from outward trouble, but Christ's peace is a deliverance from inward guilt; and though it does not give us an exemption from outward troubles, yet it gives us a sanctified use and improvement of them, and assures us of a joyful issue and deliverance out of them.

28 Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I.

That the disciples of Christ might neither be overset with fears nor overwhelmed with grief, he tells them that they ought to entertain the news of his departure rather with joy and exultation, than with sorrow and dejection: "If ye loved me ye would rejoice because I go to the Father." True love to Christ will make us rejoice in his advancement and exaltation, although it be to our own disadvantage. These words, "My Father is greater than I," must be understood with reference to his human nature, as mediator; for so he was the Father's servant, and the Father, as God, was greater than he; as man, Again the Father may be said to be greater than Christ, in regard of his paternity, as being the fountain of the deity; the Father is of himself, but the Son is begotten of the Father; but, being of the same substance with the Father, he is consequently God, as the Father is God; for the inequality arises not from the essence, but from the order and manner of subsistence. Thus the Father was greater than he; greater than he as to his original, the Son being begotten by him; and greater is he that gives, than he that receives; but, as to his essence, they are both one God, and so equal. Three ways the Father was greater than Christ: 1. With respect to his human nature. Who can doubt but a dependant creature is inferior to that Almighty Being that made him? 2. With respect to the eternal generation of his divine person; as he was begotten of the Father, who is therefore called the fountain of the deity. 3. With respect to his office as Mediator, for thus he was the Father's servant. O wonderful condescension! that the eternal word, who, as such, was equal with the Father, should in compassion to us accept a station, and sustain a character, in which the Father was greater than he! Now, though under each of these considerations, God the Father is greater than the Son, yet none of them are inconsistent with the Son's being God by nature.

29 And now I have told you before it come to pass, that when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

30 Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me.

31 But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence.

The time of our Saviour's death now nearer and nearer approaching, he prepares the expectation of his disciples for it, because evils that surprise us suddenly, do sink our spirits sadly; whereas what we fear, for that we prepare. Accordingly our Lord arms his disciples against all disquietude and overwhelming sorrow for his departure from them; "I have told you before, that when it comes to pass, ye might believe;" that is, be assured that I am not mere man, but truly and really God, and depend upon me for life and salvation. Observe, 2. How our Saviour points out the cause of his suffering; namely, satan and his instruments: "the prince of this world cometh;" that is, by Judas, the soldiers, and the high priests: "But he has nothing in me;" that is, He will find no sin or corruption in me to side with his temptation, or no guilt upon me to give him any advantage against me, for I shall die as a perfectly innocent person." Christ in suffering for our sins, did not only conflict with the wrath of God, but with the rage of men and devils; yet all the power and policy, all the malice and cruelty of Satan, cannot prevail against Christ, any farther than he voluntarily yields and submits himself unto it: "The prince of this world cometh, but hath nothing in me." Observe, 3. That it was Christ's love and obedience to his Father, that carried him forth so cheerfully to the work of sufferings, supported him under it, and carried him through it: "That the world may know that I love the Father, as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do." True love to God will draw all men to obedience in the hardest services and sufferings; the grand motive of Christ's suffering was love to his Father, obedience to his commands, and a regard to his glory. Lord, let thy love and obedience to thy father, in all thy sufferings, be the subject of our admiration, and the matter of our imitation also. As the Father gives us commandment, so let us always do.

CHAPTER XV.

I AM the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.

2 Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

Observe here, How our blessed Saviour, under the metaphor of a vine, elegantly sets forth himself in his relation to his visible church, showing, under that similitude, what his Father meant to do with Judas, and with all unfruitful branches like unto him, even take them away, cut them off, and throw them into the fire; but such as are fruitful, he purges by his word and spirit, by ordinances and providences, by mercies and afflictions, that they may be more abundantly and abidingly fruitful. Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ, in his offices for, and relation to, his people, doth most fitly resemble a vine. As the vine is weak, mean, and small, in outward appearance, not like the cedar for height, or like the oak for strength; so was Christ in his state of humiliation: there was no beauty in him, Isa. liii. As the vine is a fruitful plant, though it has little pomp, yet it has much plenty, and is only useful for fruit bearing, and brings forth plenty and a variety of sweet fruit to make glad the heart of man: thus the fruits of Christ's death, resurrection, ascension and intercession, are many and great, delightful and sweet. In a word, as the fruit of the vine is pressed, that it may be drink unto men, so Christ submitted to be trod in the wine-press of God's wrath, that thereby the sweetest fruit and benefit might redound to his people. Finally, as the vine is the root from which all the branches derive their nourishment and fruitfulness, in like manner is Christ the stock into which all his members are ingrafted, the root in which they all subsist, and the fountain from whence their spiritual life and fruitfulness doth proceed and flow. Learn, 2. That as Christ is the vine, so his Father is the husbandman: he ingrafts and implants all the branches into this vine; the plants of righteousness are his own planting: he takes notice what store of fruit every branch doth bring forth; and it is his daily care to dress and dung, to purge and prune, to support and shelter his vineyard, that it may bring forth abundantly. Learn, 3. That there are two sorts of branches in this vine, some fruitful, others unfruitful; some have the visibility, but not the reality of branches; some are branches only by external profession, others are so by real implantation. Learn, 4. That the true touch-stone whereby to discern one sort of branches from another, is not by the fair leaves of profession, but by the substantial proofs of an holy and righteous conversation. Learn, 5. That in the most fruitful branches, in the best and holiest of Christians, there remains much corruption to be purged out, in order to future and farther fruitfulness.— Learn, 6. That the husbandman's hand (God the Father's) manages the pruning knife of affliction, in order to his people's improvement in grace and holiness: he had rather see his vine bleed than see it barren. Lastly, that such branches as, after all the husbandman's care and cost, remain unfruitful, shall be finally cut off and cast away, as was Judas here; who, in this discourse of our Saviour, seems particularly and especially to be aimed at: he was a branch in him that bore no fruit, who was shortly after taken away, and went to his own place.

3 Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

4 Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing.

Our Saviour having in the former verses distinguished his disciples into two sorts; some that were members of his body the church, and branches of him the true vine, by outward show and visible profession only: others that are spiritually ingrafted into him, and do bring forth much fruit: now in this third verse Christ tells his disciples which number they were of: Now (saith he) ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you; that is, now that Judas, the traitor, that dead, rotten, fruitless branch, is cut off, and cast out, ye are all clean through the cleansing power and virtue of my word and doctrine. Learn hence, 1. That such as are justified by the blood, and sanctified by the Spirit of Christ, are in Christ's account clean, notwithstanding their many spots and manifold imperfections "Now are ye clean." 2. That as the blood of Christ is the meritorious, and the Spirit of Christ the efficacious, so the word of Christ is the instrumental cause of a believer's purification and cleansing: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." Abide in me, and I will abide in you; that is, abide in me, not only by an outward and visible profession, but by a real and fiducial adherence, and I will abide in you by the influences and operations of my Holy Spirit. The union and conjunction between Christ and his members is mutual; they abide in him by faith and dependence, and he abideth in them by the indwelling presence of his grace and spirit: Abide in me, and I will abide in you. Observe farther, The reason which Christ gives why they should thus abide in him, because without union with him, without interest in him, without influences of grace derived from him, they could bring forth no fruit for him, nor do any thing that is truly acceptable and well-pleasing to him: As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me, for without me ye can do nothing: That is, "As branches severed from the vine cannot live and bear fruit, so neither can christians, separated from Christ, and without deriving i- tue from him, do any thing spiritually good and well-pleasing in the sight of God." Learn hence, That not only unregenerate men do labor under an impotency to that which is spiritually good, but even disciples themselves, without daily dependance upon Christ, and without constant communications of grace from him, can do nothing in a lively and acceptable way and manner unto him: "Without me ye can do nothing:" you that are branches of me the true vine. As Christians, without me, that is, without my spirit, abiding in you, and uniting to me your head, you can do nothing acceptable to me, or worthy of my gospel. Again: as apostles, it may denote, that, without the gifts and powerful assistance of the Holy Spirit, they could do nothing to convert the world to christianity: in both respects might Christ truly say, "Without me ye can do nothing."

6 If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.

Here our holy Lord discovers the sad and deplorable condition of such professors, who pretending relation to Christ, do yet bring forth no fruit unto him: he calls them withered branches, fit only for the fire. Learn hence, that such as have had a long standing in God's vineyard, and contented themselves with a withered profession, are in great danger of having God's blasting added to their barrenness.
All their parts and gifts, and common graces, will wither, and their fair blossoms of profession will drop off, and at the great day the angels will gather these fruitless branches together, and cast them into hell-fire.

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

Observe here, 1. A glorious privilege declared: "Ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." Not that we are hereby warranted to ask what we please at God's hand, but our will must be limited by the word and will of God; we must pray in faith, and in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, and with a single eye at the glory of God. Observe,
2. The condition upon which this privilege is attainable: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you;" that is, practically and experimentally. If my doctrine and commands abide in your hearts, and dispose you to an holy fruitfulness in your lives, then shall all your just requests be granted.
Learn, That such as by faith embrace the promises, and by obedience live up to the precepts of the gospel, may in prayer humbly ask of God what they will, with a due submission to the wisdom and will of God.

8 Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples.

Our Lord here exhorts his followers to an holy fruitfulness in good works, by a double argument. One drawn from the glory of God: "Herein is my Father glorified. The other from their own advantage; "So shall ye be my disciples;" that is, hereby ye shall evidence and prove yourselves to be my disciples. Learn hence, That a christian's abounding fruitfulness in good works will abundantly conduce to the honor and glory of God, and also his own peace and comfort, by being the best evidence of his discipleship.

9 As the Father hath loved me, so have
I loved you: continue ye in my love.

Lord, what a comparison is here! As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: he doth not say. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved him; but so have I loved you: nor doth he say. As God hath loved me, so have I loved you; but, "As the Father." It is verbum dilectionis, a word importing dearness of affection; nor doth he say,
The Father hath loved me, and I love you; but "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: nor doth he say,
As the Father hath loved me, so will I love you; but so have I loved you. This shows the priority of Christ's love, that he loved us first, and also denotes the invincible constancy of his love, and the indubitable certainty thereof: "I have loved you:" follow me from heaven to earth, and from earth to heaven again, and you will find that every step I have taken hath been in love. Learn, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ hath given full and ample demonstration of his great and wonderful love unto his church and people. 2. That it is the duty, and ought to be the singular care of every christian, to preserve the sweet sense and inward diffusions of Christ's love in their own souls: "Continue ye in my love."

10 If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love: even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

Christ had told his disciples in the foregoing verse, that he had "loved them, even as the Father had loved him:" that is, with an eternal love, with a real and operative love, with an immutable and constant love. In this verse he directs them how they may continue in the sense of his love; namely, by their constant obedience to his commands, as his obedience to his Father's commands had secured him a continuance in his Father's love: "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love:" that is, in the sense of my love, and under the sweet apprehensions of it. Learn hence,
That as our obedience to Christ is the best evidence of our love to him, so is it the best mean to preserve and keep us in the sense and assurance of his love to us.

11 These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

In these words our Saviour declares the ground and reason why he did so earnestly press and urge the duty of being universally fruitful upon his disciples, and that was two-fold:
1. "That his joy might remain in them;" that is, that the joy which he had in their holiness and obedience might remain with him; nothing is more desired by Christ, than that he may have cause continually to rejoice in the faith and fruitfulness of his people. 2. "That their joy in him might be full." This latter arises from the former: our joy in Christ results from Christ's joy in us: his delight in us causes us abundantly to delight in him. Learn hence, That nothing is more desired by Christ, than that the joy of his people should be a full, solid, constant, and uninterrupted joy. 3. That the only way and mean, in order thereunto, is by an holy fruitfulness in good works; "All these things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may remain in you, and that your joy might be full." The observation of God's commandments does give a christian here the fullest and most perfect joy.

12 This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

Our Lord had often in this farewell sermon of his to his dear disciples, pressed upon them the duty of loving one another, chap. xiii. and xiv. And yet here he enforces it from his own example: As I have loved you, so, love you one another; that is, as truly and as sincerely for the manner, though not in the same proportion and degree. Learn thence, That for the disciples of Christ to love one another upon such grounds, and in such a way as he loved them, is that which his heart greatly desires, and is very much set upon. 2. That Christ's love unto believers is both an obligation unto mutual love, and also a pattern and example for it. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you."

13 Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

Here our Saviour gives his disciples an evidence of the greatness of his love unto them; namely, in his readiness to lay down his life for them, which is the highest expression of love to our dearest friends, because life is the greatest earthly blessing. Learn hence, That Christ's love, in laying down his life for his people, was a matchless love; for whilst they were enemies to him, he had a friendly respect for them; and never ceased till he had brought them into a covenant of friendship with him.

14 Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

Here Christ invites his people to obedience, by the honorable title of friends: "Ye are my friends." 1. Actively, you will declare and manifest yourselves to be my friends. 2. Passively, I will declare myself to be your friend. Learn hence, 1. How condescending is the love of Christ in calling his servants by the name of friends. 2. How glorious is the believer's relation to Christ in being one of his friends. 3. How grateful is obedience to Christ, seeing it dignifies the practisers of it with the title of his friends. 4. Our conformity to Christ consists not so much in imitation of what he did: as in obedience to what he prescribed. Some actions of Christ are inimitable, but all his commands are obeyable. 5. That nothing short of an humble, uniform, cheerful, and constant obedience to the commands of Christ, will evidence the truth of our relation to him, and the sincerity of our friendship with him: "Then only are ye my friends, when ye do whatsoever I command you."

15 Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.

By these words Christ declares the reason why he was pleased to change his style, and call his disciples friends instead of servants: namely, because of his communication of secrets to them, which servants are not admitted to the knowledge of: "Henceforth I call you not servants; that is, not mere servants; not that they were to be exempted from obedience; (for that is called for in the foregoing verse) but Christ treated them now with the kindness and familiarity of friends; being about to leave them, he unbosoms himself unto them saying, "All things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." Note as if Christ had communicated the infinite treasures of knowledge to them, which the Father had imparted to him; but he speaks here as the prophet of his church, that as such he had revealed all things needful for them to know in order to salvation, all things belonging to their case and state; as a counsellor doth not impart all his knowledge to his clients; but all that is necessary for his client to understand and know, that he makes known unto him, relating to his own case. Learn hence, 1. That all Christ's disciples are his servants, and all his servants are his friends, in regard of intimate communion and tender usage: "Henceforth I call you not servants but friends." And after his resurrection he called them brethren, John xx. 17. The dignity of believers is a growing dignity, the longer they follow Christ, the higher privileges are indulged to them. Learn, 2. That all the Father's counsel concerning our salvation, and so far as it is needful and necessary for us to know, is faithfully revealed by Christ to his Church, he being constituted by God the Father to be the great prophet and instructor of it: "All things that I have heard of the Father, I have made known unto you:" that is, all things fit for them at present to know; namely, concerning his passion, resurrection, ascension, mission of the Holy Ghost, a future judgment, and the promises of eternal life.

16 Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: and whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.

Here our Saviour gives another instance and evidence of his love to his disciples; he tells them, that his mercy and free goodness had prevented them in their election to eternal salvation, and in their vocation unto the office of apostleship: "Ye have not chosen me," to be your Master and Lord, but I have chosen you, to be my disciples, friends, and servants. 2. He acquaints them with the end, design, and intention, of his choosing of them: namely, that they should bring forth fruits, and persevere therein, even in all the fruits of holiness and obedience, which are to the praise and glory of God by Jesus Christ; "I have ordained you, that you should bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain." 3. He directs them, that in order to their being fruitful, they should have access to the Father through him, for whatsoever they wanted and stood in need of: "Whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he will give it to you." Learn hence, That all those whom God hath chosen, and called to the knowledge and service of Jesus Christ, ought to make it their care and endeavour to bring forth fruit, and to persevere therein to their lives' end: "I have chosen you, that you should bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."

17 These things I command you, that ye love one another.

18 If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

19 If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

20 Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you: if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also.

21 But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.

Observe here, 1. With what frequency and importunity our Lord inculcates and presses the duty of mutual love upon his disciples: "I command you to love one another." It denotes the great importance of the duty, and the great averseness and backwardness of our hearts to the performance of it. And if we consider the disciples as apostles and ministers of the gospel, it intimates to us the necessity of mutual love amongst the dispensers of the gospel, as conducting exceedingly to the welfare and benefit of the church of God, over which he hath set them. Observe, 2. The argument which our Saviour makes use of to press his disciples in general, and his ministers and ambassadors in particular, to love each other; and that is, because the world would certainly hate them. Learn hence, That the world's hatred of the members and ministers of Christ is, and ought to be esteemed by them a strong argument to excite and persuade them to love one another; for this is subjoined as an argument to press mutual love, that we are sure to meet with the world's hatred. Observe, 3. The several arguments by way of encouragement which Christ propounds to comfort his members and ministers against the world's hatred. The first argument is taken from his own lot and usage; when here, in the world, he met with the very same before them: "The world hated me before it hated you." Learn hence, That hatred and persecution from the world need not seem hard to the saints, if they consider what a stock Christ had before them upon him; he is the prime object of the world's hatred, and they who hate his members much, do hate him more, because of their likeness to him, and resemblance of him. A second argument of comfort under the world's hatred is this, that it will evidence they are not of the world, but chosen out of the world, ver. 19. "Because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hates you." Hence learn, 1. That the children of God, though in the world, yet they are not of the world, they have not the spirit of the world in them, nor is the conversation of the world led by them. That the difference betwixt them that are of the world, and those that are chosen out of the world, is of God's making: "I have chosen you out of the world." 3. That such Christians as are separated from the world in judgment, affection and practice, must for that reason expect to be hated and persecuted by the world: "Because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hates you." The third argument for consolation and support under the world's hatred, is taken from our relation to Christ, as servants to a master, ver. 20. "Remember that the servant is not greater than his lord:" as if Christ had said, "Is it equal that you should expect better treatment than myself, either as to your persons or ministry, or that you should expect that the world should better receive your doctrine than it did mine before you?" Learn hence, That neither the members nor ministers of Christ can or ought to expect better treatment in and from the world, than their master found before them: "The servant is not above his master, nor greater than his lord." A fourth argument to support them under the burden of the world's hatred, is taken from the goodness of the cause for which they were to suffer: namely, for Christ's name sake, ver. 27.—"All these things will they do unto you for my name's sake." Hence learn, 1. That it is the duty of all, but especially of the ministers of Christ, to own the name of Christ, to stand up in defence of his name and truth, his glory and honor, what opposition soever they meet with for the same. Learn, 2. That the great quarrel of the world against the disciples of Christ, is for the name of Christ: whatever may be pretended, this is the ground of the quarrel.

22 If I had not come, and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloak for their sin.

These words are not to be understood absolutely, but comparatively; as if Christ had said, "Had not I come amongst them in my incarnation, and preached personally to them the doctrine of salvation, and confirmed that doctrine by miraculous operations, they might have pleaded ignorance in some measure, and they had not had sin; that is, they had not had the sin of unbelief and gospel-contempt to answer for, nor had not had so great a measure of any kind of sin to answer for as now they have; but would have had more to say in excuse, or for a cover for their sin, than now they can: "But now they have no cloak for their sin;" that is, they are totally inexcusable, and have not the least color or pretence for their obstinate unbelief. Learn hence, 1. That sins of ignorance are, as it were, no sins committed against light and knowledge.—2. That sins committed against gospel light are of a heinous nature, and aggravated guilt, as being committed against the very remedy. 3. That the gospel, where it is plainly preached, doth take away all pretence and excuse from sinners. "Now they have no cloak for their sin."

23 He that hateth me, hateth my Father also.

24 If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father.

25 But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, They hated me without a cause.

These words declare the heinous nature of the pharisees' sin, in hating and persecuting Christ, who had done before their eyes such works as no man besides him, or before him, ever did; he acting by his own power. Peter healed the lame man, Acts iii. but it was in the name of Jesus of Nazareth: but Christ healed the sick, and raised the dead in his own name, and by a special word of command: "I say unto thee, arise:" yet did the pharisees hate him and his Father, according to the prediction, Ps. xxxv. 19. "They hated me without a cause." Which being spoke of David in type, received a more evident accomplishment in Christ, the Son of David. Learn thence, 1. That let men pretend to ever so much holiness or respect to God, yet if they hate Christ, and despise his gospel, they are haters of God, who is one in essence and nature with the Son. "He that hateth me hateth my Father also. Learn, 2. That no miracles wrought by mortal men were ever comparable with the miracles wrought by Christ, the Son of God; he did surpass them all in number, kind, and manner of doing them; by his own authority, in his own name, and not as others who obtained their power by prayer from God: "I have done amongst them the works which none other man did." Learn, 3. That Christ having confirmed his doctrine by such unparalleled miracles as the world was never before acquainted with, doth aggravate the sin of those that are haters of his person, despisers of his doctrine, and reproachers of his miracles: it being just with God, when men obstinately shut their eyes, and will not see, judicially to close their eyes, and say, They shall not see.

26 But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me:

27 And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.

Here our holy Lord confirms himself, that, though he had laid them under many aspersions and scandals from the world, yet all these should be done away by the coming of the Holy Spirit, who should testify of him, and make his person and doctrine to be acknowledged in the world; and that they themselves should bear witness of him who had been with him from the beginning; that is, since he first began to exercise his prophetic office. Observe here, 1. That Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are three distinct persons in the Godhead. 2. That the Holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father and the Son: here the Son is said to send him: and as to the Father, he is said to proceed from him. If the Holy Ghost doth not proceed from the Son, why is he called "The Spirit of the Son," Gal. iv. 6? Why is he said here to be sent by the Son? "The Comforter whom I will send unto you from the Father." And if the Spirit doth not proceed from the Son, what personal relation can we conceive between the Son and the Spirit? Observe, 3. That it is the highest dignity and honor of the apostles and ministers of Christ, that the Spirit beareth no testimony unto Christ, but with and according to the testimony given by them; for here it is conjoined, "He shall testify of me! and ye shall also bear witness, who have been with me from the beginning."

CHAPTER XVI.

THESE things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended.

2 They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.

3 And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me.

4 But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, our blessed Saviour had acquainted his disciples with the hatred and hard usage which they were likely to meet with in the world, and here he intimates to them the reason why he did so much insist upon that subject; namely, not to sadden their hearts, and grieve their spirits, before their sufferings came, but that they might not be offended, discouraged or scandalized at them, when they came, but prepared for them, and armed against them. Hence learn, 1. That all afflictions, but especially persecutions, are so searching and trying, that the best of Christians have need to be guarded against them, that they be not offended at them. 2. That it was the great design of Christ to arm his disciples against the scandal of the cross, lest atumbling at what they expected not, they should fall from the profession of Christianity: "These things have I spoken unto you, that you should not be offended." Observe, 2. How our Saviour instances in two particular sorts and kinds of suffering, which his disciples were to expect in the world, and from the world; namely, excommunication and martyrdom, verse 2. "They shall put you out of their synagogues:" that is, exclude them from all their assemblies, both civil and religious, and shall not only think it lawful, but a very acceptable service to God, to put them to death: "Whosoever killeth you, will think that he doeth God service." Observe, 3. How Christ discovers to his dear disciples the cause and ground of the world's hatred against them, and enmity towards them: namely, their ignorance of the Father and himself, verse 3. "These things will they do, because they have not known the Father, nor me." From whence we may learn, That all the persecutions of the saints do speak in persecutors, an ignorance of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ his son. All persecutions spring from ignorance as well as from malice. And men who continue ignorant of God and Christ are in danger of turning persecutors, if they have a temptation to it. Observe, 4. How our Lord again forewarns his disciples of their approaching sufferings, to the intent that they might remember that he had foretold them of them, and would not fail to support them under them. He had often told them in general of persecutions and troubles which they must expect to meet with, but did not till now intimate the kinds and degrees of those sufferings, with respect to their weakness; and because, whilst he was with them, he himself bore the brunt of all, the world's rage falling upon him, letting them alone; but after his ascension, when the malice of satan and wicked men could not reach him, then did the storm fall upon them. Learn hence, 1. That Christ is so tender of his disciples' weakness, that he will not put them upon the hardship of sufferings till they be trained up and prepared for them. 2. That it may encourage the saints in and under their sufferings that Christ himself is the great object of the persecutors' malice, and they only so for his sake; for, could they reach him, they would not concern themselves with them. Learn, 3. That the saints of God, after long exemption and freedom from sufferings, must expect that storms will arise, clouds gather thick, and trials come on apace: and their being under one trial will not hide or shelter them from another.

5 But now I go my way to him that sent me, and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?

6 But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart.

Observe here, How our Saviour again intimates to his disciples his speedy departure from them, and reproves them for being so saddened at it, and concerned for it, without considering the end and design of it, and the benefit and advantage they were to receive by it. Here we see how the disciples' thoughts were wholly taken up about themselves, what they should do for want of Christ's bodily presence; without being instant with him, to know whither he was going, and what benefit he should reap, and they might expect, from his departure. Learn hence, That Christ's disciples ought not so much to have lamented the loss of his bodily presence, as to have rejoiced in his glorious exaltation, and in their own advantages by his death, resurrection and ascension; "None of you asketh me, Whither goest thou? But sorrow hath filled your heart."

7 Nevertheless, I tell you the truth. It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away; the Comforter will not come unto you: but if I depart I will send him unto you.

In these words our Saviour urges his disciples to submit to his departure, as that which would make way for his sending the Comforter to them; which he assures them, would be of more advantage to them than his own stay and continuance amongst them. Thence learn, That the presence of the Holy Spirit with us is a greater comfort and advantage to us than the presence of Christ in the flesh amongst us. The benefit of Christ's conversation was great; but the advantage of the Spirit's renovation and holy inspiration is much greater; the one encourages and incites us to be holy, but the other quickens and enables us to be holy. Therefore well might Christ say, "It is expedient," or highly necessary and advantageous, "for you, that I go away." He subjoins a reason: "If I go not away the Comforter will not come: but if I depart, I will send him to you." Whence we learn, That Christ's ascension was indispensably necessary, in order to the Spirit's mission; the Spirit could not have descended, if Christ had not first ascended; the Spirit could not come, but by the gift and mission of the Mediator. Now the sending of the Spirit being a part of Christ's royalty, as Mediator, it was not convenient that the Spirit should be sent, till Christ was crowned, and sat down on his throne in his kingdom: then the Spirit was to make application to us, of the redemption purchased for us.

8 And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment:

9 Of sin because they believe not on me:

10 Of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more:

11 Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.

In these and the following verses our Saviour acquaints his disciples with the advantages that will redound by the coming of the Comforter. First, The advantage to the world, Secondly, To the apostles. And, thirdly, To himself. To the world, 1. "He shall convince them of sin, righteousness, and judgment." Of sin; that is, of their sinful state and nature, of the large extent of sin, and particularly of the sin of unbelief. Learn hence, 1. That the Spirit of God is the author of conviction of sin, and that all convictions of sin do either medately or immediately flow from him. 2. That unbelief is a sin of the greatest malignity against Christ, and of the greatest danger to a christian's soul: "He shall convince the world of sin, because they believe not in me." Secondly, Of righteousness; that is, of the insufficiency of all human righteousness, and of the necessity of the righteousness of a mediator; by which alone we are to expect acceptance with God; or of a complete and perfect righteousness in me, imputable to sinners for their perfect justification: and that it is so, appears "because I go to the Father, and ye see me no more." As if Christ had said, "Hereby you may be satisfied that by my active and passive obedience I have fully satisfied my Father's justice for you, and you shall never be charged or condemned; because when I go to heaven, I shall abide there in glory with my Father, and never be sent back again; ye shall see me no more, as I must have been, if any thing had been omitted by me." Note farther, That none are convinced of righteousness who are not first convinced of sin. None will come to Christ by faith, till convictions of sin have awakened and distressed them. Thirdly, Of Judgment: that is, the Spirit shall convince the world, that Jesus is both Lord and Christ, that he had power to judge satan the prince of the world, and that he did by his death put down the kingdom of darkness. Learn hence, 1. That satan is a prince who by unjust usurpation, and sinners' vol-luntary consent, has exercised a tyrannical power over the world. 2. That Christ by his death did judge, condemn, and overcome, this mighty prince, and hath made his conquest evident to the consciences of men, by the convictions of his holy Spirit: "The Spirit shall convince of judgment:" that is, "that satan the prince of this world is judged."

12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now,

13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth:—

The second benefit which our Saviour declares was to be expected by the coming of the Holy Spirit, relates to the apostles themselves: "He shall guide you into all truth;" that is, into all truth necessary for you to know in order to salvation. This is a principal text which the papists bring for their doctrine of infallibility, but groundlessly: for this promise was made to all the apostles, as well as Peter; nay, not only to the apostles, but to all the successors: yea, not to the apostles only and their successors, but to all believers also: for they are led by the Spirit of God, and that into all truth too; not absolutely, but into all necessary truth: and so far as a private christian follows the conduct and guidance of the divine Spirit, he is more infallible than either pope or council, who follow the dictates and directions of their own spirits only.

—For he shall not speak of himself: but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come.

That is, he shall not teach you a private doctrine, or that which is contrary to what you have learned of me, but whatsoever he shall hear of me, and receive from me, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come." This affords an argument to prove the Holy Spirit to be God: he that can show us things to come, he that clearly foreseeth and infallibly foretelleth what shall be, before it is, is certainly God. But this the Holy Spirit doth: "He will show you things to come." Men and devils may guess at things to come, but none can show things to come, but he that is truly and really God: and therefore the Spirit is so.

14 He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.

15 All things that the Father hath are mine; therefore, said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you.

Here Christ shows the advantage which would redound to himself by the coming of the Comforter; he declares that the Spirit should glorify him by his testimony, gifts, and miracles, and shall in all things accord with him, and thereby evidence that he hath his mission from him: "He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." And "all things that the Father hath are mine." Hence learn, That although the union in essence amongst the persons in the Trinity is the same, yet the order of their subsistence and operation is distinct: the Son being from the Father, and the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son; "For all things that the Father hath are mine; And the Spirit, shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you." Observe farther, That these words afford a strong argument to prove the divinity of Christ: "All things which my Father hath are mine." Where Christ challenges to himself the incommunicable attributes of God, and consequently that essence which is inseparable from them. Doth the Father know the secrets of all hearts? So doth Christ, Rev. ii. 23. "All the churches shall know that I am he that searcheth the reins and hearts." Is the Father eternal? So is Christ, Prov. viii. 23 "I was set up from everlasting, &c."

16 A little while and ye shall not see me: and again, A little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father.

17 Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is this that he saith unto us, A little while and ye shall not see me: and again, A little while and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father?

18 They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell what he saith.

19 Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, Do ye enquire among yourselves of that I said, A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, A little while, and ye shall see me?

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.

21 A woman, when she is in travail, hath sorrow, because her hour is come; but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

22 And ye now, therefore, have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you.

In these words our holy Lord proceeds to comfort his disciples with a promise, that, however he was now to be removed from them, yet they should shortly see him again, namely, after his resurrection; it being impossible that he should be held by death, but must arise and go to his Father. His disciples not understanding what he meant, but abiding under the prejudices of their national errors, concerning the temporal kingdom of the Messias, knew not what to make of those words. "A little while and ye shall not see me." Our Saviour therefore explains himself to his disciples, telling them that they shall have a time of sad sorrow and grief of heart, during some of his sufferings and absence from them, but their sadness shall soon be turned into joy, when they shall see him alive again after his resurrection. This he illustrates by the similitude of a travailing woman, who soon forgets her sorrow after she hath brought forth a child. Thus will their hearts revive upon the sight of him risen from the grave; and no man shall be able to take their joy away from them, because he shall die no more, but go to heaven, and there live for ever, to make intercession for them. Learn hence, 1. From the apostles not understanding Christ's words concerning his departure, though so often inculcated upon them, "A little while and ye shall not see me, because I go to the Father," Hence note, How unreasonable it is to arrogate to man's understanding a power to comprehend spiritual mysteries, yet, to understand the plainest truths, till Christ enlightens the understanding; lest the doctrine be delivered ever so plainly, and repeated ever so frequently, yet will men continue ignorant, without divine illumination. How often had this plain doctrine of Christ's departure to the Father been preached to the disciples by Christ's own mouth! Yet still they say, "What is it that he saith? We cannot tell what he saith." Learn, 2. The different effects which Christ's absence should have upon the world, and upon his disciples; "the world will rejoice, but ye shall weep and lament." Note, 1. That it is the wretched disposition of the world to rejoice in the absence and want of Christ out of the world. When I am gone, the world will rejoice. 2. That nothing is the cause of so much sorrow and sadness to sincere disciples, as Christ's absence and removal from them: such is their estimation of the worth of him, so great is their apprehension of the want of him, that there is no loss comparable to his absence and removal from them: ye shall weep and lament at my departure, though the world will rejoice. Learn 3. That the believer's sorrow for Christ's absence, though it be very great, yet it shall not be perpetual; "Ye have now sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy shall no man take from you." The joy of the saints may be interrupted; it shall never be totally extinguished: it is a permanent joy, of which they shall never be totally deprived, till they enter into the ocean of eternal joy; "Your joy no man taketh from you."

23 And in that day ye shall ask me nothing, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.

24 Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.

At the first reading of the 23d verse there seems to be a contradiction in the words. Christ tells them in the former part of the verse, that they shall ask him nothing in that day; and yet promises that whatever they ask shall be given them, in the latter part of the verse. To resolve this, know that there is a twofold asking, one by way of question, the other by way of petition. The former is asking that we may know, or be informed in, what we doubt; the latter is asking that we may receive, and be supplied with what we want. Now when Christ saith, "In that day ye shall ask me nothing;" it is as much as if he had said, "At present you understand but little of the mysteries of religion, and therefore ye put questions about many things: but, in that day, when the

Comforter comes, ye shall be so clearly enlightened by him, that ye shall not need to ask me any more questions." But when Christ saith, "Whatever ye ask of the Father in my name, he will give it;" the meaning is, "In that day when I have left the world, and ascended to my Father, you shall not need to address your prayers to me, but to my Father in my name." But what is it to pray in the name of Christ? Answer, It is more than to name Christ in prayer; it is easy to name Christ in prayer, but no easy thing to pray in the name of Christ. To pray in the name of Christ is, 1. To look up to Christ, as having purchased for us this privilege, that we may pray: for it is by the blood of Christ that we draw near to God, and that a throne of grace is open to us. 2. To pray in the name of Christ, is to pray in the strength of Christ, by the assistance of his grace, and the help of his Holy Spirit. 3. To pray in the name of Christ, is to pray by faith in the virtue of Christ's mediation and intercession, believing that what we ask on earth, he intercedes for and obtains in heaven. To pray thus is no easy matter: and unless we do pray thus, we do not pray at all, ver. 24. "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name; that is; explicitly and expressly in my name, or by me, as mediator betwixt God and man, and with respect to my merits. Do this after my death, resurrection, and intercession at the right-hand of God, and you shall receive such answers as will fill you with joy; for the saints of God under the O'd Testament, and the apostles themselves under the New, had hitherto put up all their petitions in the name of the Messiah, though not in the name of Jesus. But now he exhorts them to eye his mediatory office in all their addresses to God, and promises them whatsoever he had purchased of the Father, by his sufferings and satisfaction, they should obtain it for the sake of his prevailing intercession. Learn hence, That it is a mighty encouragement to prayer, that now under the gospel, the person of the Mediator is exhibited in our flesh, has satisfied divine justice in our nature, and in that nature intercedes as mediator, for whatever he purchased as our surety. Hence is the encouragement; "Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name, he will give it you."

25 These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs: the time cometh when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall show you plainly of the Father.

Here our Saviour tells his disciples, that although he had spoken many things to them in dark parables and figurative expressions, yet now the time was approaching, namely, the Comforter's coming, when he would, by the Holy Ghost, clearly enlighten their understandings in the knowledge of divine mysteries, and the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, and particularly in the knowledge of God as his Father, and their Father in him. Hence learn, 1. That the clearest truths will be but parables, proverbs, and dark mysteries, even to disciples themselves, till the Holy Spirit enlightens their understandings. 2. That the clear and full manifestation of divine truth was reserved till the coming of the Comforter, who did communicate it to the apostles, and by them to the church or body of Christians: I, by him, "will show you plainly of the Father."

26 At that day ye shall ask in my name; and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you;

27 For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God.

At that day ye shall ask in my name; that is, after I have ascended into heaven, and have sent down the Holy Ghost upon you, you shall put up all your prayers and requests to God in my name; "and I say not that I will pray the Father for you, for the Father himself loveth you;" that is, I need not tell you (though I shall certainly do it) that I will intercede with the Father for you, for he of himself is kindly disposed and affected towards you for my sake. When Christ says, "I do not say that I will pray the Father for you," the meaning is, not that he will lay aside his office as intercessor for believers, but that they had not only his intercession but the Father's love, upon which to ground their hope of audience. Learn hence, 1. That the christian's prayers, put up in Christ's name, cannot fail of audience and acceptance for the sake of the Mediator's intercession, and the Father's love. 2. That in our prayers we ought so to eye and look up to Christ's intercession, as not to overlook and forget the Father's love, but ground our hopes of audience upon both; "I say not that I will pray the Father for you," though I shall assuredly do it, "for the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me."

28 I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

29 His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb.

30 Now are we sure that thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee: by this we believe that thou camest from God.

Here observe, 1. A proof of our Saviour's godhead; "he came forth from the Father into the world;" he came but from the Father in his incarnation, and came into the world to accomplish the work of our redemption. Learn hence, That Jesus Christ is true God, equal with the Father: for he was not only sent by him, but came forth from him; "I came out from the Father." Observe, 2. That it pleased Christ, out of love to his people, to leave the Father, and come into the world; not by being separated from the deity, but by obscuring the deity with the veil of our flesh, in order to the finishing the great and glorious work of redemption for us: "I came from the Father, and am come into the world." Observe, 3. That Christ having finished his suffering work here in earth, ascended into heaven, and sent down the Holy Spirit to apply unto his church the redemption purchased by his blood: "Again I leave the world, and go to the Father." Observe lastly, How the apostles argue from the knowledge of Christ's omnipotency to a certainty of his divinity: "Now are we sure that thou knowest all things; by this we believe thou camest forth from God." The knowledge and experience of Christ's omniscieny, may and ought fully to confirm us in the belief of his deity; for that attribute of the deity cannot be communicated to any person without the communication of the divine nature.

31 Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

32 Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave me alone; and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me.

In the foregoing verse, the apostles make a full profession of their faith in Christ's divinity, and in Christ's omnipotency: "Now are we sure that thou knowest all things, and that thou camest forth from God." In this verse Christ intimates to them that their faith should be put to a great trial very shortly, namely, when his sufferings came on; and that then they should all forsake him, and take care of themselves: "Ye shall be scattered and leave me alone." Learn hence, 1. That Christ was forsaken and left alone by his own disciples in the day of his greatest distress and danger. 2. That when the disciples left Christ, they were scattered every one to his own. 3. That when all forsook Christ, and left him alone, he was far from being simply alone, because God was with him: "Ye shall leave me alone, and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." God was with Christ, and will be with Christians, in a suffering hour, in his essential presence, in his gracious and supporting presence: "He that sent me," says Christ, "is with me: the Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please my Father."

33 These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

*These words are the conclusion of our Saviour's farewell sermon to his disciples, in which he declares to them, the inevitable necessity of the world's troubles: in the world ye shall have tribulation; that is, while ye have to do with the men of the world, while ye have any thing to do with the things of the world, nay, while you have a being in the world, you must look for trouble both from within and from without, from friends and foes, in the body, soul, name, estate; heart-breaking troubles, soul-rending troubles, such troubles as will make the heart to break, and the back to bend; and you, my disciples, must expect it as well as others: In the world ye shall have tribulation. Hence learn, That the disciples of Christ, in this world, may, yea, must expect and look for trouble. Observe, 2. The remedy provided by Christ against this malady: In me ye shall have peace: when in the world ye have tribulation. Ye shall have peace: that is, serenity of mind, a quiet and calm temper of spirit within, when the world, like a tempestuous air, is full of storms without. Learn thence, That though in the world Christ's own disci-* ples must look for and expect troubles, yet he has taken effectual care, that amidst all their troubles, in him they may have peace; Christ's blood has purchased peace for them, his word hath promised it to them, and his Holy Spirit seals it up to their souls. Observe, 3. The cordial provided by Christ for the support of his disciples' spirits under the sinking burden of the world's tribulations and troubles: But be of good cheer; I have overcome the world; I have taken the sting out of every cross, and the venom out of every arrow. Learn hence, That it is a great comfort to a christian, under all the troubles of this world, to consider that Christ has overcome the world, that is, all things in the world, which may hinder his people's comfort and consolation here, and their eternal happiness and salvation hereafter; namely, the princes of the world, the rulers of the world, the wicked men of the world, the troubles of the world, the temptations of the world, the corruptions that are in the world through lust. Now Christ having overcome the world, all persons and things in it are at his disposal, and can do nothing but by his permission: and as he has overcome the world himself, so he will enable us through faith in him to overcome it also. 1 John v. 4. This is the victory over the world, even our faith.

CHAPTER XVII.

THESE words spake Jesus; and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee.

Our Saviour having ended his consolatory and valedictory sermon, contained in the three foregoing chapters; in this chapter we have recorded his last prayer, with and for his disciples; before he left the world, which is a copy left upon earth, of what he doth now intercede for, as an advocate in heaven. "It is good (saith one) to compare scripture with scripture, but not to prefer scripture before scripture: all scripture being written by inspiration of God;" but if any part of scripture be to be magnified above another, this chapter claims the pre-eminence; it contains the breathings out of Christ's soul for his church and children before his departure; not for his disciples only, but for the succeeding church to the end of the world. In the verse before us, observe, 1. The order of our Saviour's prayer: These words spake Jesus; that is, after he had finished his excellent sermon, he closes the exercise with a most fervent and affectionate prayer: teaching his ministers by his example to add solemn prayer and supplication to all their instructions and exhortations: if every creature of God be to be sanctified by prayer, much more the word of God, which works not as a natural agent, but as a moral instrument in God's hand. Now as God sets the word on work, so is it prayer that sets God on work. Observe, 2. As the order of Christ's prayer, so the gesture on which he prayed; He lifted up his eyes to heaven, as an indication of his soul's being lifted up to God in heaven; to signify his reverence of God whose throne is in heaven; and to denote his confidence in God, and raised expectation of aid and help from God, and not from any creature. Learn, that the gestures which we use in prayer, should be such as may express our reverence of God, and denote our affiance and trust in him. Observe, 3. The person prayed to, God, under the appellation of a Father: it intimates a sweet relation; it is a word of endearing affection, and implies great reverence towards God, and great confidence and trust in him. Learn, It is very sweet and comfortable in prayer, when we can come and call God Father. Observe, 4. The mercy prayed for, "The hour is come: glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee." The hour is come; that is, "The hour of my sufferings, and by satisfaction: the hour of my victory, and of thy glory; the hour, the sad hour, determined in thy decree and purpose." No calamity can touch us till God's hour is come; and when the sad hour is come, the best remedy is prayer; and the only person to fly unto for succour is our heavenly Father. Father, the hour is come, the doleful hour of my death and passion; glorify thy Son, glorify him at his death, by manifesting him to have been the Son of God; glorify him in his death, by accepting it as the death of thy Son for the sins of the world; glorify him after his death, by a speedy resurrection from the grave, and triumphant exaltation at thy right hand. Here note, How the glory of the Father and the Son are inseparably linked together: it was the Father's design to glorify the Son, and it was the Son's desire to have glory from the Father, for this end, that he might bring glory to the Father: "Glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee."

2 As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him.

Observe here, 1. The dignity which Christ was invested with, power over all flesh; that is, authority to judge and sentence all mankind. Observe, 2. How Christ came to be invested with this power; it was given him by his Father: Thou hast given him power over all flesh. Hence the Socinians would infer, that he was not God, because he received all from God; but the text speaks not of his divine power, as God, but of his power as Mediator. And the note is, that all mankind are under the power and authority of Jesus Christ as mediator: he has a legislative power, or a power to give laws to all mankind; and a judiciary power, or a power to execute the laws that he hath given. Observe, 3. The end for which Christ was invested with this power: "That he might give eternal life to as many as God hath given him." Here note, 1. That believers, that is, all sincere and serious christians, are given by God the Father unto Christ; they are given to him as his charge, to redeem, sanctify, and save: and as his reward, Isa. liii. 10. 2. All that are given to Christ, have life from him: a life of justification and sanctification on earth, and a life of glory in heaven. 3. The life which Christ gives to them that are given him, is eternal life. 4. That this eternal life is a free gift from Christ unto his people; though they do not work for wages, yet they shall not work for nothing; I give unto them eternal life.

3 And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.

That is, "This is the true way and means to obtain eternal life, namely, by the true knowledge of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ the Mediator, who was commissioned and sent by his Father, to accomplish the work of redemption for a lost world." Here observe, Christ calls God the Father the only true God, not in opposition to the Son and Holy Ghost, who, being one in essence with the Father are truly and really God, as well as the Father; but in opposition to idols and false gods. There is a great difference betwixt these two propositions: the Father is the only true God, and the Father only is true God. Christ saith the former; This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God. The Socinians say the latter; this is life eternal, to know only thee to be the true God, and that neither Jesus Christ nor the Spirit are God, but the Father only. But how comes eternal life to depend as well upon the knowledge of Jesus Christ, as of God the Father, if Jesus Christ be only man, and not truly and really God? For thus our Saviour affirms, This is life eternal, to know thee and Jesus Christ. Whence learn, 1. That the beginning, increase, and perfection, of eternal life, lieth in holy knowledge. 2. That no knowledge is sufficient to eternal life, but the knowledge of God, and Jesus Christ, who is also God; for who can think that the knowledge of a mere creature should be accounted equally necessary to salvation, with the knowledge of the great and mighty God? Surely, if our happiness consists equally in the knowledge of God and Christ, then God and Christ are of the same nature, equal in power and glory. The comprehensive sense of the words seems to be this, "That the knowledge of the only true God, and of Jesus Christ the Mediator, is the life of grace, and the necessary way to the life of glory."

4 I have glorified thee on the earth :—

Learn hence, That the whole life of Christ, while here on earth, was a glorifying of his Father; he glorified his Father by the doctrine which he preached; he glorified his Father by the miracles which he wrought; he glorified his Father by the unspotted purity and innocency of his life, and by his unparalleled sufferings at his death.

—I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

That is, I am now about to finish it: he speaks of what he was resolved to do, as already done. Here note, 1. That it is the work that glorifies God. 2. That every man has his work, his proper work, assigned him by God. 3. This work must be finished here upon earth. 4. That when we have done our proportion of work, we may expect our proportion of wages. 5. That it is a blessed thing at the hour of death to be able to say in sincerity and uprightness, that we have glorified God in the world, and have finished the work which he appointed us to do: Father I have glorified thee on earth, and have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

From the connection of this with the former verse, learn, 1. That whosoever expects to be glorified with God in heaven, must glorify him first here upon earth. 2. That after we have glorified him, we may expect to be glorified with him, and by him. I have glorified thee. And now, O Father, glorify thou me; it follows, with the glory I had with thee be- fore the world was. Here note, 1. That Christ, as God, had an essential glory with God the Father before the world was: he had this glory not in the purpose and degree of God only, as the Socinians would have it: for he doth not say, "Glorify me with the glory, which thou didst propose and prepare for me before the world was; but "which I had and enjoyed with thee before the world was;" by which words our Lord plainly asserts his own existence and being from eternity, and prays for a re-exaltation to that glory which he enjoyed with his Father before his incarnation. Note, 2. That Christ, as Mediator, did so far humble himself, that he needed to pray for his Father to bestow upon him the glory which he wanted: namely, the glory of his ascension and exaltation; Now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self. As if Christ had said, Father, glorify me, embrace and honor me, as thy Son, who have been, in the eyes of the world, handled disgracefully as a servant:" it is an actual glory that Christ speaks of, not in degree and purpose only, for that believers had as well as he: but this was a glory when no creature was in being.

6 I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word.

By the name of God we are here to understand his nature, his properties and attributes, his designs and counsels for the salvation of mankind; Christ, as the prophet of his church, made these known unto his people. Learn hence, That Jesus Christ has made a full and complete discovery of his Father's mind and will unto his people: I have manifested thy name unto them, which thou gavest me. Thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word. Learn, 1. That all believers are given unto Christ, as his purchase, and as his charge: they are given him as his subjects, as his children, as the wife of his bosom, as the members of his body. Learn, 2. That all those that are given unto Christ, do keep his word: they keep it in their understandings, they hide it in their hearts, they feel the force of it in their souls, they express the power of it in their lives; They have kept thy word.

7 Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me, are of thee :

Observe here, 1. The faithfulness of Christ, in revealing the whole will of his Father to his disciples. 2. The proficiency of the disciples in the school of Christ, they knew all the things that Christ had told them; namely, that whatsoever he had was given him of the Father, and that he had these things from him to be a Mediator. Learn hence, That Christ hath approved himself a faithful prophet to his church, a faithful messenger from his Father to his people, in that he hath added nothing to his message, nor taken any thing from it. 2. That it is our duty to know and believe on Christ, as the only Messenger and Mediator sent of God; Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me, are of thee.

8 For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

As if Christ had said, "The message by thee, my Father, committed to me, I have communicated to them, my disciples, and they have received it, and will communicate it from thee to the world, being sufficiently assured that my coming and preaching was all my commission from thee." Hence learn, 1. That the doctrine of the gospel, which was revealed by Christ, was received from the Father. 2. That faith is receiving of the word of Christ, and of Christ in and by the word. Receiving is a relative term, and presupposes an offer. God offers on his part, and we receive on our part, the whole word with the whole heart. 3. That the ministers of the gospel are to preach that, and only that, which they have out of the word of God: I have given them the words which thou gavest me.

9 I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine.

That is, I now offer up a prayer particularly: 1. For my apostles, designed for so great a work as the preaching of the everlasting gospel, to the obdurate Jews and Gentiles. 2. I intercede also for all believers at this time for their perseverance in the faith, and constancy in persecution; but I do not now intercede for the wicked and impenitent world, they not being capable (whilst such) of these mercies and blessings; though at other times we find him praying for the world, yea, for his very crucifiers; Father forgive them, &c. nay, in this very prayer, at the 20th verse, he prays for the world; that is for the Gentile world; all those that, by the preaching of the apostles and their successors, should be brought to believe on him to the end of the world. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ is the great and gracious intercessor. 2. That all believers are the children of God in general, as under the fruit and benefit of Christ's intercession. 3. That as all the members of Christ in general, so the ministers and ambassadors of Christ in special, have a peculiar interest in Christ's intercession; and great are the advantages of his intercession for them. 4. From the person interceding, Christ; consider the dignity of his person, God-man; the dearness of his person, God's Son. 5. From the manner of his intercession, not by way of intreaty, but meritorious claim. 6. From the sublimity of his office, our intercessor is near to God, even at his right hand. 7. From the fruits of his intercession; it procures the acceptance and justification of our persons, the hearing and answering of our prayers, the pardon and forgiveness of our sins, our preservation in grace, and our hopes of eternal glory.

10 And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them.

We may understand this two ways: 1. Of all persons, all my friends, all my disciples are thine as well as mine. Hence learn, That the Father and the Son have a like share and property in all believers. 2. The words in the original being of the neuter gender, signify all thy things are mine, and all my things are thine; Christ and his Father are one, and they agree in one; they have the same essence and nature, the same attributes and will; Christ hath all things that the Father hath, willeth all things that the Father willeth, and doeth all things that the Father doeth, he is therefore really and essentially God. It followeth, and I am glorified in them; that is, I am made glorious by their owning and receiving me, by their believing in me, and accepting of me for their Lord and Saviour. Thence note, That the Lord Jesus Christ is eminently glorified in and by all those that believe in him, and belong unto him.

11 And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.

Here observe, 1. Our Saviour's present condition, I am no more in the world; that is, I shall continue on earth but a small time longer, and then ascend to my Father in heaven. Learn thence, That Jesus Christ, as he is man, he is gone out of this lower world into the immediate presence of his Father; he had been abased before, he must be exalted now; he had no more work to do on earth, but much to do in heaven; therefore he left this earth to go to heaven. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's prayer to his Father for his apostles, before he left the world: Holy Father, keep them; that is, preserve them by thy divine power and goodness for the glory of thy holy name. Here note, 1. The title and appellation given to God: Holy Father. Hence learn, That when we go to God in prayers, especially for grace and sanctification, we must look upon him as an holy Father, as essentially and originally holy, as infinitely and independently holy. Note, 2. The supplication requested of God: Keep through thy name those whom thou hast given me. Thence learn, That the perseverance of the saints in a state of grace, is the sweet effect and fruit of Christ's prayer; Christ has begged it, and it cannot be denied, there being such an harmony and sweet consent betwixt the will of the Father and the will of the Son. Three things concur to the believers' perseverance, On the Father's part, there is everlasting love, and all-sufficient power. On the Son's part, there is everlasting merit, and constant intercession. On the Spirit's part, there is a perpetual inhabitation, and continual influence. Observe, 3. The end of Christ's supplication on behalf of his people: That they may be one, as we are one. Here note, 1. That the heart of Christ is exceedingly set upon the unity and oneness of his members. 2. The believers' union with Christ their head, and one with another, has some resemblance to that unity that is betwixt the Father and the Son. For it is an holy and spiritual union, a close and intimate union, an indissoluble and inseparable union.

12 While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name; those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition: that the scripture might be fulfilled, Observe here, 1. That those which shall be saved, are given unto Christ, and committed to his care and trust. 2. That none of those that are given unto Christ, as his charge, and committed to his care and trust, shall be finally lost, "Those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and none of them is lost." It follows, "but the son of perdition." A person may be said to be a son of perdition two ways; actively and passively—Actively he is so, who makes it his work and business to destroy others. Passively, he is a son of perdition, who, for his wickedness in destroying others, is destroyed himself. Judas was a son of perdition in both these senses; his heart was maliciously set upon destroying Christ, and wilfully set upon his own destruction; his covetousness and hypocrisy prompted him to betray our Saviour, his despair provoked him to destroy himself.

13 And now come I to thee, and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

In these words our Saviour declares the great reason why he did at this time so publicly and solemnly pray for his disciples; it was to fill them with joy and comfort, that their joy might not be diminished by Christ's departure, but rather increased by the coming of the Comforter: "That they may have my joy fulfilled in them;" that is, the joy which they take in me, and the joy which they have from me: there is a double care which Christ takes of his people; namely, a care of their graces, and a care of their joy and comfort: how solicitous was he to leave his disciples joyful before he departed from them! He delights to see his people cheerful; and he knows of what great use spiritual joy is in the christian's course, both to enable us for doing, and to fit us for suffering. Learn hence, 1. That Christ is the author and original of the joy of his people: "My joy." 2. That it is Christ's will and desire, that his people might be full of holy joy: "that my joy may be fulfilled in them." 3. That the great end of Christ's prayer and intercession was, and is, that his people's hearts might be full of joy: "These things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves."

14 I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

"I gave them thy word," partly external revelation, and partly by internal illumination; and for thy word's sake "the world hates them," as also "because they are not of the world." Learn, 1. That christians, especially ministers, to whom Christ has given his word, must expect the world's hatred. Few of the prophets or apostles died a natural death; as their calling is eminent, so must their sufferings be exemplary. The best ministers, and the best men, are usually most hated. There is an antipathy against the power of godliness, or a cruel, causeless, implacable, and irreconcilable hatred against the saints, because of their strictness in religion, and contrariety to the world. 2. That it is to the honor of believers, that they are like unto Christ, in being the objects of the world's hatred: "The world hates them; because they are not of the world, as I am not of the world." This Christ adds both for information and consolation: for information, that they should look for such hatred, misery and trouble, as they saw him grapple with; and for consolation, to think that the world can never hate us so bad as it hated Christ.

15 I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil.

16 They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

Here observe, 1. That the wisdom of Christ sees fit to continue his children and people in the world, notwithstanding all the perils and dangers of the world. He has work for them, and they are of use to him, for a time, in the world: till their work be done, Christ's love will not, and the world's malice cannot remove them from hence. Yet Christ prays that his Father would keep them from the evil; that is, from the sins, temptations and snares of this wicked world. Thence note, That a spiritual victory over evil is to be preferred before a total exemption from evil; it is a far greater mercy to be kept from sin in our afflictions, than from the afflictions themselves. Learn farther; How necessary divine aid is to our preservation and success even in the holiest and best of enterprizes, and how necessary it is to seek it by fervent prayer. Note also, That such as sincerely devote themselves to Christ's service, are sure of his aid and protection, whilst so employed.

17 Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.

Sanctify them, not initially, for so they were sanctified already, but progressively: Let them increase more and more in grace and holiness. Learn hence, 1. That such as are already sanctified, must labor, and ought to endeavour after further measures, and higher degrees of sanctification: That the most holy may yet be more holy. 2. The word of God is the great instrument in God's hand for his people's sanctification. 3. That the word of God is the truth of God; "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." The word of God is a divine truth, an eternal truth, an infallible truth, an holy truth.

18 As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

Observe here, 1. Christ's mission: the Father sent him into the world. Christ's sending implies the designation of his person, his qualification for the work, his authority and commission. Learn hence, That Christ himself did not of himself undertake the office of a Mediator, but was sent; that is, authorized and commissioned of God so to do: Thou hast sent me into the world. Observe, 2. As Christ's mission, so the apostle's mission: As thou hast sent me, so have I sent them. Learn thence, That none may, or ought to, undertake the office of the ministry, without an authoritative sending from Christ himself; not immediately and extraordinarily by voice or vision, but mediately by the officers of the church. And such as are so sent, are sent by Christ himself, and if so, it is the people's duty to reverence their persons, to respect their office, to receive their message. As thou hast sent me, so have I sent them.

19 And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth.

The word sanctify here, is not to be taken for the cleansing, purifying, or making holy that which before was unclean; but Christ's sanctifying himself imports, 1. His separation or setting himself apart to be a sacrifice for sin. 2. His consecration or dedication of himself to this holy use and service. Hence learn, That Jesus Christ did dedicate and solemnly set himself apart to the great work and office of a Mediator.—Learn, 2. That the great end for which Christ did thus sanctify himself, was, that he might sanctify his members; therefore did he consecrate and set himself apart for us, that we should be consecrated to, and wholly set apart for him.

20 Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word:

Hitherto our Saviour had been praying for himself and his apostles; now he prays for all persons, both Jews and Gentiles, that should believe on him, throughout the world, by the preaching of the gospel: Hence learn, 1. That all believers have a special interest in Christ's prayer. 2. That in the sense of the gospel they are believers, who are wrought upon to believe in Christ through the word. 3. That such is Christ's care of, and love to his own, that they were remembered by him in his prayer, even before they had a being: "I pray not for these alone, but for all that shall believe in me."

21 That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

The special mercy and particular blessing which Christ prays for, on behalf of believers, is a close and intimate union betwixt the Father, himself, and them, and also betwixt one another; such an union as doth in some sort resemble that union which is betwixt God and Christ; not an unity of essence and nature, but of wills and affections. Hence note, 1. That the mystical union betwixt Christ and his members carrieth some resemblance with that union which is betwixt the Father and the Son. 2. That union amongst the ministers and members of Jesus Christ is of so great importance, necessity and consequence, that he did in their behalf principally and chiefly pray for it. An unity of love and affection, of faith and profession, an unity of practice and conversation, are mercies which Christ earnestly prayed for, and has dearly paid for; and nothing is more desired by him now in heaven, than that his disciples should be one among themselves here on earth; "Father, may they be one, as we are one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Here Christ intimates one special advantage that would redound to the world by this desirable union betwixt the ministers and members of Christ; it will, if not convert, yet at least convince the world, that I and my doctrine came from God. Thence note, That union amongst Christ's disciples is one special mean to enlarge the kingdom of Christ, and to cause the world to have better thoughts of him and his doctrine; "By their being one, as we are one, the world will believe that thou didst send me."

22 And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one.

Here observe, 1. Christ's communication of that glory to believers, which he had received of the Father; that is, not his essential glory, but his mediatorial glory: "The glory which thou gavest me." Now Christ hath no glory given him as God, but much glory bestowed upon him as Mediator, Observe, 2. The end of this communication, why he gave his disciples that glory which the Father had given him: namely, that "they might be one." Learn, 1. That God the Father hath bestowed much glory on Christ his Son, as he is man and mediator of the church. 2. That the same glory for kind and substance, though not for measure and degree, which Christ as mediator has received from the Father, is communicated to true believers. 3. That the great end of this communication was, and is, to oblige and enable his people to maintain a very strict union among themselves: "The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one." 4. That unity amongst believers is part of that glory which Christ as Mediator hath obtained for them.

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

Observe here, 1. That as the Father is in Christ, so is Christ in believers, and they in him; the Father is in Christ in respect of his divine nature, essence, and attributes; and Christ is in believers, by the inhabitation of his Holy Spirit. Observe, 2. That the believers' happiness consisteth in their oneness, in being one with God through Christ, and one amongst themselves: "That they may be made perfect in one." Observe, 3. That God the Father loved Christ his Son; "Thou lovest them as thou hast loved me." God loveth Christ, first as God; so he is Primum Amabile, the first object of his love, as representing his attributes exactly. Secondly as Mediator, John x: 17. "Therefore doth my Father love me because I lay down my life for my sheep." Observe, 4. That God the Father loves believers, even as he loved Christ himself: that is, he loves them upon the same grounds that he loved him; namely, for their nearness, and for their likeness to him. 1. For their nearness and relation to him; he loveth Christ as his Son, believers as his children, 1 John iii. 1: "Behold what manner of love the Father bestoweth upon us, that we should be called the Sons of God!" 2. The properties of the Father's love towards Christ and believers are the same: Doth he love Christ with a tender love, with an unchangeable love, with an everlasting love? So doth he love believers also. Observe, 5. That Christ would have the world know that God the Father loveth the children of men, as well as himself: Christ is not ambitious to ingross all our love unto himself, but would have the world take notice of the good-will of his Father, as well as of himself, to lost mankind: of the Father's love, in sending him, as well as of his own love in coming; "That the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

24 Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

Our Saviour had prayed for his disciples' sanctification before, here he prays for their glorification; 1. "That they may be where he is; now Christ is with them in his ordinances, in his word, and at his table: ere long they shall be with him, as his friends, as his spouse, as his companions in his kingdom." 2. That they may be with him where he is; that is, more than the former; a blind man may be where the sun is, but not with the sun, because he doth not enjoy the light and benefit of it; To be with Christ where he is, imports union and communion with him. That being with him where he is, "they may behold his glory;" that is, to see it, and everlastingly to possess and enjoy it. Learn, 1. That all those that are given to Christ as his charge, and as his reward, shall certainly come to heaven to him; "Father, I will that they be with me;" because I have merited that they should be with me: I will that they behold my glory, because I have purchased it at so dear a rate. Learn, 2. That the work and employment of the saints in heaven chiefly consists in seeing and enjoying Christ's glory; for it will be a possessive sight; the language of every look will be, 'This happiness is mine, this glory is mine.' 3. That the top and height of the saints' happiness in heaven consists in this, that they shall be with Christ; "Father, I will that they may be with me, to behold my glory."

25 O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.

Observe here, 1. The appellation given to God; "O righteous Father." This is the sixth time that Christ in this prayer has called God Father, it being so sweet a relation, and producing all love, delight, joy and confidence in God, by him that practically improves it. But observe, that at ver. 11. when Christ prayed for his people's sanctification, he said, holy Father, making use of that attribute which is the cause of all holiness in the creature; but now praying for their glorification, he says, "O righteous Father;" righteous in making good thy promises both to me and them. Observe, 2. What it is that our Saviour affirms concerning the wicked and unbelieving world, that they have not known God; "the world hath not known thee;" not as if the world hath not known him at all, but not known him aright; the unbelieving and unsanctified part of the world having no saving knowledge of God, not living answerable to what they know to be their duty. Observe, 3. What Christ affirms concerning himself: "But I have known thee, and these have known thee." Intimating thus much unto us, that Jesus Christ knows God immediately, and all others know him by the means of Christ; Christ is the original and fountal cause of all the saving knowledge that believers have of God. There is not the least ray of saving illumination, that doth not descend from Christ and the Spirit of Christ: "I have known thee, and these have known that thou didst send me."

26 And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it.—

That is, "I have made known unto them thy nature, attributes, counsels, will and commands, and I will continue the manifestation of the same unto the end." Learn thence, That the saving knowledge of God was not attainable by natural abilities, but cometh to us by the special revelation of Jesus Christ; "I have declared unto them thy name." Learn, 2. That they that have the name of God, his nature and will savingly declared to them, do not stand in need of any farther declarations and discoveries of God's nature and will to be made unto them: "I have declared unto them thy name, and I will declare it."

—That the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them, and I in them.

That is, "That the love which is originally in thyself, as the fountain of all grace, may be communicated and dispensed from thee to them, and become inherent in them." Learn hence, That it is not enough for the people of God that they are beloved of him, and that his love is towards them; but they must endeavour to have it in them; that is, experience it in the effects of it, and in the sense and feeling of it in their own souls. The safety of a christian lies in this, that God loves him; but the joy, the comfort, and happiness of a christian, consists in the knowledge, in the sensible apprehension and feeling of this love; therefore Christ closeth his prayer for his members, with this affectionate and comprehensive petition, "Let the love wherewith thou hast loved me be in them, and I in them."

CHAPTER XVIII.

WHEN Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, and his disciples.

2 And Judas also which betrayed him, knew the place; for Jesus oft-times resorted thither with his disciples.

No sooner had our dear Lord ended his divine prayer, recorded in the foregoing chapter, but he goes forth to meet his sufferings with a willing cheerfulness. He retires with his disciples into a garden, not to hide and shelter himself from his enemies; for if so, it had been the most improper place he could have chosen; it being the accustomed place where he was wont to pray, and a place well known to Judas, who was now coming to seek him: "Judas, which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jesus oft-times resorted thither with his disciples;" so that Christ repaired to this garden, not to shun, but to meet the enemy, to offer himself a prey to the wolves, which in the garden hunted him, and laid hold upon him: he also resorted to this garden now for privacy, that he might freely pour out his soul to God. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ was praying to his Father in the garden, when Judas with his black guard came to apprehend him. As the sin of the first Adam, which brought destruction upon his posterity, was committed in a garden, so the salutary passion of the second Adam, which was to rescue us from that destruction, did begin in the garden also.

3 Judas then having received a band of men, and officers from the chief priests and pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns, and torches, and weapons.

Observe, 1. What a multitude were here employed by the chief priests and pharisees, for apprehending a single person; gown men and sword men, young and old, Jew and Gentile; all sorts of persons contriving his death, as all conditions of people were afterwards to receive a benefit by it. But what need of these lanterns and torches, it being then, as some observe, full moon, when they sought him in the garden? All this argued their zealous industry for our Saviour's apprehension, that they might be sure to find him, in case he should hide himself in any holes or corners of the garden. Learn hence, That persecutors and wicked apostates are not asleep in their designs and actions, but very vigilant and active; when at the same time Christ's own disciples and followers are asleep and careless: how active was Judas, and how watchful was his bloody crew, even at the time when Christ's disciples could not keep their eyes open!

4 Jesus therefore, knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

5 They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also which betrayed him, stood with them.

6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

Observe here, 1. How our Lord's sufferings were all fore-known to himself, before they came upon him, and yet how willingly and cheerfully did he go forth to meet them. Should our sufferings be known unto us before they come upon us, how would it disquiet and disturb us! yea, not only discompose us, but distract us! In great wisdom, therefore, and in tender mercy, has God concealed future events from us. But it was otherwise with Christ; he had an exact knowledge of those bitter sufferings which he was to undergo, and yet with a composed mind he goeth forth to meet them; "Jesus knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth." Lord, how endearing are our obligations to thyself, that when thou knewest before-hand the bitterness of that cup which the justice of God was about to put into thy hand, thou didst not decline to drink it off for our sakes. Observe, 2. That it was not man's power, but Christ's own permission, which brought his sufferings upon him. How easily could Christ have delivered himself out of his enemies' hands, who with a word from his mouth, caused them to go backward and fall to the ground! Christ in speaking those words did let out a little ray or beam of his Deity, and this struck them down, Mark what a strange power was here in the word of Christ, and that not an angry word, neither: He did not chide them, and say, "You wretches, how dare you lay your hands on me, and carry me to judgment, who shall one day be your judge?" Christ only said, I am he, and down they fell. O what fear will Christ send out when he cometh to judge the world, who could send forth such a fear when he yielded up himself to be judged and condemned in the world! If there was so much majesty in the voice of Christ, in one of the lowest acts of his humiliation, what will the voice of a glorified Christ be to sinners, when he shall come as a Judge to condemn the world.

7 Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? and they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way.

9 That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake, Of them which thou gavest me, have I lost none.

Here note, 1. How voluntarily and freely Christ laid down his life. When his enemies were fallen to the ground, he suffered them to rise again, and offers himself to them, to take him and carry him away. Note, 2. How the sight of this glorious miracle of the soldiers falling to the ground, did not deter or discourage them from their wicked purpose; they get up again, and go on with their bloody design. Learn hence, That obstinate and obdurate sinners will not be reclaimed by the most evident and convincing, by the most miraculous and surprising appearances of God against them. Note, 3. How mindful, in the midst of his sufferings, Christ was of his dear disciples, to secure them, at this time, from death and danger, "If ye seek me; let these go their way;" that is my disciples, against whom ye have no warrant at this time. Learn hence, That Christ is so tender of his followers, that he will not put them upon trials, or call them forth to sufferings, till they are ripe and ready fitted and prepared for them. The disciples yet were weak and feeble, timorous and fearful, and Christ had much work and service for them to do in the world; namely to plant and propagate the gospel in foreign countries: he therefore resolves not to lose any one of them by persecution at this time; and thus was his word fulfilled, "Of them which thou gavest me, have I lost none."

10 Then Simon Peter, having a sword, drew it, and smote the highpriest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into thy sheath?

Observe here, St. Peter's love unto and zeal for his Lord and Master, in defence of whom he now draws his sword; but why did he not rather draw upon Judas than upon Malchus! Possibly, because though Judas was most faulty, yet Malchus might be most forward to carry off our Saviour. Oh, how doth a pious breast swell with indignation at the sight of an open affront offered unto its Saviour! Observe farther, The rebuke which Christ gave St. Peter for what he did; though his heart was sincere, yet his hand was ash; good intentions are no warrant for irregular actions; Christ will thank no man for drawing a sword in defence of him without a warrant and commission from him: To resist a lawful magistrate, even in Christ's own defence, is rash zeal, and discountenanced by the gospel.

—The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

¶ Here observe, 1. A metaphorical description of Christ's sufferings: they are a cup put into his hand to drink of, and that by his own Father. They are a cup, and but a cup; God will not overcharge his people; and this cup is from the hand of a Father, yea, from the hand of our Father: The cup which my Father hath given me. Observe, 2. Our Lord's resolution to drink off this cup, how bitter soever, being put to his mouth by his Father's hand: Shall I not drink it? that is, I will drink it. Learn hence, 1. That oftentimes the wisdom of God is pleased to put a cup, a very bitter cup, of affliction, into the hand of those to drink, whom he doth most sincerely love. 2. That when God doth so, it is their duty to drink it in silence and submission: Shall I not drink it? that is I will certainly drink it with cheerfulness and resignation.

12 Then the band and the captain, and officers of the Jews, took Jesus, and bound him,

13 And led him away to Annas first, (for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the highpriest that same year.)

14 Now Caiaphas was he which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people.

Judas having made good his promise to the chief priests, and delivered Jesus a prisoner bound unto their hands, those ravening wolves no sooner seize the Lamb of God, but they thirst and long to suck his innocent blood: yet, lest it should look like a downright murder, they allow him a mock-trial, and abuse the law, by perverting it to injustice and bloodshed. How impossible is it for the greatest innocence and virtue to protect from slander and false accusation! and no person can be so innocent or good, whom false witness may not condemn.

15 ¶ And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple. That disciple was known unto the highpriest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the highpriest.

16 But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple which was known unto the highpriest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.
(No. 29.)

17 Then said the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? he saith, I am not.

18 And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals (for it was cold) and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

All the four evangelists give us an account of Peter's fall in denying his Master. And therein we have observable, 1. The sin itself which he fell into, the denial of Christ, and this backed with an oath; he swore that he knew not the man. Lord! how may the slavish fear of suffering drive the holiest and best of men to commit the foulest and worst of sin! Observe, 2. The occasion of his fall. 1. His presumptuous confidence of his own strength and standing: Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I. Lord! to presume upon ourselves is the ready way to provoke thee to leave us to ourselves. If ever we stand in the day of trial, it is, the fear of falling most enable us to stand; we soon fall, if we believe it impossible to fall. 2. His being in bad company, among Christ's enemies; Peter had better have been a-cold by himself alone, than warming himself at a fire which was compassed in with blasphemies of the soldiers, where his conscience, though not seared, was yet made hard. Observe, 3. The reiteration or repetition of this sin; he denied Christ again and again: he denied him first with a lie, then with an oath and curse. O, how dangerous it is not to resist the beginnings of sin! If we yield to one temptation, satan will assault us with more and stronger. Observe, 4. The heinous and aggravating circumstances of Peter's sin. 1. From the character of his person, a disciple, an apostle, a chief apostle; yet he denies Christ. 2. From the person whom he denies, his Master, his Saviour. 3. The time when he denied him; soon after that Christ had washed his feet; yea, soon after he had received the sacrament from Christ's own hand. How unreasonable then is their objection against coming to the Lord's table, that some who go to it, dishonor Christ as soon as they come from it! Such examples ought not to discourage us from coming to the ordinance, but should excite and increase our watchfulness after we have been there, that our after-deportment may be suitable to the solemnity of a sacramental table.

19 ¶ The highpriest then asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

20 Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing.

21 Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

Our Saviour being brought before Caiaphas the highpriest, he examines him concerning his doctrine and his disciples, pretending him to be guilty of heresy in doctrine, and sedition, in gathering disciples and followers. Our Saviour answers, That, as to his doctrine, he had not delivered it in holes and corners, but had taught publicly in the temple and synagogues, and that in secret he had said nothing: that is, nothing contrary to what he had delivered in public; Christ never willingly affected corners; he taught openly, and propounded his doctrine publicly and plainly in the world. A convincing evidence that both he and his doctrine were of God. Learn hence, 1. That it is not unusual for the best of doctrines to pass under the odious name and imputation of error and heresy. Christ's own doctrine is here charged; The highpriest asked Jesus of his doctrine. 2. That the ministers of Christ, who have truth on their side, may and ought to speak boldly and openly; I speak openly unto the world. "Veritas nihil erubescit præterquam abscondi." Truth blushes at nothing, except at its being concealed. In secret, says Christ, have I said nothing.

22 And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by, struck Jesus with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the highpriest so?

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me?

24 (Now Annas had sent him bound unto Caiaphas the highpriest.)

25 And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself: They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

26 One of the servants of the highpriest (being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off) saith, did I not see thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter then denied again, and immediately the cock crew.

Observe here, 1. How insolently and injuriously an officer strikes our Saviour in this court of judicature: One of the officers struck Jesus with the palm of his hand. What had the holy and innocent Jesus done, to deserve these buffetings? He only made use of the liberty which their law did allow him, which was not to accuse himself, but to put them upon the proof of these accusations which were brought against him.—But, from this instance of our Saviour's sufferings, we learn, That Christ did endure painful buffetings, ignominious and contemptuous usage, even from inferior servants; giving his cheek to the smiters, to testify that shame and reproachful usage which was deserved by us, and to sanctify that condition to us, whenever it is allotted for us. Observe, 2. The meek and gentle reproof which the Lord Jesus gives to this rude officer; he doth not strike him dead upon the place, nor cause that arm to wither which was stretched forth against the Lord's anointed: but only lets him know, that there was no reason for his striking of him. Where note, That though our Saviour doth not revenge himself, yet he vindicates himself, and defends himself, both with law and reason: If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou me? Hence we learn, 1. That we are not literally to understand the command, Mat. v. of turning the cheek to him that smites us. For Christ himself did not this, but defends the innocency of his words. 2. That to stand up in defence of our own innocency, is not contrary either to the duties of patience or forgiveness, or to the practice and example of our Lord Jesus. Note, 3. That when the soldier had struck Christ upon one cheek, he did not turn to him the other also, according to Mat. v. 39. Which evidently shows, that that precept, If they smite thee on one cheek turn the other also, commands only this, that, rather than take revenge, we should bear a second injury. Christians ought rather to suffer a double wrong than to seek a private revenge. Christianity obliges us to bear many injuries patiently, rather than to avenge one privately; but though it binds up our hands from private revenge, yet it doth not shut our mouths from complaining to public authority. Christ's own practice here expounds the precept elsewhere, Mat. v. 39. For he complains here of the officer's injustice in smiting him before the judicatory, and challenges the man to bear witness of the evil.—Observe lastly, How our Lord was not only buffeted, but bound, and sent bound from Annas to Caiaphas, from Caiaphas to Pilate, from Pilate to Herod, and from Herod to Pilate again: and all this on foot through the streets of Jerusalem, from one end of the city to the other; partly to render his passion more public, being made a gazing-stock to the world, and a spectacle both to angels and men. And his condescending to go bound from one highpriest to another, and from one tribunal to another, teaches his people what delinquents they were before the tribunal of God, and what they deserved by reason of sin; even a sentence of eternal condemnation at the tribunal of the just and holy God.

28 ¶ Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment: and it was early, and they themselves went not into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled: but that they might eat the passover.

There were two courts of judicature which our blessed Saviour was brought before and condemned by: 1. The ecclesiastical court or sanhedrim, in which the highpriest sat as judge: here he was condemned to death for blasphemy. 2. The civil court or judgment-hall, where Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, sat judge, who, because he was a Gentile, they would not go into his house, lest they should be defiled; for they accounted it a legal pollution, to come into the house of a Gentile. Where observe, The notorious hypocrisy of these Jews; they scruple the defiling of themselves by coming near the judgment-hall, where Pilate sat, but make no scruple at all to defile themselves with the guilt of that innocent blood which Pilate shed. When persons are over-zealous for ceremonial observations, they are oftentimes too remiss with reference to moral duties. They brought him to the judgment-hall; but they themselves went not in, lest they should be defiled.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring you against this man?

30 They answered and said unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we should not have delivered him up unto thee.

Observe here, 1. How Pilate humors these Jews in their superstition. They scruple to go into the judgment-hall to him; he therefore goes out to them, and demands what accusation they had against Christ. They charge him here only for being a malefactor, or an evil doer in the general; but elsewhere (Luke xxiii.) they particularly accuse him. 1. "For perverting the nation." 2. "For forbidding to pay tribute to Cesar." 3. "For saying that he himself was Christ a King." All which was filthy calumny; yet Christ underwent the reproach of it without opening his mouth:—Teaching us, when we lie under calumny and unjust imputation, to imitate him, who opened not his mouth, but committed his cause to him that judgeth uprightly.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death;

32 That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die.

The Jews being now under the power of the Romans, though they had a power of judging and censuring criminals in smaller matters, yet not in capital cases; they could not pronounce a sentence of death upon any person, say some; they might, and did, say others, punish blasphemers, by stoning them to death; but then their sentence is to be ratified by the Roman power: accordingly, here they had in their ecclesiastical court condemned Christ for blasphemy, now they bring him to Pilate the Roman governor to confirm the sentence of death. From hence it appears, That Christ was the true Messias, being sent into the world when the sceptre was departed from Judah, according to that ancient prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 10. The sceptre shall not depart from Judah until Shiloh come. The Jews had no power absolutely to condemn any man or put him to death; but this power the Roman emperor reserved to his own deputy. This contributed towards the fulfilling of our Saviour's words, Mat. xx. 19. That he should be delivered to the Gentiles, and should be crucified: which was not a Jewish but a Roman punishment. Had the Jews put him to death, they had stoned him. But Christ was to be made a curse for us by hanging upon a tree; and accordingly the Jews execute the counsel of God, though they knew it not, by refusing to put him to death themselves. Learn hence, How willing Christ was to undergo a shameful, painful, and accursed death, that he might testify his love unto, and procure a blessing for his people. Thus the saying of Jesus was fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die.

33 Then Pilate entered into the judgment-hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews?

34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?

35 Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation, and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me: What hast thou done?

36 Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence.

Observe here, 1. Pilate's ensnaring question, Art thou the King of the Jews? How jealous are great men of Jesus Christ, and how afraid are they of his Kingdom, power and authority, as if it would be prejudicial to their authority and power in the world, which was far enough from Christ's thoughts? Observe, 2. The wisdom and caution of our Saviour's answer, he neither affirms nor denies. Though whenever we speak we are bound to speak the truth, yet we are not bound at all times to speak the whole truth. Christ tells him therefore, that upon the supposition that he was a king, yet his kingdom was not earthly, but a spiritual kingdom; he was no temporal king, to rule over his subjects with temporal power and worldly pomp, but a spiritual king in and over his church only, to order the affairs, and look after the government thereof. Learn hence, That Christ as God hath an universal kingdom of power and providence even over the highest of men, and as a Mediator, hath a spiritual kingdom in and over his church. 2. That it is a clear evidence that Christ's kingdom is spiritual, inasmuch as it is not carried on by violence and force of arms, as worldly kingdoms are, but by spiritual means and methods: If my kingdom were of this world, my servants would fight for me: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate, therefore, said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth: Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice.

Pilate asks him again directly and expressly, Art thou a King or not? Our Saviour answers, "Thou sayest that I am a King, and so it is indeed as thou sayest, I am a King, and the King of the Jews too; but not a temporal King, to rule over them after the manner of earthly Kings, with temporal power, and worldly pomp and splendor; but I am a spiritual King, to rule and govern, not only the Jews, but my whole church, consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, after a spiritual manner." Observe here, 1. The dominion and sovereignty of Jesus Christ, he has a kingdom: My kingdom. Observe, 2. The condition and qualification of this kingdom, negatively expressed: My kingdom is not of this world. Observe, 3. The use and end of this kingdom, that the truth may have place among the children of men for their salvation: To this end was I born, and came into the world, to bear witness unto the truth. Observe, 4. The subjects of Christ's kingdom declared: Every one that is of the truth, heareth my voice; That is, every one who is by divine grace disposed to believe and love the truth, will hear and obey Christ's doctrine.

38 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth?

And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, I find in him no fault at all.

39 But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the passover: will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

40 Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

Observe here, 1. The question Pilate put to Christ, What is truth? A most noble and important question, had it been put forth with an honest heart, with a mind fairly disposed for information and satisfaction: but it is evident Pilate's inquiry was not serious; nay, it is generally thought that Pilate asked this question in scorn, contempt and derision: for he stays not for our Lord's answer, but as soon as he started this query, went off the bench in haste. Learn hence, That this question, What is truth? or how may we come to the knowledge of the truth? is of unspeakable use and importance, and a question whereon the whole frame and constitution of religion depends: because truth is claimed by all parties of men, by all professors of religion. Ask the different parties from the old gentleman at Rome to the poorest Quaker and Muggletonian, Where is truth? and they will all tell you, They are in the possession of it: every sect hath thus much of popery with it, that the professors of it think themselves infallible, and every one cries out, Here is truth. But God has given us a two-fold light to search for truth; namely, the light of reason, and the light of scripture, or divine revelation. The former Solomon calls the candle of the Lord, set up in our breasts by God, on purpose to discover truth unto us. God allows us, yea, enjoins us, the free and impartial use of our understandings and judgments, in order to the finding out of divine truth; but because nature's light or the light of natural reason is not clear and bright enough to give us a prospect of supernatural truths, (for nature and reason can never dictate those things which depend only upon God's free grace and good pleasure; such as the doctrines of a Saviour and Redeemer, and the method of man's salvation by the sufferings of the Son of God,) it had been blasphemy once to have supposed such things, had not God revealed them in scripture: therefore the second standard of divine truth, is the infallible word of God. The gospel of Christ is the way, and the truth:

Truth came by Jesus Christ. And would men be ruled and conducted by these unalterable standards of truth, namely, right reason and divine revelation, they would easily agree in their judgments what is to be believed, and all duties and controversies would vanish. Right reason and inspired scriptures are the best judges of controversies; they being the fixed standards and measures of divine truth, can best resolve Pilate's question here, and tell us What is truth. Observe, 2. How unwilling, how very unwilling Pilate was to be the instrument of our Saviour's death: he came forth three several times, and tells the Jews that he finds no fault in him: he bids them take him, and judge him according to their law. Pilate, a pagan, absolves Christ, whilst the hypocritical Jews, that heard his doctrine, and saw his miracles, do condemn him. Observe, 3. Pilate having absolved Christ, I find no fault in him, endeavours next to release him, and takes occasion from their custom of having a prisoner released to them at their feast, to insinuate his desire that they should choose Christ: I have a custom that I should release unto you one at the passover. Observe lastly, How the Jews prefer Barabbas, a robber, before the holy and innocent Jesus: They all cry out, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas.—Learn hence, That no persons, how wicked and vile soever, are so odious in the eyes of the enemies of God, as Christ himself was, and his friends and followers now are: Christ did find it thus in his own person when on earth: Barabbas; a robber, was preferred before him: and now he is in heaven, he suffers in his members, the filth of the world being preferred before them.

CHAPTER XIX.

THEN Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged him.

Observe here, 1. That as the death of the cross was a Roman punishment, so it was the manner of the Romans to whip their malefactors before they crucified them. Accordingly Pilate took Jesus and scourged him. Oh! amazing sight, the great God of heaven and earth is lashed and scourged like a base slave. Behold! hard-hearted sinner, the lashes wherewith thy Redeemer is cruelly tormented, were to preserve thee from the severer lashes of thine own accusing and condemning conscience, and to save thee from being lashed by the rage and fury of devils to all eternity. Observe, 2. How unwilling, how very unwilling Pilate was to be the instrument of our Saviour's death: it is very evident, that he had a mind to release him; and it is concluded, that Pilate was thus forward to scourge Christ, hoping that the Jews would have been satisfied with this lighter punishment, and to have dismissed him. From this instance we may gather, that hypocrites within the pale of the visible church, may be guilty of such tremendous acts of wickedness, as the conscience of an infidel and pagan may boggle at, and protest against. Pilate, a pagan, absolves Christ, and seeks to release him, whilst the hypocritical Jews, who had heard his doctrine, and saw his miracles, condemn him. Observe, 3. How wretchedly Pilate suffers himself to be overcome with the Jews' importunity, and contrary to the light of his own reason and conscience, delivers the holy and innocent Jesus first to be scourged, and then crucified. Learn thence, That it is a vain apology for sin, when persons pretend that it was not committed with their own consent, but at the instigation and importunity of others: for such is the frame and constitution of man's soul, that none can make him either wicked or miserable, without his own consent: Then Pilate took Jesus and scourged him.

2 And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe.

3 And said, Hail, King of the Jews: And they smote him with their hands.

Behold here, 1. The crown which they have prepared for him, a crown of thorns, and with great cruelty they press it close to his sacred temples, whilst those sharp pointed briars piercing those tender parts, let out that blood, which in a short time was to be more freely poured forth for the redemption of captive souls. The next part of our Saviour's sufferings consisted of cruel mockings: Christ had owned himself to be the King of the Jews; that is, a spiritual King, in and over his church: but the Jews expecting that the Messiah should have appeared in the pomp of an earthly prince, and finding it to be quite otherwise in our Saviour, they look upon him as a deceiver and impostor, and accordingly treat him as a mock-king, with all the marks of derision and scorn: For, first, they put a crown upon his head, but a very ignominious and painful one; A crown of thorns. They put a sceptre in his hand, but it was that of a reed: a robe of scarlet or purple upon his body, and then bowed their knees unto him, as they were wont to do before their princes, crying, Hail, King! Thus were all the marks of scorn imaginable put upon our dear Redeemer; yet what they did in jest, God permitted to be done in earnest; for all these things were ensigns and marks of sovereignty, and Almighty God caused the royal dignity of his Son to shine forth, even in the midst of his greatest abasement. Whence was all this jeering and sport, but to flout majesty? And why did the Son of God undergo all this ignominy, disgrace and shame, but to show what was due unto us for our sins; as also to give us an example, to bear all the scorn, reproach, and shame imaginable, for the sake of him who for the joy that was set before him, despised the shame, as well as endured the cross? Verily nothing was omitted that either the malice of men, or the rage of devils, could possibly invent, either to torment or reproach him. But with what a lamb-like meekness, with what an astonishing patience did he undergo all these trials, both for our good, and in our stead.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him.

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe — And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man.

6 When the chief priests therefore, (No. 29.)

and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him.

Observe here, 1. The great variety of our Saviour's sufferings; he is made the foot-ball of cruelty and scorn; his sacred body is stript of his garments, and his back disguised with purple robes; his tender temples wounded with a thorny crown; his face spit upon, his cheeks buffeted, his head smitten, his hand accepted with a reed. By his wearing a crown of thorns, he took away the bitterness of that curse, which our sins brought upon the earth, Gen. iii. 18. Thorns and briars shall it bring forth. Christ, by his bitter and bloody sufferings, has turned all the curses of his people into crowns and blessings. Observe, 2. The noble testimony given of Christ's innocency, by the mouth of Pilate, I find in him no fault at all: he doth not say, I find him not guilty of what is laid to his charge; but gives an universal testimony of our Lord's innocency: I find no fault at all in him. In spite of all malice, innocency shall find some friends and abettors. Rather than Christ shall want witnesses, Pilate's mouth shall be opened for his justification; how fain would he have freed Jesus, whom he found faultless! Our Lord found more compassion from Pilate, an Heathen, than he did from them of his own nation. Pilate would have saved him, but they cry out for his blood: Hypocrites within the visible church may be guilty of such monstrous acts of wickedness, as the consciences of Heathens, without the church, may boggle at, and protest against. Pilate, a Pagan, pronounces Christ innocent, whilst the hypocritical Jews, who had heard his doctrine, and seen his miracles, do condemn him. Observe, 3. Who influenced the main body of the Jews, to desire Pilate to put Jesus to death; it was the chief priests and elders, they persuaded the multitude: woe be to the common people, when their guides and leaders are corrupt; and woe unto them much more, if they follow their wicked and pernicious counsels: the Jews here followed their guides the chief priests, but it was to their own destruction, as well as their leaders: When the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch.

7 The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God.

8 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;

9 And went again into the judgment-hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? but Jesus gave him no answer.

Observe here, 1. How ambitious the chief priests were that Christ should die under color of law: We have a law, and by our law he ought to die. The law which they allude to, is the law for putting false prophets and blasphemers to death: of which number they conclude Christ to be, because he made himself the Son of God; whereas he did not make himself so, or only pretend to be so, but really and indeed was so: to wit, the eternal Son of God. Such as are indeed blasphemers, and do arrogate to themselves what is proper to God only, by the law of God they ought to be put to death; but Christ was not guilty of the violation of that law; for he was indeed the Son of God, and did not make himself so. Observe, 2. How full of fear the conscience of Pilate was, when the Jews told him that Jesus made himself the Son of God; he was afraid to condemn him, not knowing but that he might be some divine and extraordinary person, and consequently might draw down divine vengeance on his own head. Learn hence, That serious thoughts of a Deity will strike terror even into a natural conscience, especially when the sinner is following a course which his own judgment cannot approve; when Pilate heard of Christ's being the Son of God, he was afraid, knowing that what he had done to him, was against his own conscience. Observe, 3. The question Pilate puts to Christ upon this occasion, Whence art thou? that is, What is thy original or parentage? Art thou a divine person or not? Our blessed Saviour being unwilling to obstruct his own sufferings, or to discover any thing that might hinder Pilate from proceeding against him, would give him no answer, having before made a reasonable and sufficient defence. O how ready was Christ to lay down his life for sinners, and how willing to pay that ransom for his people, which the justice of God required.

10 Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

11 Jesus answered, thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin.

Observe here, 1. How offended Pilate was at Christ's silence, and how unreasonably he boasts of his power and authority; Have not I power to crucify thee, and power to release thee? It is the great sin and snare of men in power, to forget from whom they derive their power, and to think that they may employ their power as they please. Observe, 2. The piety and meekness of our Saviour's answer. Thou couldest have no power against me, except it were given thee from above. That is, thou hast no power over me, nor couldst thou inflict any punishment upon me, were it not that my Father had, in his great wisdom, divine counsel, and for glorious ends, permitted it so to be. Learn, That Christ's being under the power of any man, how great and eminent soever, did flow from the peculiar dispensation of God, who, in his wise and wonderful counsel, so ordered it and ordained it, for the redemption and salvation of his people; he was above all human power as God, and no ways obnoxious to Pilate's power, being a perfectly innocent man. Observe, 3. How Christ charges his death more upon Judas and the Jews, than upon Pilate and the Gentiles; They that delivered me unto thee have the greater sin. Not that Pilate was excused from sin, in delivering Christ to be crucified; he sinned heinously in abusing his power, but Judas sinned more in delivering him up to the chief priests, and the chief priests in delivering him up to Pilate, than Pilate himself, whom they made a tool to serve their malice and revenge; they had better means of knowledge than he, and so sinned against more light than he; and consequently their guilt was greater, and their condemnation heavier than his. Learn thence, That the greater means of light and knowledge persons sin against, the more aggravated is their guilt, and the more heightened will be their condemnation: He that delivered me unto thee, hath the greater sin.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him; but the Jews cried out, saying, if thou let this man go, thou art not Cesar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king, speaketh against Cesar.

13 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

Still observe, How unwilling Pilate was to put Christ to death: conscience bid him spare, popularity bids him kill; how frequently and how fervently did he contend with the Jews, till they make it a state case, and tacitly accuse him for a traitor to the Roman Emperor, if he released him: If thou let this man go, thou art not Cesar's friend. When Pilate heard that, he delivers up the innocent Jesus to be crucified. Hence learn, That the natural consciences of men, and the innate notions of good and evil, may carry men on a great way in opposing that which is a bare faced iniquity; but, at last, either fear or shame will over-rule, if there be not a superior and more noble principle. Though Pilate's conscience acquitted Christ, and his mouth had declared that he had found no fault at all in him; yet fear of Cesar's displeasure causes him to deliver up to death the holiest and best of men, against his judgment and his conscience: When Pilate heard that, he brought Jesus forth unto them.

14 And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your king.

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your king? The chief priests answered. We have no king but Cesar.

16 Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified—

Observe here, how careful the Holy Ghost is to record and set down the time when Pilate gave sentence against Christ. In general it was on the day of the preparation for the passover; that is, the day immediately before it, when they prepared every thing needful for the solemnization; and in particular, it was about the sixth hour of that day. St.

Mark calls it the third hour: St. John the sixth; but is easily reconciled thus: the Jews divided the day into four quarters, which they called hours: the first was called the third hour, which answers to the ninth; the second called the sixth hour, answering our twelfth; the third, called the ninth hour, answering our three in the afternoon; the fourth, called the twelfth hour, which was the time of their retirement from labor, and beginning of the first night watch. Now the whole time, from the third hour to the sixth, that is, from nine to twelve, was called the third hour; and the whole intervening time, from the sixth to the ninth, that is, from twelve to three, is called the sixth hour; and so of the rest. Now when St. John says, it was about the sixth hour when Christ was condemned by Pilate, and led away to be crucified, and St. Mark says it was the third hour, we are to understand, that St. Mark takes in the whole time of the third hour, from nine to twelve; and St. John saying it was about the sixth hour, implies, that it was near twelve; so that between the hours of nine and twelve our Lord was sentenced, and led away to his cross about twelve, fastened to his cross, upon which he hung till the ninth hour; that is, till about three in the afternoon; during which time, there was such an eclipse of the sun, as did occasion darkness over all the earth—Learn hence, The great love and condescension of Christ, in stooping so low, to have his sufferings lengthened out upon our accounts, to expiate our guilt, which deserveth eternal suffering; that he might, by his example, warn us to prepare for trials of long continuance, and sanctify a state of continual affliction to us. Behold the Son of God harassed all night before he suffered, hurried from place to place, posted backward and forward from Pilate to Herod, and from Herod to Pilate, wearied, scourged, buffeted, crowned with thorns, at last nailed to the cross, and hanging thereupon from about twelve to three, in exquisite torture of body, and under the sense of his Father's wrath in his soul. O Lord! thy kindness towards us is matchless and inimitable, never was love like thine.

—And they took Jesus and led him away.

17 And he bearing his cross, went forth into the place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha:

18 Where they crucified him, and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

Observe here, 1 That it was a custom among the Romans, to cause the person condemned to crucifying, to carry his own cross; accordingly our Saviour bare his own cross part of the way, till fainting under the burden of it, they laid it upon another, not out of mercy, but malice, reserving him for a more public death; they were loath he should go away in a fainting fit. But why could not Christ bear his own cross, who was able to bear the sins of the whole world, when hanging upon the cross? Answer, 1 Probably, the Jews' malice provided him with a cross of an extraordinary greatness, proportionable to the crimes they charged him with. 2 He was much debilitated and weakened, with his long watching and sweating the night before. 3. The sharp edges of the cross grating his late whipped and galled shoulders, might occasion the fresh bleeding of his wounds, and his weakening thereby. 4. Hereby he gave the world a demonstration of the truth of his humanity, that he was in all things like unto us, with respect to his human nature, and the common infirmities of that nature. Herein, like Isaac, Christ cheerfully carried the wood on which he was to be offered up a sacrifice to divine justice.

Observe, 2. The infamous company which our holy Lord suffered with, two thieves; on either side one, and himself in the midst: it had been a sufficient disparagement to our blessed Redeemer, to be sorted with the best of men; but to be numbered with the scum of mankind, is such an indignity as confounds our thoughts. This was designed by the Jews to dishonor and disgrace our Saviour the more, and to persuade the world that he was the greatest of offenders; but God over-ruled this, for fulfilling an ancient prophecy concerning the Messias, Isa. liii. ult. And he was numbered with the transgressors.

19 ¶ And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross, And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20 This title then read many of the Jews; for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city; and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

21 Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The king of the Jews; but that he said, I am king of the Jews.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written, I have written.

Observe here, 1. The inscription written by Pilate over our suffering Saviour; This is Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews. It was the manner of the Romans, when they crucified a malefactor, to publish the cause of his death in capital letters over his head, that so the equity of their proceedings might more clearly appear to the people. Now it is observable how wonderfully the wisdom of God over-ruled the heart and pen of Pilate to draw this title, which was truly honorable, and fix it to his cross. Pilate, who before was his judge, and pronounced him innocent, is now his herald to proclaim his glory. Learn hence, That the regal dignity of Christ was openly proclaimed by an enemy, and that in the time of his greatest reproaches and sufferings. Pilate, without his own knowledge, did our Saviour an eminent piece of service; he did that for Christ, which none of his own disciples durst do; not designedly, but from the special over-ruling providence of God. No thanks to Pilate for all this; because the highest services performed to Christ undesignedly, shall neither be accepted nor rewarded by God.—Observe, 2 How the Jews endeavour to alter this: Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews. The Jews thought it would be a disgrace to them that Christ should be reported abroad to have been their king, therefore they desire an alteration of the writing: but Pilate, that wrote in honor of Christ, stiffly defends what he had done: to all their importunity he returns this resolute answer: What I have written, I have written. Surely the constancy of Pilate at this time, must be attributed to special divine Providence. How wonderful was it, that he who before was as inconstant as a reed, should now be fixed as a pillar of brass! Whence is this, but from the God of spirits moving upon his spirit to write, and to defend what was written?—The providence of God hath a prospect beyond the understanding of all creatures.

23 ¶ Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments (and made four parts, to every soldier a part) and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout.

24 They said therefore among themselves. Let us not rent it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be? that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

Here we have recorded our Saviour's sufferings from the soldiers; they stript him of his garments, before they fastened him to his cross, and divided those garments which could be parted amongst them, and cast lots for his woven coat, which could not be divided. Little did these vile soldiers think that they were now fulfilling a scripture prophecy: Yet so it was, this action of theirs being foretold, Psal. xxii. 18. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.—Not that this prophecy made them do it, but was fulfilled by their doing of it. From hence we may gather, that Christ suffered naked upon the cross; as naked, some say, as he came into the world. We had made ourselves naked to our shame; and Christ became naked to cover our shame. If, sensible of our own nakedness and shame, we flee unto him by faith, we shall be clothed with robes of righteousness and garments of everlasting praise.

25 ¶ Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

26 When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, Behold thy son.

27 Then saith he to his disciple, Behold thy mother. And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home.

These words contain our Saviour's affectionate recommendation of his distressed mother to the care of a dear disciple. It was an argument of Christ's wonderful love to her, that when he was nailed to the cross, and ready to die, he was more concerned for his mother's sorrows, than for his own sufferings. Now was Simeon's prophecy fulfilled, Luke ii. 35, A sword shall pass through thine own soul also. Her soul was pierced for him, both as his natural mother, and also as a mystical member of him her head; therefore Christ applies these comfortable words as a salve to her wounds, even whilst his own were bleeding unto death. Woman, behold thy Son. Where note, He calls her woman, and not mother; he doth not say, Mother, behold thy Son; but woman, behold him. Not that Christ was ashamed of, or unwilling to own her as his mother: but either, 1. Fearing that calling her by that name should augment and increase her grief and trouble. Or else, 2. To intimate his change of state and condition, that being ready to die and return to his Father in heaven, he was above all earthly relations, and knew no one after the flesh, no, not his very mother: yet see at the same time, when he was above her, and about to leave her, how his care manifested itself for her, when his soul and body were full of anguish to the very brink; yet all this makes him not in the least unmindful of so dear a relation. Thence learn, That Christ's tender care of his mother, even in the time of his greatest distress, is an excellent pattern for all children to imitate and follow to the end of the world. St. John here obeyed Christ's command, and imitated his example; he took her to his own home; that is, he treated her with all that dutiful regard which a tender and indulgent mother challenges from a pious and obedient son. No personal trial or trouble upon ourselves doth exempt us from the performance of our duty towards others, especially towards our near and dear relations: Christ, in the extremity of his sufferings, accounted it his duty to take care of, and provide for his dear mother; teaching us by his example, that children ought to evidence that they honor their parents, by taking care of them in their decayed and desolate condition. Again, inasmuch as St. John took care of the holy mother after her dear Son's death, That disciple took her to his own home: we learn, That the Lord never removes one comfort, and takes away the means of subsistence from his people, but he raises up another in the room of it. It is very probable that Joseph her husband was before this time dead, and Jesus her Son was now dying; but still God provides; he raises up St. John to take care of her; he takes her to his own home, and looks upon her as one of his family. But how comes St. John above the rest to have this honorable service put upon him, and this high trust reposed in him? Answer, the text tells us, he was the disciple whom Jesus loved; that is, in a more particular manner, treating him with greater freedom and familiarity than the rest; he also evidenced more love unto, and more courage and resolution for Christ, than the rest of his disciples, he standing by the cross, when they got afar off, Mark xv. 40. Thence we learn, That such as are beloved of Christ, as do keep close unto him, and express most zeal and resolution for him, shall be peculiarly honored by him, and be employed in the highest services for him.

28 ¶ After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth.

Observe here, 1. The affliction or suffering which our Saviour complained of, and that is, thirst; there are two sorts of thirst, one natural and proper, the other spiritual and figurative: Christ felt both at this time. His body thirsted by reason of those agonies which it labored under. His soul thirsted in vehement desires, and fervent longings, to accomplish that great and difficult work he was now about. 2. The design and end of our Lord's complaint: That the scripture might be fulfilled, he saith, I thirst. Our Saviour finding that all was accomplished, which he was to do before his death, but only the fulfilling that one scripture, Psalm lxi. 21. They gave me vinegar to drink; he for the accomplishment thereof, said I thirst. Whence note, That such were the agonies and extreme sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ upon the cross, that they drank up his very spirits, and made him cry, I thirst. 2. That when Christ cried out, I thirst, it was to show, that whatever was foretold by the prophets concerning him, was exactly accomplished, and even to a circumstance fulfilled in him: That the scripture might be fulfilled, Jesus saith, I thirst.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

Observe here, 1. Our Lord's last words, It is finished—2. His last act, He bowed his head, and gave up the ghost. As to the former, his last words, It is finished, this might be the probable intendment of it: 1. It is finished, that is, now is my Father's eternal counsel concerning me accomplished, and now is the promise that he made of my becoming a sacrifice for sin fulfilled; both my Father's purpose and my Father's promise are now receiving their final accomplishment. 2. It is finished; that is, the scriptures are now fulfilled; all the types that did prefigure me, all the prophetic predictions that were made of me, all the Jewish sacrifices that pointed at me, have now received their final accomplishment in me, and are abolished in my death. 3. It is finished: that is, my sufferings are now ended, my race is run, my work is done, I am now putting my last hand to it, my death is before me, I have finished the work, the whole work which I came into the world for doing as well as dying; all is upon the matter completed. 4. It is just finishing, it will be instantly finished. Again, 4. It is finished; that is, the fury and malice, the rage and revenge of my enemies is now ended, they have done their worst; the chief priests and soldiers, the judges and witnesses, the executioners and tormentors, have all tired out themselves with the exercise of their own malice; but now their spite and spleen, their envy and enmity is ended, and the Son of God is at rest. 5. It is finished; that is, the glorious work of man's redemption and salvation is perfected and performed, and consummated and completed, the price is paid, satisfaction is given, redemption is purchased, and salvation insured to a miserable world. Woe unto us, if Christ had left but one farthing of our debt to the justice of God unpaid, (No 29.)

paid, we must have lain in hell to all eternity, as being insolvent; But Christ has by one offering for ever perfected them that are sanctified. Learn thence, That Jesus Christ hath perfected, and completely finished the great work of redemption committed to him by God the Father. Observe, 2. Our Saviour's last act: He bowed his head and gave up the ghost. Whence learn, The spontaneity and voluntariness of Christ's sufferings, how freely he surrendered to death: his soul was not rent from him; but yielded up to God by him; Christ was a volunteer in dying; though his death was a violent death, yet it was a voluntary sacrifice: He bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

31 The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, (for that sabbath-day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs.

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water.

35 And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe.

36 For these things were done, that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.

37 And again another scripture saith, They shall look on him whom they pierced.

These verses contain several remarkable passages, tending to the confirmation of our faith, in the belief of the certainty and reality of our Saviour's death; in which the Jews, the soldiers, and St. John, do all give their several and sufficient evidences. Observe, 1. The Jews' part in clearing up this truth; they desire Pilate (who had power alone to dispose of the dead bodies of condemned persons,) that the legs of the crucified persons might be broken to hasten their death, that so they might be taken away, and buried; because, according to the law, Deut. xxi. 22, 23, the land was defiled with those that were hanged, if not timely buried; and they judged, if the bodies of these persons did remain on the cross all that night, and the next sabbath-day, which was an high day, (the ordinary sabbath, and the first day of the passover, or feast of unleavened bread and meeting together) it might pollute both them and their feast. Whence note, The cursed hypocrisy of these Jews: they look upon themselves as strictly bound to observe an outward ceremony, but their consciences never scruple to violate the most weighty precepts of the moral law; they strictly observe the ceremonial precept, that the dead bodies should not remain upon the cross; but they scruple not to crucify the Son of God, and to use him with the utmost rigour, desiring his bones may be broken. Observe, 2. The soldiers' part contributed to clear the truth of Christ's death: they execute what the Jews had desired, and Pilate granted, breaking the legs of the two thieves, but not of Jesus, because he was already dead; but one of the soldiers, resolving to make sure work, thrust a spear in his side, and there came out straightway blood and water proving that he was really dead. All which points out to us, that it is he who came by water and blood, 1-John v. 6. and that from the merit and efficacy of his death, there floweth out blood for the obtaining remission of sin, and water, to regenerate and wash us from our uncleanness. From the barbarous soldiers' piercing Christ's side after he was dead, we learn, That no cruelty was omitted towards Christ, either dead or alive, which might testify the great desert of our sin, nor was there any needful evidence wanting, which might make clear the truth of his death; the soldiers' piercing of our Saviour's side, was at once an exercise of their cruelty, and an evidence of the certainty of Christ's death. Observe, 3. St. John's part in this evidence; he avouches, That Christ really died, and expressly affirms, that he saw it with his own eyes for the confirmation of our faith; He that saw it bare record, and his record is true. And further shows, That by these actions of the soldiers, that was done, by which several scripture prophecies were fulfilled, and received their accomplishment; particularly, that of Exodus xii. 46. concerning the paschal lamb, which was a type of Christ, That a bone of it should not be broken; and that prediction, Zech. xii. 10. They shall look on him whom they have pierced. Learn hence, That Christ is the truth and substance of that type, the paschal lamb mentioned, Exod. xii. and the true pasover sacrificed for us; therefore what was ordained concerning the paschal lamb, is applied here to Christ, as the substance of that type; A bone of him shall not be broken.

38 ¶ And after this, Joseph of Arimathea (being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of the Jews) besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus, and Pilate gave him leave: he came therefore and took the body of Jesus, 39 And there came also Nicodemus (which at the first came to Jesus by night) and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

40 Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes, with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There laid they Jesus therefore, because of the Jews' preparation-day, for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

This last paragraph of the chapter gives us an account of our Lord's honorable burial; such a funeral as never was since graves were first digged. Where observe, 1. Our Lord's body must be begged before it could be buried, the dead bodies of malefactors being in the power, and at the disposal of the judge; Pilate grants it, and accordingly the dead body is taken down, wrapped in fine linen, and prepared for the sepulchre. Observe, 2. The persons who bestowed this honorable burial upon Christ, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus; the one provided fine linen, the other fine spices, and they jointly wound and embalmed his body after the Jewish manner; both of them worthy, though close disciples: grace doth not always make a public and open show where it is; but as there is much secret treasure unseen in the bowels of the earth, so is there much grace in the hearts of some saints, which the world takes little notice of. We read of none of the apostles at Christ's funeral; fear had put them to flight; but Joseph and Nicodemus appeared boldly: if God strengthens the weak, and leaves the strong to the prevalency of their own fears, the weak shall be as David, and the strong as tow. Observe, 3. The grave or sepulchre in which our Lord was buried: it was a sepulchre in a garden, to expiate Adam's sin committed in a garden; as by the sin of the first Adam we were driven out of paradise, the garden of pleasure; so by the sufferings of a second Adam, who lay buried in a garden, we may hope for entrance into the heavenly paradise. And it was in a new sepulchre, wherein never any man was laid, lest his adversaries should say, it was another that was risen, who was buried there before, or that he arose as one of the old prophets did by touching the bones of some other dead person. Observe, 4. The manner of our Lord's funeral; it was hasty, public, and decent; it was hasty, by reason of the straitness of time; the sabbath was approaching, and all business is laid aside to prepare for that. Teaching us, How much it is our duty to dispatch our worldly business early on the eve of the Lord's day, that we may be the better prepared to sanctify that day. Again, our Lord's funeral was public and open; all persons that would, might be spectators, to cut off occasion from any to object, that there was deceit and fraud used in or about our Lord's burial; yet he was also interred decently, his holy body being wrapt in fine linen, and perfumed with spices, according to the Jewish custom. Observe, 5. The reasons why our Lord was thus buried, seeing he was to rise again in as short a time as other men lie by the walls; doubtless it was to declare the certainty of his death, and the reality of his resurrection, to fulfil the types and prophecies which went before of him: As Jonah being three days and three nights in the whale's belly. He was also buried to complete his humiliation, this being the lowest step to which he could descend in his abased state. Finally, He went into the grave that he might conquer death in his own territories. Observe lastly, Of what use our Lord's burial is to us his followers: it shows us the amazing depth of his humiliation, from what and to what his love brought him, even from the bosom of his Father to the bosom of the grave. It may also comfort us against the fears of death: the grave could not long keep Christ, it shall not always keep us; it was a loathsome prison before, it is a perfumed bed now; he whose head is in heaven, need not fear to put his feet into the grave. Awake and sing, thou that dwellest in the dust, for the enmity of the grave is slain by Christ.

CHAPTER XX.

This and the following chapter give us an account of our Saviour's exaltation and victorious triumph over all his enemies, by his powerful resurrection. All the four evangelists do confirm the truth of it, by recording the several steps and degrees of the manifestation of it.—In this chapter Christ's resurrection is confirmed, first to Mary Magdalene, next to Peter and John, then to all the disciples, except Thomas.

THE first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

In this verse is recorded how Mary Magdalene came early to the sepulchre, on the first day of the week, to anoint the dead body of our Lord Jesus. Where note, That though her heart did burn with an ardent zeal and affection to her crucified Lord, yet the commanded duties of the sabbath were not omitted by her; she kept close, and silently spent that holy day in a mixture of grief and hope: her example is a good pattern of sabbath sanctification, and worthy of our imitation. Note, 2. What magnanimity and courage is found in this weak woman; she followed Christ courageously, when his disciples left him cowardly; she accompanied him to his cross, she followed his hearse to the grave, when his disciples durst not appear; and now very early in the morning she goes to visit his sepulchre, fearing neither the darkness of the night, nor the presence of the watchmen. Learn thence, That courage is the special gift of God, and if he gives it to the feeble sex, even to timorous and fearful women, it is not in the power of man to make them afraid.

2 Then she runneth and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

It was a great honor that God put upon this poor woman Mary Magdalene, that she has the first notice of our Saviour's resurrection, and is the first that discovers it to the apostles. But why had not the virgin Mary, his disconsolate mother, this privilege conferred on her, rather than Mary Magdalene, who had been a grievous sinner? Doubtless this was for the comfort of all true penitents, and administers great consolation to them: as the angels in heaven rejoice, much more doth Christ joy in the recovery of one repenting sinner, than in multitudes of holy and just persons (such was the blessed Virgin) who need no repentance.

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together; and the other disciple did out-run Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5 And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie:

7 And the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw and believed.

9 For as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead.

Here observe, 1. How Peter and John, moved with Mary Magdalene's words, They have taken away the Lord, &c. do run to the sepulchre to satisfy themselves in the truth of it.—Such as sincerely love Christ, upon the least intimation that he is missing, bestir themselves with great activity and diligence, that they may see him, or hear of him: Peter and John run to the sepulchre to see what was become of their holy Master. Observe, 2. That there was such clear evidence about Christ's grave, as made it apparent that he was indeed risen from the dead, and not conveyed away, either by friends or foes: it cannot be supposed that any of his friends (could they have come at it) would have so handled his holy body, as to carry it away naked; and for his foes, had they stole away the body, they would never have left the fine linen behind them. Observe, 3. That when Christ arose from the grave, he left his grave clothes behind him; whereas when Lazarus arose, he came forth with his grave-clothes about him; It teaches us, That Christ rose never to die more, but to live and reign for ever: therefore he left his grave, as never to make use of them more. But Lazarus was to die again, death was once more to have dominion over him; he therefore came forth with his grave-clothes about him. Observe, lastly, How ignorant the apostles were of the doctrine of Christ's resurrection and of the holy scriptures, which declared he was to rise again from the dead: They knew not the scriptures, that is, they did not heed and regard them, ponder them in their hearts, and feed upon them by faith.

10 Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

11 ¶ But Mary stood without at the sepulchre, weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre.

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

Here we have a description of the great love of Mary Magdalene, which she expressed towards Christ after the resurrection; she went to his sepulchre early, when it was yet dark: she hastily calls the disciples, Peter and John, to the sepulchre; and she stays behind weeping at the sepulchre, when they were gone away to their own home. And as Mary first sought him, and longest sought him, so she first found him. Here note, 1. Mary's carriage and behaviour towards her Saviour: this is discovered by her patient attendance, She stood without at the sepulchre; by her passionate mourning, she stood at the sepulchre weeping; by her unwearied diligence, she stooped down and looked into the sepulchre; Here was great love indeed in this poor woman; a love stronger than death; a love which did out-strip and go beyond the greatest apostles. Learn thence, 1. That true love to Christ suffers not itself to be stinted or limited, no, not by the greatest examples; the weakest woman that truly loves Christ, may piously strive with the great apostle in this point: though he be more learned, wiser, more useful, and more eminent than any of us, yet it is holy and wise, not to suffer ourselves to be exceeded by any in our love to Christ; every christian may strive to exceed any one in grace, and to attain the highest place in the kingdom of heaven. Learn, 2. That strong love is valiant and undaunted, it will grapple and encounter with the strongest opposition; Mary fears nothing in seeking of her Lord, neither the darkness of the night, nor the terror of the soldiers, nor the malice of the Jews: love is strong as death, and the flames thereof are vehement.—Note farther, The success of Mary Magdalene's love to Christ, and unwearied attendance on his sepulchre; she found not the dead body of Christ, and it is well she did not: for if death could have held him, it would not have let us go. But though she found not her lord in the grave, she found two of his servants there, two angels; of all things in the world, one would have least expected to find an angel in a grave, spirits in the place of dead bodies, and immortality in the place of corruption. But from hence we learn, That such as sincerely seek the Lord, shall certainly find, if not the very thing which they seek, yet that which is much fitter and much better for them: Mary did not find Christ's dead body, but she finds that which is more comfortable for her to find; namely, two angels to testify that he was risen. Where note, The posture of these angels described: the one sitting at the head, the other at the feet: it is a matter of comfort to the members of Christ, that angels do not wait upon the head only, but upon the feet also; and it ought to be matter of imitation also. Let us imitate our blessed Saviour, in having an angel not at our head only, but at our feet also: many have an ambition to have an angel at their head, a great measure of light and knowledge there, but they care not for an angel at their feet, they delight not to walk answerably to their light and knowledge, they have an angelical understanding and a diabolical conversation; it is sad for a man to have all his religion in his brain and tongue, and nothing in his heart and life.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? she saith unto them, because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? she supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

Observe here, 1. That the best company in the world will not satisfy or content such as are seeking for Jesus Christ, when they find not him whom their souls seek: Mary now enjoyed the presence and company of two angels, but this did not satisfy her in the absence of Christ himself. Observe, 2. How passionately did Mary mourn for the loss and want of Christ's bodily presence, thereby giving testimony of her great affection towards him; but truly our love to Christ is best shown, not by our passionate desires for his bodily presence, but by our holy longings after his spiritual presence, in his word and ordinances here on earth, and his blessed and immediate presence in heaven. Observe, 3. How Christ may be present with, and very near unto his people, and yet not be presently discerned by them; Jesus stood by Mary, but she knew not that it was Jesus; her not expecting a living Christ, was one cause why she did not discern him. Observe, 4. How exceedingly Mary's thoughts were taken up with Christ; she saith to the gardener, If thou hast borne him hence: What him? She doth not say whom; but her heart was so taken up with Christ, and her mind so full of him, that she concluded every body would understand whom she meant, though she did not say whom she meant. Hence note, That the soul of a sincere believer is full of earnest and longing desires after Jesus Christ. 2. That such a soul is yet sometimes at a loss for Christ, and cannot tell where to find him. 3. That whilst the soul is at a loss for Christ, its desires are often quicker and more stirring after Christ. This was the case with Mary here; with the spouse by night on her bed, and early in the morning, she sought him whom her soul loved.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Mary: She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.

In the former of these verses, Christ makes himself known to Mary, and calleth her by her name. In the latter he gives her a prohibition and an injunction. Observe, 1. The prohibition, Touch me not; together with the reason of it, For I am not yet ascended to my Father. It is concluded by interpreters, that Mary Magdalene was now fallen at Christ's feet and embraced them; that having found him whom her soul loved, she hugs him now, and hangs about him; but Christ forbids any farther embracing, and rejects such testimonies of her love; as if he had said, Although I will allow you as much familiarity as shall satisfactorily convince you of the verity of my resurrection, yet you must not expect to converse with me in the bodily manner which you did before my death; for I am ascending to my Father, and must be enjoyed no longer after a corporeal, but spiritual manner. Learn hence, That our love to Jesus Christ is best shown, not by our human passionate affections to his bodily presence, but by our spiritual communion with him by faith here on earth, in order to an immediate communion with him face to face in heaven.—Christ now after his resurrection was advanced to a more spiritual condition, therefore refuses at Mary's hand the offices of human conversation, but expects of her the duties and services of spiritual devotion. Observe, 2. Christ's injunction; But go to my brethren, and say, I ascend to my Father, and your Father; to my God, and your God. Where note, The endearing title given to the disciples, My brethren: He had before his death called them his servants, his friends, his children; but now, after his resurrection, he calls them his brethren: he became our brother by assuming our nature in his incarnation, he continues our brother by resuming that nature at his resurrection. Note farther, That Christ calls his disciples brethren, after his exaltation and resurrection; thereby showing that the change in his condition had wrought no change in his affection towards his poor disciples; but those that were his brethren before, in the time of his humiliation and abasement, are so still, after his exaltation and advancement; Go to my brethren; and say, humility doth not only go before honor, but dwells with honor, and doth evermore accompany it. Observe lastly, The good news or message of joy which Christ sends by Mary to his dear disciples; Say, I ascend to my Father, and your Father, to my God and to your God; as if nature and adoption gave the same interest. Christ calls God his God, and his disciples' God; his Father and their Father: first his, and then theirs, and therefore theirs because his. Learn hence, That God for Christ's sake hath dignified believers with that near and dear relation of his being a Father to them in and through his Son; so that as they ought to carry it towards him like children by obedience, subjection, and resignation, so they may expect he will retain a fatherly affection towards them, and they may expect from him fatherly compassion, provision, protection, correction, and all things needful. Lastly, Remark from Christ's saying, I go to my God and your God, the false interence of the Socinians, viz. That because Christ styled God his God, hence say they, it is evident that Christ is not God; but from those words it only follows, that he was not God according to that nature which ascended. Thus Ps. xlv. it is said of

(No. 29)

Christ, God, even thy God hath anointed thee: and yet he add's of the same person, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever.

18 Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her.

19 ¶ Then the same day at evening being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut, where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had so said, he showed unto them his hands and his side.—Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord.

Our blessed Saviour's first appearing after his resurrection having been to Mary Magdalene, as the former verses acquainted us, the same day at evening, when the doors were shut for fear of the Jews, Jesus miraculously, and, as to the disciples, insensibly opens the door, and stands in the midst of them and says, Peace be unto you, and shows them his hands and his side. Where note, 1. That it has been no strange thing in the church, that the best members of it have been put to frequent their assemblies with great fear, and been forced to meet in the night with great caution, because of the fury of the persecutors: here Christ's own disciples were forced to meet together in the night, the doors kept shut for fear of the Jews. Note, 2. Let Christ's disciples meet together never so privately, and with never so much hazard and jeopardy, they shall have Christ's company with them; neither bolts, nor locks, nor fastened doors, shall hold Christ from them; When the doors were shut, Jesus came and stood in the midst of them. Observe lastly, The evidence which our Saviour offers to evince and prove the certainty of his resurrection; He showed the disciples his hands and his side. Christ appealed to and admitted of the judgment of their senses, to assure them that it was his real body. And if we must not be allowed to believe our senses (as the Romish synagogue would persuade us) we shall want the best external evidence we can have to prove the truth of the christian religion; namely, the miracles of our Saviour: for how can we be assured those miracles were true, but by the judgment of our senses? Now, as our senses tell us that Christ's miracles were true, so they assure us that the popish doctrine of transubstantiation is false.

21 Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

22 And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.

6 A

23 Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

Observe here, 1. The repetition of our Saviour's endearing salutation to his disciples, Peace be unto you, Peace be unto you. This was no more than might be needful, to signify his firm reconciliation to them, notwithstanding their late cowardice in forsaking of him, and flying from him, when the storm fell upon him. Observe, 2. How Christ doth renew his disciples' commission for the work of the ministry, who possibly were much discouraged with the remembrance of their faint-heartedness in the time of his sufferings; he doth therefore anew commissionate them, and sends them forth in these words. As my Father hath sent me, that is, to preach, plant, and propagate the gospel; so send I you. By the same authority, and for the same ends, in part, for which I was sent by my Father, do I send you; namely, to gather, to govern, and instruct my church. Learn hence, That when Christ left the world, he did not leave the church destitute of a gospel ministry, which shall continue to the end of the world. As Christ was sent by the Father, so are his ministers sent by him; and they may expect having the same authority and commission, the same success and blessing: and the contempt cast upon them and their message, ultimately reflects upon God and Christ, whose messengers they are. Observe, 3. How Christ that sends them forth, doth furnish them with the gifts of the Spirit, for their office: He breathed on them, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; that is, the gift of the Holy Ghost. They had received the Holy Spirit before as a spirit of sanctification, here they receive it in its extraordinary gifts, to fit them for their office. And Christ's conferring the Holy Ghost, by breathing upon them, shows that the Holy Spirit proceeds as well from the Son as from the Father. And as by God's breathing the first man was made a living soul; so by Christ's breathing on the apostles, they were quickened and extraordinarily enabled for the service they were called to. Learn hence, That when Christ sends forth any about his work, he will furnish them with endowments answerable to their vast employment: and the best furniture they can have, is the Holy Spirit in his gifts and qualifications suitable to their work: He breathed on them, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Observe, 4. How Christ asserts their authority in the discharge of their commission, and declares, that what they act ministerially, according to their commission here on earth, is ratified in heaven; Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted. Where note, That there is a twofold power of remitting or forgiving sins: the one magisterial and authoritative; this belongs to Christ alone: the other ministerial and declarative; this belongs to Christ's ambassadors, who have a power in his name to bind and loose. It is a pious note of St. Austin upon this place, That Christ first conferred the Holy Ghost upon his apostles, and then said, Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted. Thereby intimating that it is not they, but the Holy Ghost by them, that puts away sin; For who can forgive sin, but God only? The power of forgiving sin, that man hath, is only to declare that if men be truly and really penitent, their sins are forgiven them for the sake of Christ's satisfaction.

24 ¶ But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

What the cause of Thomas' absence was, is not declared; it is evident that he was not with the rest of the disciples when Christ appeared to them; and his absence had like to have cost him dear, even the loss of his faith; and he might have had cause for ever to have bewailed his absence from that meeting of the disciples, had not Christ been more merciful. Learn hence, That the letting slip of one holy opportunity, may prove exceedingly prejudicial to the soul's advantage: it is wise and safe to lay hold upon every opportunity for enjoying communion with God, and fellowship with his saints. Thomas' absence deprived him not only of the good news which Mary brought of Christ's being risen, but also of the sight of him, which the other disciples got by assembling together; and for want thereof Thomas is left under many doubts and fears. Verily, we know not what we lose, when we absent ourselves from the assembly of God's people. Such views of a crucified raised Jesus may be communicated to others, whilst we are absent, as would have confirmed our faith, and established our joy, had we been present. Observe farther, What a strange declaration Thomas makes of his obstinate unbelief, Except I see the print of the nails, and put my finger into his side I will not believe. Where note, How strangely rooted unbelief is in the hearts of holy men, insomuch that they desire the objects of faith should fall under the view of their senses. Thomas carries his faith at his fingers' ends; he will believe no more than he can see or feel; whereas faith is the evidence of things not seen. Oh! Thomas, how deplorable had been thy case, if Christ had never given thee that proof which was very unreasonable for thee to expect. But Christ takes compassion on him, and appears to him, and cures his obstinate unbelief, which he might have justly punished, as appears by the following verses.

26 ¶ And after eight days, again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

27 Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands: and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

Observe here, 1. Our Saviour's appearing again to his disciples after his resurrection; it was eight days after he first arose, which was the first day of the week. Here note, That Christ's rising the first day of the week, and appearing on the next first day of the week after to the disciples, and they observing that day for their solemn assemblies, and St. Paul administering on that day the Lord's supper, Acts xx. and commanding on that day collections for the poor, 1 Cor. xvi. and St. John calling it the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10. From these authorities, and the primitive practice, we derive our christian sabbath: for we do not find in all the scripture, one instance of any one congregation of christians only assembling upon the jewish sabbath, but on the first day of the week, on which we ground our observation of that day. Observe, 2. The wonderful condescension of Christ to the weakness of Thomas' faith; he bids him reach forth his hand and thrust it into his side. Not that Christ was pleased with, but only pitiful towards Thomas' infirmities; and it ought to be no encouragement to any person to follow his example, in seeking or expecting the like signs of their own prescribing for helping of their faith. Observe, 3. How mercifully Christ over-ruled Thomas' unbelief, for the confirmation of our faith. His doubting proved a means for establishing his own and our faith; therefore says Gregory well, Plus mihi profuit dubitatio Thomæ quam credulitas Mariæ: "Had not Thomas doubted, we had not been so fully assured, that it was the same Christ that was crucified who rose again."

28 And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord, and my God.

These words may be considered two ways. 1. As an abrupt speech, importing a vehement admiration of Christ's mercy towards him, and of his own stupidity and dulness to believe. Learn hence, That the convincing condescension of Christ turns unbelief into a rapture of holy admiration, and humble adoration. 2. This expression of Thomas, My Lord and my God, contains a short but absolute confession of faith.—Thomas rightly collects from this resurrection, that he was Lord, God blessed for ever more, the true Messiah, the expected Redeemer; and accordingly, with an explicit faith, he now professes his interest in him, saying, My Lord and my God. Yet note, That this resurrection could not make him God, and render him then the object of divine worship, if he had been only a creature before. And farther, observe, That Christ doth not reprove Thomas for owning him as God, which shows that Thomas did not mistake in owning the divinity of Christ.

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

Here we have Christ's reprehension of Thomas for not believing without such sensible evidence as he desired. He believed now that Christ was risen from the dead, but it was upon the testimony of his senses only. Therefore Christ tells him, That his faith would have been more excellent and more eminently rewardable, if he had believed without such demonstrative evidence: Faith is the evidence of things not seen. Therefore to give credit to a thing upon the evidence of sense is not properly believing. Observe farther, How Christ pronounces them blessed, who should hereafter believe on him through the preaching of the gospel, though they did not see him as Thomas did, nor handle him as he might. This is a sure rule, that by how much our faith stands in less need of the external evidence of sense, the stronger our faith is, and the more acceptable it is, provided what we believe be revealed in the word of God: Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

30 And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book.

31 But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and believing ye might have life through his name.

Observe here, 1. The true end for which the miracles of Christ were so carefully recorded; namely, that we might believe. By believing that Christ is the Son of God, we have life; and by the evidence of the miracles, we know and believe him to have been the Son of God: the miracles which Christ wrought, were the best external evidence of his mission. Observe, 2. That all Christ's miracles both before his passion, and after his resurrection, were not recorded by the Evangelists. Observe, 3. The great point concerning Christ, to be known and believed from the scriptures, is this, that Jesus, the Son of the virgin, is the promised Messiah, the anointed of the Father, he in whom all the types and shadows of the law are accomplished; and that this Jesus is for nature co-essential, for dignity co-equal, and for duration co-eternal with the Father; one in essence equal in power and glory. Thus believing that Jesus is the Son of God, and accompanying that belief with a holy life, if we believe well, and live well, we shall have life through his name.

CHAPTER XXI.

AFTER these things, Jesus showed himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise showed he himself:

The foregoing chapter acquainted us with several appearances of Christ to his disciples after his resurrection: all which were in Jerusalem. This chapter acquaints us with his appearing to his disciples in Galilee, whither he had ordered his disciples to go, promising there to meet them. Jerusalem now becomes a forsaken place, a people abandoned to destruction: Christ will not show himself openly to them, but Galilee was a place where Christ's ministry had found better acceptance; to Galilee therefore doth he go. Such places wherein Christ is most welcome to preach, shall be most honored with his presence: Jesus showed himself to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias, called elsewhere the sea of Galilee.

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathaniel of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples.

3 Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately: and that night they caught nothing.

Observe here, That after Christ was crucified, the disciples returned for a time to their trade and employment of fishing: though they were called to be fishers of men, yet churches not being gathered and constituted at present, not being able to maintain them, they labor with their hands to supply their present necessities. Afterwards, when at the feast of Pentecost, they had received those visible gifts of the Holy Ghost, which did furnish them for preaching the gospel to all nations, and they went forth to plant and propagate the gospel, we may believe they then gave over the labor of their secular callings, and applied themselves wholly to the work of the ministry. That may be done (Ecclesia constituenda) in a church which is constituting, or about to be constituted. Observe farther, How Peter, with the rest, toil all night and catch nothing; but no sooner is Christ come among them, but they inclose a multitude of fishes. Thereby teaching us, That all human labors and endeavours are in vain, unless Christ by his presence and blessings crown them with success.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus.

5 Then Jesus saith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No.

6 And he saith unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.

Observe here, 1. Christ was near, very near to his disciples, but they perceived it not; Jesus stood on the shore, but they knew not that it was Jesus. Learn, Christ is not always discerned by us when he is present with us; it is a double mercy to enjoy his company, and to know indeed that it is he. Observe, 2. Although they had labored all the night in vain, yet at Christ's command they go to work again, and with great success: They were not able to draw the net for the multitude of fishes. When Christ is about to do great things for his people, yet will he have them exert all possible endeavours of their own; and the want of former success must not discourage from future endeavours.

Observe, 3. What a proof Christ here gives of his divinity and Godhead: how were all the fish in the sea at his pleasure, and obedient to his command! He knew where they swam, and brings them from one part of the lake to the other: Where the disciples had toiled all night, and caught nothing. Christ our Mediator is true God, and as such he has sovereign power and providence over all the creatures; the cattle on a thousand hills, and all the fish swimming in the sea, are obedient to his power, and observant to his commands.

7 Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved, saith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him (for he was naked) and did cast himself into the sea.

8 And the disciples came in a little ship (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits) dragging the net with fishes.

9 As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.

Observe here, 1. The great zeal and forwardness of Peter; hearing that it was Christ, he leaps into the sea to get to him. O how inviting, attractive and alluring is a sight of Christ! It will make those that know him, break through all difficulties to come unto him. It is not a sea of water, no, nor seas of blood, that can keep a zealous soul at a distance from Christ. When Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his coat and cast himself into the sea. Observe, 2. What a complication of miracles here were; as soon as they came to land they discerned another miracle, viz. a fire of coals, and fish laid on, and bread all created and produced by Christ out of nothing, at this time, as an evidence of his divine power; for before they could get the fish to shore, they saw fish broiling upon coals, which makes it evident that these were none of the fish which they had caught. Christ, when he pleases, for the benefit and comfort of his people, will work miracle upon miracle, mercy upon mercy, one wonder upon the head of another: for here, after a miracle at sea, they met with another miracle at land: As soon as they came to land, they saw a fire.

10 Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye now have caught,

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken, Observe here, 1, What was Christ's end in commanding his disciples to bring forth the fish which they had now taken, namely, that the sight of their number and bigness, together with the sight of the net remaining unbroken, might confirm them in the belief of its being a real miracle. Christ had fed their bellies before, his business now is to feed their minds with the contemplation of the greatness and reality of the miracle. All Christ's miracles were obvious to sense, and would bear the examination of the senses; not like the lying wonders of the church of Rome, which are commonly wrought in the dark to cozen the vulgar, and are mere cheats and impostures. Observe, 2. That this full draught of fishes, which Peter and the rest of the disciples now had, might probably presage that great and wonderful success which he and they afterwards were to have in fishing for men. Here we have an hundred and fifty and three great fishes caught at one draught: but, Acts ii. we find three thousand souls converted by St Peter at one sermon. Oh the marvellous success of the gospel at the first preaching and planting of it! Three thousand men proselyted by one sermon. Now we have cause to fear there are three thousand sermons preached, and scarce one soul savingly converted: Lord, who hath believed our report?

12 Jesus saith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13 Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

14 This is now the third time that Jesus showed himself to his disciples after that he was risen from the dead.

A twofold reason may be assigned why Christ did at this time invite and call his disciples to dine with him; The first and more principal reason was, to evidence to them the reality of his resurrection, and to assure them of the truth of his manhood, that they might not think it was an apparition only. By the miracle in catching the fishes, he proved himself to be God; by his present eating of the fish, he evidenced himself to be man; and consequently teaches us, that our exalted High Priest continues our kinsman in heaven: He is still bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh; he has taken possession of heaven in our nature, sitting there in our glorified humanity, united to the glorious Deity, clothed with that body which hung in its blood and gore upon the cross, but now shining brighter than ten thousand suns. The second and less principal reason why Christ called his disciples to dine with him, was this, to show his tender care over the bodies of his dear disciples, as being the tabernacles of his own Spirit, the temples of the Holy Ghost; therefore Christ encourages, though not to the pampering, yet to the refreshing of them; Jesus said unto them, Come and dine: and he would not confer with them till they had dined; as the next verse shows.

15 ¶ So, when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs.
(No 30)

16 He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord: thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

17 He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him, the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee: Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

Observe here, 1. Christ puts Peter upon a threefold profession of his love unto him, answerable to his threefold denial of him: his threefold denial required a threefold confession. True repentance ought, and will be as eminent in the fruit and effects of it, as the saint's fall hath been. A threefold denial of Christ shall be attended with a threefold profession of love unto him. Observe, 2. The solemn question put by our Saviour unto Peter, Lovest thou me? Lovest thou me more than these? that is, more than thy occupation and employment, more than thy nets and fishing-boats; if so, leave them, and wholly employ thyself in feeding my sheep and lambs. Or, more than these? that is, more than the rest of my disciples: dost thou love me more than thou lovest these; or more than they love me? If so, evidence the sincerity of thy love to me by thy care of mine. Thence note, That ministers who are called to take care of Christ's flock, had need of much love to Jesus Christ, and great compassion for souls; by which they will be animated and fortified to go through with the labors and difficulties, as well as to encounter the dangers and sufferings which do accompany their calling: Simon, lovest thou me? feed my flock. Note farther, That the surest argument and best evidence of a minister's love to Jesus Christ, is his conscientious care to feed: that is, to teach, instruct, and govern the whole flock of Christ: lambs and sheep, weak and strong; the feeble in the fold were purchased by the great Shepherd: and if he judged them worth his blood, well may we judge them worth our sweat. Note again, That such as would be faithful in the ministerial charge ought to look upon their people as committed to them by Christ himself, as loved of him, and committed to their care by him, and for which they must be accountable to him; Christ calls them three times over his lambs and his sheep, and as often charges Peter to feed them. Observe next, Peter's threefold answer to Christ's question, Simon, lovest thou me more than these? Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. Where note, 1. The great modesty of Peter in his reply. "Lovest thou me more than these?" says Christ;

Peter replies, "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee;" he doth not say, Lord, I love thee above them all, and before them all; here is no boasting now: once it was said that Peter vaunted, "Though all men forsake thee, yet will not I;" but now his fall had taught him humility; he boasts not of his love above others, and makes no comparison with others, but only ranks himself among the true lovers of Christ; Lord, I love thee. Note, 2. The evidence that Peter gives of his sincere love to Christ; he dares appeal to Christ himself, "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee: yea, thou that art omniscient, the all-knowing and heart-searching God, thou that knowest all things, knowest that I love thee. Oh! it is a blessed thing when we can and dare appeal to God's knowledge: and it is matter of high consolation, to know that God knoweth our sincerity and love unto him, and that he knoweth and approveth us as such;" "Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee!" Note lastly, From these words, "Lord, thou knowest all things," an argument of Christ's divinity: he that knows all things, and particularly the hearts of all men, is God, 1. Kings viii. 29, but so doth Christ, if St. Peter's testimony here be true; saying, "Lord, thou knowest all things;" that is, say the Socinians, very many things; but this would have destroyed St. Peter's argument at once; for it follows not that Christ knew the sincerity of St. Peter's heart, unless he knew the secrets of all hearts; and if he knew the secrets of all hearts, he is really God.

18 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

19 This spake he, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me.

In these words our Saviour forewarns Peter of his future sufferings, intimating that he should prove more stout than in his former trial. When he was young and unexperienced, he enjoyed his liberty; but when he was grown older in years, and stronger in grace, he should willingly stretch forth his hands, and quietly suffer himself to be bound to the cross: for Peter (say some) was not nailed, but tied and bound to the cross only, and so, as a martyr or witness for the truth of Christ, glorified God by his death. Learn hence, 1. The ministers of Jesus Christ, when they undertake the charge of the flock, must prepare for suffering work, and their lot upon it: therefore in this prediction of Peter's suffering joined with the former injunction, Feed my Sheep. 2. That human nature in Christ's ministers, as well as in other men, reluctates sufferings, has an antipathy against a violent death; "They shall carry thee whither thou wouldest not." 3. From the time of Peter's sufferings, when he is old; learn, That the timing of the saints' sufferings is in Christ's hands; he can, and when he pleaseth, doth screen them from suffering till old age; when their work is almost done for God, they close their days with suffering for him; "When thou art old, thou shalt stretch forth thine hands, and another shall gird thee." Lastly, That the sufferings of the saints in general, and of the ministers of Christ in particular, do redound much to the glory of God, which is a consideration that ought to reconcile them to the cross of Christ, and support them under it "This spake he, signifying by what death he should glorify God."

20 ¶ Then Peter turning about seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved, following: which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

21 Peter, seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do?

22 Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me.

Our Saviour having foretold the manner of Peter's death in the foregoing verses; here in these, Peter is inquisitive after, and very solicitous for the knowledge of what kind of death St. John should die. Christ checks him for his curiosity as meddling with that which did not concern him; yet intimates to him, That John should live till he came to take vengeance on the Jews, and destroy Jerusalem: "If I will that he tarry till I come;" that is, till I come to execute judgment upon Jerusalem. Here we may note, There are two great vanities in men with reference to knowledge, the one a neglect to know what is our duty to know; the other a curiosity to know what doth not belong to us to know. Christ tells Peter, it was none of his business to inquire what John should do; but he ought rather to be preparing for what he himself should suffer: "If I will that he tarry, what is that to thee?"

23 Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die: but, if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?

Observe here, How strangely our Saviour's words were mistaken and misunderstood by his own disciples; they apprehend presently that John should not die, and so it passed current among them. From hence we may note, How much the wisdom of God is, and ought to be admired, in giving us a written word, and tying us to it, when we see erroneous traditions so soon on foot in the world, and our Saviour's own speeches so much mistaken, and that by wise and holy men themselves, in the purest times; much more may the words of others be misreported, and wrested contrary to their sense and meaning. How great then is the vanity and uncertainty of oral tradition! Men are naturally prone to mistake, to mistake themselves, and to mistake one another. The more to be admired is their over-daring ignorance, who think they cannot err. Such an haughty opinion of a man's self, concludes him to be neither good nor wise.

24 This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true.

The great modesty of the holy evangelist St. John, is all along throughout his gospel very observable; he mentioneth himself hitherto under a third person: he calleth himself a disciple, a learner, who excelleth the most accomplished doctors of the ages ever since. Here he speaks more plainly and expressly concerning himself, declaring that he was an eye-witness and an ear-witness of what he wrote, for the greater certainty thereof. And this protestation here made by the evangelist of the truth of what he wrote, was highly necessary, lest any should think that Christ's extraordinary love and affection to him (he being the beloved disciple.) should move him to exceed (as we are prone to do) in writing the history of their lives who are dear to us, and we to them. Learn hence, That this gospel was written by John the beloved disciple, and the narration is of divine truth, worthy to be embraced and received by us as a perfect rule of faith and life; We know that his testimony is true.

25 And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written, Amen.

John being about to conclude the history of our Saviour's life, asserts, that there were many other miracles and special deeds done by Christ both before and after his passion, which he had not recorded or set down; because should all that Christ did and said be committed to writing, it would even fill the world, the volumes would be so many. From hence we gather, 1. The wonderful activity, industry, and diligence of the Lord Jesus Christ, that he was never idle, but that his whole life was spent in doing good; because should all the particular instances have been recorded, it would amount to an incredible bulk. Learn, 2. That it is impossible to get all said, which might be said of Christ, and in his commendation; such is the transcendent excellency of his person, and the weakness of our apprehensions and judgments, that if all were written which might be written concerning him, the world itself could not contain the books which should be written. Learn lastly, That although many of Christ's sermons, conferences, miracles, and actions, be not recorded; yet it doth not follow, nor can it be inferred from thence, that any necessary doctrine is omitted, or not sufficiently confirmed: there being so much written as it pleased God we should know, and was necessary for us to know, in order to our improvement in faith and holiness. If then, after all the revelation and discovery which God has made of his Son Christ Jesus, and of the way that leads to eternal salvation by him, persons remain willingly ignorant of him, and of their duty to him, "Where shall they appear, and how shall they escape?"

REV. I, VER. 5, 6.

Now unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

THE CLOSE.

THE design of the foregoing notes upon the holy evangelists, being to recommend the instructive life of our blessed Redeemer to our observation and imitation: although I have, upon all occasions, propounded his example to be followed by us in all the steps of imitable virtue, as the matter every where occurred; yet adjudging it may be profitable to sum up together the several graces and virtues which were so orient in the Life of Christ, that having them daily before our eyes, we may be continually correcting and reforming of our lives by that blessed pattern; I shall therefore briefly offer at it.—Because,

Nothing is so proper to form us to holiness, as the example of the mediator, it being absolutely perfect, and thoroughly accommodated to our present state; there is no example of any mere man; that is to be followed without imitation; but the Life of Christ was the purest gold without the least alloy. His conversation was a living law; and Christianity, which is the best and holiest institution in the world, is nothing else but a conformity to his precepts and pattern. The universal command of the whole gospel is this. To walk as Christ walked. This denotes a sincere intention, desire, and endeavour to imitate and follow him in all the paths of holiness and obedience.

Particularly let us imitate Jesus.

I. In his early piety. We find him at twelve years old "about his Father's business, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing and asking them questions." See on St. Luke ii. 46, 47. An early piety gives both the person and the service a peculiar pre-eminency; no comfort in life, and no happiness in death, like the happiness and comfort of being good betimes.

II. In his obedience to his earthly parents. See on St. Luke ii. 51. "He went down to Nazareth, and was subject to them." He paid homage to the womb that bare him, and to his supposed and reputed father that provided for him; let a person be never so high above others, he is still below his parents; if the highest upon earth think their parents beneath them, and themselves above their parents' commands, our Saviour did not so. What shall we think of those monsters of ingratitude, the reproach of human nature, who are ashamed to own their parents because of their poverty; or despise them because of the infirmities of their age! Prov. xxiii. 22.—"Hearken to thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old."

III. In his unwearied diligence in doing good. Acts x. 38. Who went about doing good. This was his meat and drink by day; his rest and sleep by night. He fed the hungry, clothed the naked, visited the sick, was eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, and administered to such as were in necessities and straits. And he has declared that he will judge us at the great day, according to our imitation of him in doing good to all mankind. See the notes on St. Matt. xxv. the ten last verses.

IV. In his humility and lowliness of mind. Matt. xi. 29. "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart;" witness his stooping to the meanest office, even that of washing his disciples' feet, St. John xiii. 5. He that came in the form of a servant, performs the office of the meanest servant to his disciples. And all this was to set us an example of mutual condescension to each other; "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, you ought also to wash one another's feet;" which precept, though it doth not bind us to the same action, yet it obliges us to the same condescension; namely, to think no office of love beneath us, which the necessities of our brother call for from us.

V. In the unblameableness and inoffensiveness of his life and actions. He injured none, and justly offended none, but was harmless as well as holy: He wrought a miracle to pay tribute-money, rather than give occasion of offence to the government. See on Matt. xix. 27. Accordingly, let us be harmless and blameless; wise as serpents, and innocent as doves; piety without policy is too simple to be safe; policy without piety is too subtle to be good.

VI. In his eminent self-denial. He emptied himself and became poor. When he was rich as God from all eternity, he impoverished himself by becoming man. Oh! What did he not deny when he left the bosom of his Father, with the ineffable delights and pleasures which he there enjoyed from all eternity; and instead thereof, to drink the cup, the bitter cup of his Father's wrath for our sake? Lord, how can we enough abase ourselves for thee, who thus deniedst thyself for us?

VII. In his contentment in a low and mean condition in this world: yea, in a suffering and afflicted condition. He would not honor the world so far as to have any part of it in his own hand, and was therefore of himself less provided of comfortable accommodations than the birds of the air, or the beasts of the field. See Luke ix. 58. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man had not where to lay his head." Let us learn from him to manage an afflicted condition with a contented spirit; let there be no murmurings, complaints, or foolish charging of God, heard from us, whatever straits or troubles we may be brought into: "But in whatsoever state we are, let us be therewith content." Phil. iv. 11.

VIII. In his frequent performance of the duty of private prayer and fasting. He sometimes spent a whole night in prayer, Luke vi. 12. "He went into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." And Mark i. 35. "In the morning rising up a great while before day, he went into a solitary place and prayed." It is certain, that we have much more business with Almighty God in prayer than Christ had; he had no sins to confess, no wants of grace to make known: yet did he delight with frequency and fervency to perform this homage to his heavenly Father. Lord, how doth thy zeal and forwardness condemn our remissness and lukewarmness in praying to our heavenly Father.

IX. In his affectionate performance of the duty of praise and thanksgiving. Our blessed Saviour was a great pattern of thankfulness. Matt. xi. 25. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, &c." John xi. 41. Father, I thank thee, that thou hast heard me;" When he was to eat common bread, he received it with thanksgiving. What a pattern of thankfulness then was Jesus to his followers! There is hardly any one external duty which we do not find the hypocrite performing in scripture, except this of thanksgiving and praise; we find Judas repenting, Ahab humbling himself, Saul sacrificing; but rarely do we find any wicked man blessing and praising God: need will make us beggars, but grace only thanksgiving.

X. In his compassion towards those that were in distress and misery. Matt. xx. 34. Great was his compassion to the bodies of men: He healed all that came unto him; he healed many undesired: with great condolency and tender sympathy, he exercised acts of mercy and compassion, when the object of compassion was before him, and did perfectly abhor, and severely condemn all acts of cruelty: how great was his compassion to the souls of men! what pains did he take, and what hazards did he run in preaching the gospel to lost sinners, in his fervent prayers for them; but especially in dying for them! Let us imitate Christ herein: as the compassion was universal to all mankind, to the whole man, soul and body; as it was active and operative; as it was exercised with marvellous complacency and delight; as it was a preventing compassion, and unwearied compassion; so let ours be also.

XI. In his holy and fruitful discourse. His lips dropt as the honey-comb, and his tongue was as choice silver: When walking with his disciples to Emmaus, with what heavenly discourse did he entertain them in the way! See Luke xxiv. 13, &c. A good pattern for our imitation, when providentially cast into such company as will bear it. Lord, what a shame and reproach is it to us, that in common conversation we spend so many hours together, in talking over all the news of city and country, and part without speaking one word of Jesus Christ, our best friend!

XII. In his free conversation: The Son of man came eating and drinking, Mat. xi. 19. That is, was of a free and familiar converse, affable and sociable. not sour or morose, never shunning the society of the worst of men, even of the pharisees themselves; but complying with their innocent customs and accompanying them at their feasts. See on Luke v. 29. We do not find that when Christ was invited to any public entertainment, that ever he refused to go; not so much for the pleasure of eating, as for the opportunity of conversing and doing good; Christ conversed with bad men, but as their physician, not as their companion: let us go and do likewise.

XIII. In his patience under sufferings and reproaches— When he was reviled he reviled not again; but underwent the burden of his sufferings with admirable patience and meekness of spirit, when his name and honor suffered the vilest indignities, blasphemies, and reproaches, that the malice of satan, and the malignity of wicked men, could belch out against it; when he was called a blasphemer, a sorcerer, a devil, a wine-bibber, a glutton, a friend of publicans and sinners. For an innocent person, and a dignified person, to bear all this, when he could have looked all his enemies into hell, and have frowned them into nothing; verily to bear all this without the least discomposure of spirit, is the highest triumph of patience that ever the world was acquainted with. And why all this, but to leave us an example that we should follow his steps! 1 Pet. ii. 21, 22.

XIV. In his readiness to forgive injuries: One of his last words upon the cross, was a prayer for his murderers; Father forgive them, Luke xxiii. 34. He offered up his blood to God on the behalf of them that shed it. Thus to forgive our enemies, and to beg forgiveness for them, will be an evidence of a Christ-like frame and temper; when the grace of God calms those tumultuous and outrageous passions which at any time we find raging in our breasts, moulding our spirits into sweetness and gentleness, freeing us from all malicious desires of revenge, which are so far beneath a christian, that it is the baseness of a man; yea, as jealousy is the rage of a man, so malice is the rage of the devil; it is the spirit of the apostate nature.

XV. In his laying to heart the sins, as well as the sufferings of others. Mark iii. 5. "He was grieved for the hardness of their hearts." Such was his zeal for his Father's glory, such his compassion on the souls of men, such his antipathy against, and hatred of sin, that he was grieved for sin wherever he found it, and mourned over those, who had no hearts to mourn for themselves. Lord! how far are they off from a Christ-like spirit and temper, who instead of mourning for other men's sins, rejoice in iniquity, and take pleasure to see their brother stab at once the christian name and his own soul!

XVI. In his zeal for the public worship of God. John ii. 17. "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" Now as Christ was, so christians ought to be intensely zealous for the glory of God, the honor of his house, and the purity of his public worship. "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." Our zeal for the public worship of God glorifies him most, and he accepts it best. Now we own that God, whom we serve in the face of the world: and this creates a veneration and esteem of God in the minds of men.

XVII. In his glorifying of his Father in all he did.— John xvii. 4. I have glorified thee on earth." The whole (No. 30).

life of Jesus, when here on earth, was a glorifying of his Father; he glorified his Father by the doctrine which he taught, by the miracles which he wrought, by the unspotted purity of his life, and by his unparalleled sufferings at his death. In like manner should we glorify God in all we do, in all we design, in all we desire; in our natural actions of eating and drinking; in our civil employments, buying and selling; in our lawful recreations, taking care that too much of our time be not consumed therein. Recreation is not to be our business, but to fit us for business; but especially let us seek to glorify God in our religious duties, public, private, and secret.

XVIII. In his impartiality, in reproving of sin. He feared the faces and spared the faults of no offenders; the pharisees were a proud and haughty sort of people, who dishonored God above most, when they pretend to glorify him above any. Therefore we find Christ denouncing a bead roll of woes against them in one chapter, Mat. xxiii. "Woe unto you scribes, pharisees, hypocrites." Eight several woes are denounced against them, for so many several sins committed by them. Those to whom God has given his authority to reprove the sins of others, ought to imitate their pattern in his impartiality in reproving sin. His very enemies gave him that character, Mat. xxii. 17. "Thou carest not for any man, thou regardest not the person of men; that is, thou sparest none, but tellest all men of their faults.

XIX. In his universal obedience to his Father's will and cheerful submission to his Father's pleasure. He obeyed the will of his Father universally, voluntarily, sincerely, and with a single eye to his glory, perseveringly, and to the end; and as he was, so must we be faithful to the death, if ever we expect the crown of life. And in like manner did he submit to the will of his providence: "Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt, not my will but thine be done." O let us keep this example continually before us, and every day obey the will of God's precept universally, and submit to the will of his providence very cheerfully! This is heaven on earth.

XX. In his love and practice of universal holiness, both in heart and life. He was holy in nature, holy in his principles and motives, holy in his aim and ends; he was perfectly holy, precisely holy, uniformly holy, exemplarily holy; he delighted only in holy persons and holy things; it concerns us to imitate him herein, if ever we expect to be where he is: "Heaven is the habitation of holiness;" the company is holy, the employment holy, the enjoyments holy; no unclean thing can enter into heaven, or could be happy in heaven; heaven is rather a nature than a place. It is not the place of heaven can make us happy, but the disposition and temper of our minds in heaven; without conformity to the nature of God, there can be no communion with him, nor delight in him. What a discourteous courtesy would it be to turn a filthy swine into a garden of curious flowers, to lodge it in a bed of sweet perfumes, to bathe it in a clear and crystal fountain! Alas! its unclean temper and sordid inclinations would rather choose to lie down in a kennel, and to wallow in the mire, its proper element. Thus unsuitable would heaven be; that place of greatest happiness would be the greatest uneasiness to an unholy heart. Let us then pray and endeavour that the temper of our minds, and the actions of our lives, may be a lively transcript of the mind and life of the holy Jesus, that we may be like him in purity and holiness, in justice and righteousness, in patience and meekness, in charity and universal goodness; that as he was, we may be in the world, "holy, humble, harmless, heavenly-minded, glorifying God." on earth, that we may be glorified with him and by him in his eternal kingdom.

XXI. Yet before I close this exhortation to an imitation of Jesus, I must subjoin this cautionary direction: take heed that you do not so imitate Christ for your pattern, as to disown him for your priest. This is the dangerous error of those who affirm, that the great end of Christ's death was to give the world an example of patience, humility, meekness, and the forementioned christian graces, and that his sufferings were exemplary, but not properly satisfactory.

We acknowledge that Christ's giving us an example was one end of his coming into the world, and dying for us, but not the great end. A subordinate end, but not the ultimate; God preserve us from the contagion of this growing error; other errors only scratch the face, but this stabs the heart of the christian religion, in that it deprives us of the choicest benefit of Christ's death: namely, the expiation of sin, by a proper satisfaction to the justice of God. But blessed be God, we have not so learned Christ; as we are taught, so we believe, that the holy Jesus, by the sacrifice of his death, has redeemed us from death and hell, and saved us from the wrath to come, by a full and an adequate payment to divine justice, and by the redundancy of his merit, has purchased an eternal inheritance for us; and as we are taught and believe, so we pray:

"Almighty God, who hast given thine only Son to be unto us both a sacrifice for sin, as also an example of Godly life: Give us grace, that we may always most thankfully receive this his inestimable benefit, and also daily endeavour ourselves to follow the blessed steps of his most holy life; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord."

"Almighty and everlasting God, who, of thy tender love towards mankind, hast sent thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ, to take upon him our flesh, and to suffer death upon the cross, that all mankind should follow the example of his great humility: Mercifully grant that we may both follow the example of his patience, and also be made partakers of his resurrection, through the same Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

THE ACTS

OF THE HOLY APOSTLES.

The most illustrious life of the holy JESUS being recorded at large in the foregoing Gospels by the several Evangelists, whose names they bear; this next book of the Acts undertaketh these three things:—

- I. It recommends to our observation and imitation the lives and actions of the holy apostles, particularly St. Peter and St. Paul; and acquaints us with their fervent zeal, and unwearied diligence, in planting and propagating christianity, not only in Judea and Samaria, but also in Syria, Asia, and Macedonia, yea even in Rome itself: Where by the way, note, That there is not one word in this history of St. Peter's primacy, of his superiority over the rest of the apostles, or of any bishopric that he had at Rome; the least intimation of which would have made a louder noise than Pasce oves, or Tu es Petrus.
 - II. We have here an ecclesiastical history of the first and purest churches, informing us how the christian church in its infancy was planted and watered, gathered and propagated, both among Jews and Gentiles; how she observed and obeyed CHRIST's commands to his apostles, both in matters of faith, worship, communion, and government, that therein the primitive church might be an exemplary pattern to succeeding churches throughout all ages.
 - III. This history gives all the ministers of the gospel, to the end of the world, a great and noble pattern of ministerial diligence, faithfulness, and prudence; acquainting us what the apostle did, the pains which they took, the hazard which they run, in preaching the glad tidings of salvation to a lost world: how they instructed the ignorant, reduced the wandering; how they bare with the weakness of some, and patiently contended with the obstinacy and perverseness of others. Likewise Stewards of God's family, they gave to the whole household their portion of meat in due season.

CHAPTER I.

This first chapter relates, 1. The time and manner of our LORD's ascension. 2. The hundred and twenty disciples' joint devotion. 3. Their election of Matthias by lot to succeed in the apostleship, in the room of the apostate Judas.

THE former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach.

Observe here, 1. The penman of this sacred history, St.

Luke, the same that wrote the gospel, which he calls his former treatise, dedicated, both that and this, to the same Theophilus: The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus. Observe, 2. The time when St. Luke wrote this holy history, and the place where, namely, when he was the companion of Paul; and as some think, during the time of his imprisonment at Rome: if so, we may profitably remark, the favor which God gave the apostle and his companion in the sight of the keeper of the prison, that they were not denied pen and paper. When persecutors send the saints to prison, God can provide a keeper for their turn. But how do the apostle and his companion spend their time in prison? Very advantageously; the former in writing epistles to the churches for their confirmation; the latter in recording the acts and monuments of the holy apostles for our imitation. There is no such way to be even with the devil and his instruments, for all their malice and spite against us, as by doing all the good we can, wherever we come. Satan had better have left these two holy men alone, than have cast them into prison: for by their pens they battered the walls of his kingdom, and made them shake about his ears. Observe, 3. The integrity and impartiality of this historian St. Luke; he wrote of all things; he wrote of all things that Jesus both did and taught in his Gospel, and what the apostles did and taught in the Acts; not that this is to be understood strictly and absolutely, but comparatively only: not as if St. Luke recorded every action that Jesus did, or every expression our Saviour said; for St. John says, they were so many that they could not be written, chap. xxi. 25. But by all things, we are to understand very many things; the most principal and chief things, the most necessary and useful things: every thing that the Holy Ghost thought fit to dictate to him, and enjoin him to publish for the church's use and service. Learn thence, That St. Luke was a very faithful and impartial historian, withholding nothing which was necessary for the church to know, and leaving no room for unwritten and uncertain traditions: "I have wrote all that Jesus began both to do and teach."

2 Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen:

Observe here, The special concern and care which Christ had for his church on earth, before he ascended into heaven. The very first night that he appeared to his disciples, after his resurrection, he breathed on them, and distributed the Holy Ghost among them, St. John xx. 22. both to inform their judgments of what they did not know, and to direct their practice, what he would have them to do; "He, through the Holy Ghost, gave commandments unto the apostles;" that is, he distributed the Holy Ghost amongst them to be their constant instructor and director, what they should do, in order to the execution of their office and employment. Learn thence, That as the apostles had, so the ministers of Christ, in their measure, shall have their gracious and special influences of the Holy Spirit to direct and instruct, to quicken and support them in the faithful discharge of their ministerial office to the end of the world: that gracious promise, Lo, I am with you always, St. Matt. xxviii. 20. We that live seventeen hundred years after the first making of it, may, by faith, draw out the comfort of it, as well as the apostles, to whom it was originally made.

3 To whom also he showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:

Observe, 1. The time which our Lord spent here upon earth, between his resurrection and ascension! It was forty days; Christ would not presently ascend into heaven, as soon as he was risen, but thought fit to stay some time with his disciples, to confirm their faith in the belief of his resurrection, and to satisfy them that it was he himself, their Lord and Master, that died for them, that was indeed risen and now appeared to them; He was seen of them forty days. Observe, 2. What our Saviour did in that forty days' stay upon earth: He showed himself alive unto his disciples, appearing sometimes to them, and giving them many infallible proofs of the verity of his resurrection, by eating, drinking, talking and conversing with them, by showing his wounds to them, and submitting himself to be touched and handled by them. Not that Christ's conversation with his disciples, in this his exalted state after his resurrection, was so frequent and familiar, as it was before his death, when he was in a state of humiliation: and accordingly we never read, I think, that Christ ever lodged or continued all night with his disciples, after he was risen from the grave. But he conversed with them only upon occasions, as he pleased himself, and when he pleased. Observe, 3. What our Saviour said, as well as what he did, in this intervening time, betwixt his resurrection and ascension, being forty days; "He spake to his disciples of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God;" That is, 1. Of the things pertaining to his church militant or the kingdom of grace here on earth, how he would have his church planted and propagated by the apostles' doctrine, guided and governed by their discipline; Or, 2. By the kingdom of God may be understood the church triumphant, or the kingdom of glory in heaven; what perfect bliss and happiness he was now going to prepare for them in the presence of his Father. Where note, That Christ's kingdom is purely spiritual; that Christ's spiritual kingdom is his church; and the preaching of the gospel is the great instrumental mean for the erecting of the kingdom of grace, and enlarging of the kingdom of glory.

4 And being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saieth he, ye have heard of me.

5 For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence.

Note here, 1. How frequently Christ renewed his promise to his disciples, of sending down the Holy Ghost to confer upon them the gifts of tongues and miracles, in order to the fitting and furnishing of them for their work of preaching and publishing the gospel to all nations: "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence;" That is, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost shall be largely poured forth upon you, (as water upon the baptized person,) which was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. When Christ calls his ministers to extraordinary service, he affords them extraordinary assistance, furnishing them with endowments answerable to their great employments. Note, 2. The place where Christ commands the apostles to wait for the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them; namely, at Jerusalem; He commanded them not to depart from Jerusalem, but wait there for the promise. Of all places the apostles would least have chosen Jerusalem to tarry in, had not Christ commanded them to wait there. For Jerusalem was now a justly abhorred and detested place, reeking afresh with the blood of the holy and innocent Jesus; yet Jerusalem is the place chosen by Christ for the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit upon his apostles; because, 1. There had been his greatest humiliation. There Christ had suffered the greatest ignominy, therefore there will he show forth his power and glory. 2. Because at Jerusalem there was the greatest company of spectators to behold this noble work, and to be wrought upon by it. Such as would not be convinced by our Saviour's death and resurrection, might probably be convinced by this miraculous effusion of the Holy Spirit, descending upon the apostles in fiery cloven tongues. Lord! what an instance was this of thy love to thine enemies! How desirous wert thou of the conversion and salvation of thy very murderers! In and at Jerusalem where our Lord was crucified, the Holy Ghost first descended: and when Christ appointed where the gospel combination should begin, Jerusalem is the first place in nomination by him. St. Luke xxiv. 47. "And he said unto them that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

6 When they therefore, were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power.

Observe here, The disciples' question and our Saviour's answer: 1. The question proposed by the disciples, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" That is, Wilt thou repair the ruinous condition of the Jewish state, and restore it to that great dignity and splendour which we have always expected should be done by the Messiah?—Where observe, That notwithstanding Christ had so often rebuked the Jews in general, and his disciples in particular, for their conceit of a temporal kingdom, (who were so full of ambitious expectations to receive great honors and preferments here on earth) yet it evidently appears, that this notion still ran in their minds, and that their Master being now risen from the dead, this was the time both for his and their dignity and advancement. Learn hence, That it is no wonder that unbelievers stumbled at the poverty and meanness of Christ's outward condition when he was here on earth, seeing it was so hard for the disciples themselves to be convinced, and believe that his kingdom was not of this world. I know not any thing wherein the bishop of Rome may so properly call himself apostolical, as in his following this error of the apostles. Were they always dreaming of a temporal kingdom? So is he always doting upon it, and his eyes dazzled with the splendor of it. The disciples, not only till the time whilst Christ was with them, but even now, when upon the point of departing from them, when he was just ascending, yea, in part ascended, having one foot upon the earth, and the other in the cloud, which took him up to heaven, yet still they asked him, Wilt thou now restore the kingdom? that is, settle upon us thy followers secular power, and temporal dominion here on earth? But mark, 2. Our Lord's answer, ver. 7. "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put only in his own power." Our Saviour's answer doth not in the least imply that any such kingdom should ever be granted as they dreamt of; but he checks their curiosity in inquiring into times and seasons, and nature of God's secrets, which it no ways concerned them to pry into: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons." Here note, 1. Something implied, namely, That there are certain times and seasons, the knowledge of which only belongs to God, which yet man's curiosity has an itching desire to search and pry into. There is nothing more natural to man, than a desire to know both what shall be hereafter, and when that hereafter shall be. We are very careless in seeking out the season of that which we ourselves should do; but over careful and curious in seeking out the season of what God will do. Note, Here is something expressed, namely, that God has times and seasons for executing his own purposes, which it is neither proper, nor profitable, nor possible for us to know. Not proper, because none of our business. Not profitable because no part of our interest. Not possible, because out of our reach. It is not possible for us to know either what God is about to do, or when he will do it. It is not possible for us to know it as men, by a natural sagacity; not as christians, by a supernatural illumination; no, nor as ministers and apostles, without divine inspiration and extraordinary revelation, which we have no warrant to expect, and should have no curiosity to desire. Learn hence, That it much better becomes us with an awful silence to adore, than with a bold curiosity to pry into God's hidden and unrevealed secrets. Yet though it be not for us to know God's times and seasons, it is our duty to expect them, and be prepared for them. We know not when our Lord will come to us by death and judgment, whether "in the evening, or at midnight, or at cock-crowing, or in the morning." But it is our duty to believe and expect it, to wait and prepare for it, and be always ready to receive him. Finally, though it is not for us to know the times and seasons which God hath put in his own power, yet it is for us to know the times and seasons which God has put in our power; namely, the present time to improve it, and the time past to bewail our misimprovement of it. To improve the time of affliction, for consideration and humiliation; and the time of prosperity, mercy, and deliverance, for gratulation and thankfulness; and to improve both in farther measures, and increase of holiness; and sanctification both of heart and life.

8 But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: And ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

Observe here, How Christ, instead of gratifying his disciples' curiosity, acquaints them with their own duty; he tells them that although they had received his Spirit before, in some measure; yet very shortly the Spirit should be poured forth upon them in a plentiful manner, to confer the gift of tongues, prophecies, and miracles upon them, for rendering them fit to preach the gospel throughout all nations, and also to testify and bear witness unto the truth of what Christ did and said in Judea and Samaria, both to Jews and Gentiles, even to the uttermost parts of the earth. Here note,

6 D

What is the special work of the ministers of the gospel; namely, to bear witness unto Christ! Ye shall be witnesses unto me. This they do three ways, Christum prædicando; secundum Christum vivendo; propter Christum patiendo: "By the purity of their doctrine, by the piety of their lives, and by their patience under suffering, both for Christ, and from Christ." Note, 2. What it was that enabled the apostles thus to bear witness unto Christ, namely, the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit upon them: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me." Thence learn, That some measure of ministerial gifts and sanctifying graces from the Holy Spirit, is absolutely necessary to enable the ministers of the gospel to bear their testimony unto Christ with faithfulness and success.

9 And, when he had spoken these things, while they beheld he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight.

Here an account is given of our Saviour's triumphant ascension into heaven, with several remarkable particulars thereunto belonging. Observe, 1. Who and what it was that ascended; even the same that descended. Christ Jesus, in his divine nature as God, and in his human nature as man, his person consisting of soul and body, he now ascended in both. Observe, 2. The place he ascended from; from this world in general, and from mount Olivet in particular, that very place where he began his last sorrowful tragedy. Where his heart began to be sad, here it is now made glad. Learn thence, That God can make the very places of our trouble and torment, (as sick-beds, prisons, strange countries) to become places of comfort and triumphant joy unto us, when he pleases. Observe, 3. The place whither he ascended, into heaven; that is, the third heaven, the throne of God, the seat of the blessed. Hence he is said to ascend far above all heavens: that is, above the aerial and starry heavens which we see, into the highest heavens; unto the place where he was before, as himself expresses it, John vi. 62. Thence learn, That the Lord Jesus Christ is returned back again to that sweet and glorious bosom of delight and love, from which he came at his first incarnation; "What, and if he shall see the Son of Man ascending up where he was before?"—Observe, 4. The time when our Lord ascended, forty days after his resurrection. The care and love of Christ to his church was manifested by this his stay with them. Unspeakable glory was prepared for him, and did now await him; but he would not go to possess it, till he had settled all things for the good of his church. And when he had settled his family in order, and given charge to his disciples concerning the discipline of his house, he would stay no longer, lest he should seem to affect a terrene life. Note hence, That Christ desired to be no longer here, than he had work to do for God and souls. A good pattern for our imitation, to desire life upon the score of usefulness: to be willing to be gone when our work is done. Observe, 5. How and after what manner Christ ascended up into heaven. He ascended, as well as was raised from the grave, by his own power, ver. 10. Whilst they looked steadfastly, he went up; that is, by his own divine power. True, the angels did attend him, but they did not assist him. Elias went to heaven in a chariot of fire, but he was fetched up, he could not carry himself up: but Christ needed no chariot, no carriage of angels for his conveyance, being the author of life and motion. 1. He ascended magnificently, with great triumph, into his kingdom in heaven: "God went up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet." A cloud is prepared as a royal chariot, to carry up this king of glory to his royal pavilion: "A cloud received him out of their sight." And oh! what jubilations of the blessed angels were heard in heaven! The triumphs and universal acclamations are not ended to this day, nor ever shall end. 2. He ascended munificently, shedding forth innumerable and inestimable gifts upon his church at his ascension; "When he ascended up on high, he gave gifts to men, prophets, apostles, evangelists, pastors, and teachers." And oh! how many thousands now in heaven, and upon earth also, are blessing Christ at this day, for these his ascension-gifts! Observe, 6. The witnesses of our Lord's ascension: Elias had but one witness of his rapture into heaven, St. Paul not one, but Christ will neither have all eye-witnesses of his ascension, nor yet too few; he did not carry all Jerusalem forth to see his glorious departure, but the select company of his disciples only: The number of witnesses were about an hundred and twenty. Those who had been partners with him in his humiliation, are now made witnesses of his glorious ascension. If we will converse with Christ in his lowly estate here on earth, we shall be made happy with the sight of his transcendent glory ere long above. Observe, 7. The cause and reasons why he thus ascended; namely, because had he not ascended, he could not have been inaugurated and installed in the glory he now enjoys above. Had he not ascended, he could not have interceded, as now he doth, for us here below. Had he not ascended into heaven, we could never have entered heaven. He entered as our forerunner, as our head and representative, and we ascend after him, in the virtue of his ascension before us. In a word, had he not ascended before us, the Holy Spirit had not been enjoyed by us, as a sanctifier, and as a comforter, at least not in that measure in which he has been since enjoyed by his church.—"If Christ had not gone, the Comforter had not come." He begins where Christ ended. Take we good heed then, how we treat the Holy Spirit whom Christ sent down from heaven at his ascension thither; that we do not grieve him by our unkindness, nor vex him by our disobedience, nor quench him by our sinful neglects of duty: for in grieving the spirit we grieve our Comforter, and in grieving our Comforter, we grieve ourselves. But let us entertain him kindly, on the account of his nature, for he is God, Acts v. On the account of his office, and the benefits we received by him; for he is Vinculum Unionis, the bond of union betwixt Christ and our souls, without which we can never have either interest in Christ, or communion with him.

10 And, while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel;

11 Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Observe here, how the spectators of our Lord's ascension were justly transported into an ecstasy of wonder and admiration. Christ ascended gradually and leisurely, that he might at once confirm the faith, and delight the eyes and mind of his beholders. Whilst they thus stood admiring, two angels in the shape of men, appeared in white, (a color which they oft appeared in, to show both that they retained their native purity, and also to represent the joyfulness of their errand which they went upon) and call to the apostles, who were some of them men of Galilee, to take notice that this Jesus whom they now beheld ascending up into heaven should come again to judge the world, and so come again in like manner, that is, visible, in a cloud, by his own power, with the like majesty, and with the same soul and body. But not one word of the time when; that, not knowing the hour, we may be upon our watch every hour; Ideo latet unus dies ut observetur omnes.

12 Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath-day's journey.

13 And, when they were come in, they went up into an upper-room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas, the brother of James.

14 These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

The apostles having seen our Saviour thus gloriously ascended into heaven from mount Olivet, they return to Jerusalem, which is called a sabbath-day's journey, that is, about two miles. Eight furlongs make a mile, and Bethany, in which was the mount of Olivet, was from Jerusalem about fifteen furlongs, John xi. 18. This was the common walk which the Jews used on the sabbath day, but rather for meditation than recreation's sake. The apostles thus returned, assemble together at Jerusalem, where they lay the foundation of the first gospel-church. And here observe, 1. How the names of all the eleven apostles are repeated, and distinctly set down, to show that although they had fallen from their profession, and forsaken Christ, yet they had recovered themselves by repentance, and were risen again; and upon their recovery, were continued by Christ in their former office and dignity. O the mighty power of a sincere repentance, to reinstate us in the favor and friendship of an offended God! Observe, 2. How the sight of Christ's ascension had established and confirmed the apostles' faith: they now adore and worship him, and assemble together to perform their joint devotions to him. Before Christ's resurrection and ascension, we scarce read of any act of adoration that the disciples paid unto him.

True they looked upon him as a person sent from God, a great prophet, and the Son of David; but his deity being evinced, and now made evident to them by his resurrection from the grave, and ascension into heaven, they now worshipped him as the Son of God. See Luke xxiv. 52. Observe, 3. The place where this christian congregation did assemble; In an upper room; that is, says Dr. Hammond, in one of the chambers belonging to the temple; in the large upper room, say others, where Christ had lately eaten the passover with his disciples; it was no doubt the most convenient place they could find for that solemnity; an upper room being remote from noise and company, and capacious enough to receive this primo-primitive church, consisting of an hundred and twenty persons. It teaches us, That all advantages, with respect to time and place, and other circumstances, for the better performance of holy duties, ought to be made use of and improved by us. Observe, 4. The persons who were the first constituting members of this new constituted church; together with the apostles, mention is made of women in general, and of the Virgin Mary in particular; where we may remark, That this is the first and last time that the scripture makes mention of her after Christ's death. None of the Evangelists record one word of our Lord's appearing once to her, during his forty days' stay and continuance upon earth after his resurrection. Doubtless, the Spirit of God in the holy scriptures, by speaking so sparingly of her life, and nothing at all of her death, took care that all those fabulous reports of her assumption, which have since arisen, should find no footsteps in the word of God. God dealeth with her as with Moses, of whose sepulchre no man knoweth unto this day, lest it should be abused to idolatry. The learned Dr. Lightfoot is of opinion, that she continued under the care of the beloved disciple unto whom Christ committed her for some time, and at last was taken away by martyrdom, according to Simeon's prophecy, Luke ii. 35. "A sword shall pierce through thine own soul also." Which prophecy, he thinks, pointed at the manner of her death: but notwithstanding the silence of the scriptures, the church of Rome confidently affirms, that the virgin lived sixty-three years, and that all the apostles were at her funeral, except St. Thomas, who desiring afterward to see her holy corpse, the sepulchre being opened the third day, the body was gone, being assumed and taken up into heaven.

15 ¶ And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty.)

16 Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of David, spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.

17 For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry.

18 Now, this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity: and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called, in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

20 For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein; and, His bishopric let another take.

During the ten days' stay and continuance of the apostles at Jerusalem, before the feast of Pentecost, a motion was made among them for filling up the vacancy in the sacred college of the apostles, which was occasioned by the death of the traitor Judas; and here we have observable, 1. The person that made this motion, St. Peter: In those days Peter stood up and said. Whence the church of Rome would infer his supremacy, but very groundlessly. For St. Peter being the chief speaker and sometimes the sole speaker, is not to be attributed to his superiority; but, 1. To his seniority, he being probably elder than the rest. 2. To his apostolical office; he was appointed to be the first and chief minister of the circumcision, to preach among the Jews; and therefore no wonder that Peter is first mentioned, when any thing relating to the Jewish affairs is recited. 3. His forwardness to speak and act for Christ and his interest, may be imputed to his repentance, it being but necessary that he, who had so scandalously fallen, should, by his future zeal, convince the world both of his repentance and recovery. And accordingly he speaks, acts, and labors more abundantly than all the apostles; not that the rest were idle or insignificant; for they were equal with him, having an equal authority, an equal gift of miracles, an equal number of tongues, an equal power to preach the gospel, an equal wisdom in preaching of it: for the reasons above mentioned, St. Peter spake and did so much; having dishonored Christ before by his own cowardly denial of him, he now resolves to signalize himself by showing extraordinary measures of zeal and activity for him.—Observe, 2. The honorable office and station which Judas once had; "He was numbered with the apostles, and obtained part of that ministry with them." Judas, though (secretly) a thief, a traitor, yea, a devil, yet had he by Christ's own choice, a part or office in the apostolic order.—O Lord! how possible, and yet how sad is it to preach to others, and to become cast-aways ourselves! to prophesy in thy name, and yet to perish in thy wrath! to cast devils out of others, and yet be cast to the devil ourselves! to have our ministry blessed to others' comfort and salvation, and at the same time to minister to our own condemnation! Quis talia fando temperet a lachrymis? Observe, 3. Judas' sin described; He was guide to them that took Jesus, ver. 16. A guide to the chief priests in their counsels, as to the manner of apprehending Christ; and a guide to the soldiers, as to the time and place of his apprehension. Note thence, That there cannot be a greater sin, than for a person to be a guide and leader of others into sin. Woe to magistrates! woe to ministers! woe to parents! that are found guilty of this sin. Observe, 4. Judas' punishment declared; 1. He was hanged or strangled; some think by his own hand; others by the devil's. No doubt that satan, who had so great a hand in his sin, had more than a finger in his punishment. Of all mortals, no wretch ever deserved so direful a fate as this traitor Judas: And doubtless it was the dreadfulest that the devil could inflict. 2. It is added, that he burst asunder, and his bowels gushed out. The rope, or that to which it was fastened, breaking, he fell down headlong, and burst asunder, and his bowels gushed out. A just and suitable punishment for his want of bowels to his kind and innocent Master. 3. He went to his own place; that is, he went and was sent to hell and damnation, the proper place for the son of perdition; called his own place, because of his own choosing, of his own deserving, of his own procuring; it was what he had purchased to himself by the wages of iniquity, and justly deserved for his final impenitency.

21 Wherefore, of these men which have accompanied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, 22 Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection.

23 And they appointed two, Joseph, called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias.

24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen.

25 That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

26 And they gave forth their lots: and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

Judas having in the forementioned manner made void his office, and being gone to his own place, St. Peter moved the company that another person may be chosen to fill up the place. Where note, 1. The electors or persons choosing; namely, the hundred and twenty; these were the eleven apostles, the seventy disciples, and about thirty-eight more, all of Christ's own kindred, country, or converse; not that these were all the believers that were found in Jerusalem, for he appeared to five hundred brethren at once, but these followed him continually, were of his family and society, and of his immediate train and retinue, and appointed by him for the ministry: these, therefore, make the choice; and of one among themselves in the choice made.—

Note, 2. The qualification of the person which St. Peter directs the company to observe in the choice they make of this new apostle; “One that had accompanied with them all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among them:” That is, one that had followed Christ from his baptism to his ascension, to the intent that he might be an authentic witness, both of the doctrine and miracles, but particularly of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: for the article of the resurrection includes many other articles of faith in it; for if he arose from the grave, he was buried; if he was buried, he died; if he died, he was born. Therefore the person whom they choose, was to be one that had accompanied with them. Note, 3. That the apostles did not presume to ordain an apostle by imposition of hands; but the other apostles being chosen of God immediately, it was necessary that he who was to act in the same office, should be chosen after the same manner. Accordingly they cast lots, and leave the determination to God, who devolving it upon Matthias, he was thereupon numbered with the eleven apostles. Lots were used among the Jews for dividing inheritances, for composing differences, for determining elections; and how casual soever it seemed, God was the undoubted determiner of it. Therefore, to cast lots upon trivial occasions, and solemnly to appeal to God’s determination in ludicrous matters, is profanely to take the name of God in vain.

CHAPTER II.

The second chapter gives us an account of the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles at the feast of Pentecost. This was a matter of wonder and amazement to some, but of scorn and mocking derision unto others. Hereupon St. Peter stands up, and in a most excellent sermon defends the apostles, convicts the Jews of crucifying the Lord of Life, and exhorts them to believe on him whom they had ignominiously put to death; and the Holy Spirit crowned his endeavours with a desirable success.

AND when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.

4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

(No. 30)

In this extraordinary and miraculous descent of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles, observe, 1. The time when; “When the day of the Pentecost was fully come;” that is, fifty days after Christ’s resurrection. The day of Pentecost is probably believed to have fallen then upon the Lord’s day; it is certain from Acts i. that the Spirit descended when the apostles were unanimously assembled for his worship, and continued with one accord in prayer and supplication. There is no way to obtain the Holy Spirit from heaven, both as a sanctifier and as a comforter, like fervent prayer, assiduity and perseverance in our devotions, especially in the public assemblies of the saints. Observe, 2. The place where; at Jerusalem, the more general place where our Lord had undergone his ignominy and reproach, there he manifests forth his glory and dignity: First, by his triumphant ascension, and afterwards by his miraculous mission of the Holy Spirit. The more particular place was the upper room where they were assembled and constantly prayed. This upper chamber was most raised towards heaven, most remote from noise and company, and worldly distractions. The Spirit of God descends upon and rests with such as have raised affections above the world, and are nearest unto heaven; not upon such as are buried alive in worldly business. Earth will extinguish fire as well as water, and some say sooner; not only sensual lust, but an excess of earthly business and worldly drudgery, will quench the Holy Spirit, and cause him to depart and go away aggrieved from us. Observe, 3. The persons on whom the Holy Ghost thus descended, namely, the apostles; not that they were without the Holy Spirit until now; they had him before in his sanctifying graces; here they received him in his extraordinary gifts, to fit them for extraordinary services. When God extraordinarily calls any of his servants to more than ordinary service, they may expect more than ordinary assistance. The Holy Spirit now descended upon the apostles in his miraculous gifts, and if we be not wanting to ourselves, he will descend upon us in invisible favors every day, making our souls and bodies a temple, and fit habitation for himself to dwell in, by his sanctifying impressions, by his powerful assistances, by his quickening influences: pouring in both the oil of grace, and also the oil of joy and gladness into our hearts. Observe, 4. The manner how the Holy Ghost at this time descended on the apostles: 1. Suddenly, like the wind: “A mighty rushing wind from heaven:” insinuating, that it was not the apostles’ prayer that brought, but Christ’s promise and power, that sent the Holy Ghost thus miraculously down upon them. This rushing wind also represents, the mighty efficacy of the Holy Spirit now descending. 2. In the appearance of fiery cloven tongues; cloven to signify the variety of languages which the apostles should be enabled to speak, and to qualify them to preach the gospel unto all nations: and fiery, to represent that fervent heat and zeal they should be endued with themselves; that divine light they should impart to others; as also that purity and holiness which they and all succeeding ministers of the gospel ought to appear beautified and adorned with: Finally, As fire dissipateth and disperseth, multiplieth and increaseth, even so the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, the more they are diffused and well employed, the more will they be increased; by imparting to our people, we shall gather to ourselves. Thus was our Lord’s promise fulfilled to his apostles, in sending down the Holy Ghost upon them, but not upon them only; the private christian, no doubt, as well as the public apostle, did receive the Holy Spirit according to his measure: to enlighten, as a spirit of knowledge; to enliven, as a spirit of life; to warm and heat, as a spirit of zeal; to mollify and soften, as a spirit of holy fear; to quicken and strengthen, as a spirit of power; to guide and direct, as a spirit of wisdom and counsel; to unite and knit their hearts together, as a spirit of love. And blessed be God for the promise of the same Holy Spirit to abide with all believers, though not in his miraculous gifts, yet in his sanctifying operations and saving graces, to the end of the world.

5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now, when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language.

7 And they were all amazed, and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak, Galileans?

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia,

10 Phrygia, and Pamphilia, in Egypt and in the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and Proselytes, 11 Cretes, and Arabians; we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?

13 Others, mocking, said, These men are full of new wine.

The fame of the foregoing miraculous operation of the Holy Spirit being instantly spread abroad in Jerusalem, and there being present at that time great multitudes of Jews, who had come from all parts of Judea, to the feast of Pentecost, and also many other Jews and proselytes born in other nations, in Mesopotamia, Cappadocia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, who were now come up to worship the true God at Jerusalem; when they heard the apostle speak in their own language, which they never understood before, the wonderful works of God, in the death, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ; some of them wondered to hear illiterate men speaking all languages; others derided the miracle, and imputed it to drunkenness. Here note, 1. The wisdom and providence of Almighty God, in so ordering the first publication of the gospel, that the same thereof, and of that convincing miracle which gave authority thereunto, might be carried into all nations by so many eye and ear-witnesses as were worshipping at Jerusalem at this time: for "there were now sojourning at Jerusalem, men out of every nation under heaven;" that is, of every nation, where any Jews were scattered at this time throughout the world, there were some particular persons come up now to Jerusalem to worship God.—Note, 2. The commendatory character given of those persons, who from their several countries came up to the house of God in Jerusalem, to worship him there; they are styled devout men: and they received from God the reward of their piety and devotion. Had they stayed at home, as many of their brethren no doubt did, they had not been witnesses of so wonderful a miracle for the confirmation of their faith as now they were. Yet note, 3. The different influence and effect which this miracle of the Holy Spirit's descent in fiery cloven tongues had upon the minds of the people in Jerusalem. Some were struck into an ecstasy of admiration and awful wonder; others (the scribes and pharisees probably) scornfully deride, and impute the miracle to drunkenness, saying, "These men are full of new wine." A senseless slander; for though excess of wine may give a man more tongue, yet not more tongues. O! how have the holy operations of the blessed Spirit from the beginning been slandered and blasphemed; accounted the effects of drunkenness then, of enthusiasm or melancholy now!

14 ¶ But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell in Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For these are not drunken as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day.

16 But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel:

17 And it shall come to pass in the last days, (saith God,) I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

18 And on my servants, and on my hand-maidens, I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy:

19 And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath: blood and fire, and vapor of smoke:

20 The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come :

21 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Observe here, The holy courage of St. Peter, in defending the innocency of the apostles, and confuting the calumny of drunkenness, which was now cast upon himself and them ; " These men are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day." Where note, 1. How he argues negatively from the time of the day ; it was but the third hour of the day, that is, nine o'clock in the morning, which was the hour for the morning sacrifice and prayer, and the worshippers of God (at the great feast especially) were never wont to eat or drink before those holy services were performed. In those times they went to their public devotions fasting ; they served God before they served their bellies. The first-fruits of the day were offered in the temple then ; in the tavern now : ten morning and evening visits are made by some to the latter for one to the former. Note farther, How he argues positively ; he assures them, that the apostles were full of the Holy Ghost, and not full of wine ; filled with the Spirit of God ; and that what was now done, was the completion of a prophecy uttered by Joel : That in the last days, that is, in the days of the Messias, there should be a most plentiful effusion of the Holy Spirit, upon all flesh ; that is upon Jews and Gentiles, and upon all sorts of persons without distinction, old and young, sons and daughters, bond and free. Learn thence, that the Spirit of God is a free Spirit, not confined to any party, to any order or degrees of men, but plentifully and abundantly poured forth unto the gospel dispensation upon all believers. It is one of the great cheats which the pope has imposed upon the world to persuade them to believe the Spirit of God is tied to the pommel of his chair : that he and his cardinals have monopolized the Holy Ghost. But blessed be God, he has promised to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, even upon servants and hand-maids, to show, that he doth not despise persons of the lowest rank and condition in this world, but that the promise of the Spirit is made to them also. Observe lastly, What is here foretold that should come to pass after this great effusion of the Holy Spirit, namely, " Wonders in the heavens, and signs in the earth, the sun turned into darkness, and the moon into blood." Which expressions signify the great miseries and troubles, the calamities and desolations, which should befall the Jews before the destruction of Jerusalem, for their crucifying the Lord of life and glory. Unto which is subjoined the only way to escape and avoid them ; namely, calling upon the Lord in fervent prayer and supplication :—" Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Intimating, that prayer makes us shot-free, and is a sure defence in all storms ; that no evil shall fatally touch our persons or come near our dwellings, whilst we take hold of God by faith, and approach unto him by prayer. Lord ! how happy is it when strong afflictions from thee raise strong affections in us towards thee !

22 Ye men of Israel hear these words :

Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, wonders, and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know.

23 Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain.

24 Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death ; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.

St. Peter having wiped off the unjust aspersion of drunkenness cast upon himself and his brethren in the foregoing verses ; in these he makes it his business to convince the Jews that they were the murderers of the best man that ever lived in the world, even Jesus of Nazareth, the true and promised Messiah. In order to this, he treats in this sermon, 1. Of the person and life of Christ. 2. Of the sufferings and death of Christ. 3. Of the resurrection of him from the grave.— 1. As touching his person, the apostle shows, That he was evidently sent from God, and approved of by him, by those many miracles, wonders, and signs, which were wrought by him. Hence note, That the many and great miracles wrought by Christ, evidently prove that he was sent of God, and came from him, and was approved by him. Our Saviour's miracles, for the nature of them, were beneficial to mankind ; for the number of them, they were many ; for the manner of their operation, they were public and open, in the sight and view of all the people ; not in corners, like the popish miracles (wrought before their own creatures only) but before his enemies ; and for the quality of them they were of the greatest magnitude, cleansing the lepers, raising the dead, giving sight to them that were born blind ; by a word spoken, by a touch given : so that our blessed Saviour had all that attestation that miracles can give, that he was commissioned by God, and came from God. The second part of St. Peter's sermon here treats of the sufferings and death of Christ ; " By wicked hands ye have crucified and slain him who was delivered by the determinate counsel of God." Where note, 1. The name and kind of death which Christ died : this is ascribed more generally, it was a violent death, ye have slain him ; more particularly, it was an ignominious, cursed, and dishonorable death. Ye have crucified him. Learn thence, That the Lord Jesus Christ was not only put to death, but to the worst of deaths, even the death of the cross. Now the death of the cross was a violent death, a painful death, a shameful death, a lingering death, a succourless death, and an accursed death. Note, 2. The causes of Christ's death here expressed. The principal cause, permitting and ordering, was the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. The instrumental cause effecting, was the wicked hands of the Jews : " Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel, &c. ye have taken, and by wicked hands crucified, &c." Learn hence, That there was not any one particular action or single circumstance relating to the death of Christ, but what came under the holy counsel and wise determination of God. Yet this foreknowledge and counsel of God, as it did not necessitate and enforce them to it, so neither doth it excuse them in it. God's foreknowledge and determinate counsel did no more compel or force their wicked hands to do what they did, than the mariner's hoisting up his sails to take the wind to serve his design, can be said to compel the wind to blow. God's end in acting was one, their end in acting was another. His most pure and holy : theirs most malicious and daringly wicked. In respect of God, Christ's death was justice and mercy ; in respect of man, it was murder and cruelty ; in respect to himself, it was obedience and humility. The third part of the apostle's sermon respects the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ from the grave, Ver. 24. "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death ; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." Christ, though laid was not lost in the grave ; but revived and rose again, and rose by the power of his Godhead. True, God is here said to raise him, and the Spirit elsewhere ; but we are not to understand it so, as if they raised him by their power without his own power ; for he declares it expressly, John ii. in three days I will raise up the temple of my body : and if he had not raised himself by his own power, how could he be said, Rom i. 4. "To be declared to be the Son of God by the resurrection from the dead?" What more had appeared in Christ's resurrection than in any other, if that were all ? For others were raised by the power of God, as well as he. Now, because the Jews, to whom St. Peter here preaches, were filled with prejudice against Christ, the apostles thought fit to tell them, that God had raised him from the dead ; yet by consequence it sufficiently appears in the following discourse that Christ raised himself from the dead. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ, by the omnipotent power of the Godhead, the Father's, the Spirit's, and his own Godhead, revived and rose again from the dead, to the terror and consternation of his enemies, and the unspeakable consolation of all believers. As by the eternal Spirit, or the power of his own Godhead, he offered up himself to God when he died ; so when he was put to death in the flesh, he was quickened by the Spirit ; that is, by the power of his divine nature. The same Spirit enabled him to do both. Observe also, The reason annexed, why God raised up Jesus Christ ; because it was impossible that death should hold him. But, how impossible ? 1. It was naturally impossible, upon the account of that divine power, which was inherent in his person as God. 2. It was legally impossible, because divine justice being fully satisfied by his sufferings, required, that he should be raised to life ; as when a debt is paid, the prisoner is discharged, and the prison door opened.

25 For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face : for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved :

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad : moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope :

27 Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

28 Thou hast made known to me the ways of life : Thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

29 Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.

30 Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God hath sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne ;

31 He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.

32 This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses.

33 Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost he hath showed forth this, which ye now see and hear.

34 For David is not ascended into the heavens ; but he saith himself, The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

St. Peter here proceeds in this memorable sermon, which he preached at the feast of Pentecost, to convince the Jews, that Jesus, whom they had crucified, was undoubtedly the promised Messiah, because he was raised from the grave according to the prophetic prediction, Psal. xvi. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." And accordingly St. Peter doth strongly prove that these words, in their literal sense, could not be spoken of David, because he was left in the grave, and saw corruption : but must be applied unto Christ, who though he was laid, yet was not lost in his grave, but saw no corruption, being raised by God the third day. Hence note, That though death bound the hands and feet of Jesus Christ, and laid him in his grave, yet Samson-like, he snapt and broke those bands asunder, it being impossible that he should be holden of them, or confined by them. It was impossible for Christ to continue death's prisoner in the grave longer than three days : 1. Because he was Lord of life and death, he was the resurrection and the life, life to quicken himself, and the resurrection to raise us ; he was the resurrection effectively, the life essentially and formally. Now it was impossible for death to hold him that was life itself under its power, and longer than he who is life, pleased; and for this reason he is said to swallow up death in victory, 1 Cor. xv. 54. 2. Because of his undertaking for us; for if Christ had been held by corporeal death, we must have continued for ever under the power of spiritual death; therefore the Holy One was not suffered to see corruption, the least corruption, according to the prophetic prediction, Psal. xvi.—Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; that is, my dead body in the grave; (for David was left in that hell, from which Christ was raised; but the hell which David was in, was not beyond the grave,) nor suffer thine Holy One to see corruption: that is, I shall neither see, nor feel, nor lie under the power of corruption: but shall suddenly rise again, and then my Father will show me the path of life, and make me full of joy with his countenance; that is, after my resurrection, I shall live for ever in glory, in the presence of my Father, where I shall have fulness of joy, and rivers of pleasure for evermore.

The last part of St. Peter's sermon treats of Christ's ascension: ver. 33. "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, &c. intimating, that when the Lord Jesus Christ had finished his work upon earth, he was placed in the seat of the highest honor and authority; at the right hand of God, in heaven: to convince the Jews of the certainty thereof, St. Peter applies that promise, Psal. cx. 1. unto Christ, "Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool." Showing that these words are not applicable unto David; for David is not ascended into heaven in his own person, but his body remained in the sepulchre then amongst them; but Christ was ascended, and at the right hand of God exalted, and pursuant to his promise, had now sent down the Holy Ghost in fiery cloven tongues, and divers languages, upon them. Where note, The great and wonderful change in the state and condition of Christ, since his ascension into heaven. A little while since they called him the carpenter's son, this fellow, this deceiver: now he has obtained a more excellent name than angels. Then he had not a place to lay his head on: now he is exalted to be heir of all things. Here he sweats, there he sits; here he groaned, there he triumphs; never to groan, weep, or bleed more. His human nature is now advanced to the highest honors, even to be the object of adoration both to angels and men. This was the doctrinal part of St. Peter's sermon: it treated of the person, life, miracles, death, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus, in a very close and convincing manner. His warm application of the whole now follows, ver. 36.

36 Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.

That is, God the Father hath ordained and appointed this Jesus whom ye have crucified, to be the head and Saviour of his church, he being the true and promised Messiah. Learn hence, that the Lord Jesus Christ was constituted and appointed by his Father, to be the supreme Governor and only Saviour of his church. God had made Jesus both Lord and Christ, both a Prince and a Saviour. Note farther, How very close and home the apostle is in applying what he had said to his auditors; he doth not rest in generals; but says plainly, Ye are the men; this is the same Jesus whom ye have crucified, whom ye with wicked hands have slain: had not the application been so close, it is probable that the success of the sermon had not been so considerable. Thence learn, That the success and efficacy of the word preached, depends upon a particular and warm application of it to every man's conscience: generals will not affect. See an instance of it in what follows.

37 ¶ Now, when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

Here the success of St. Peter's sermon is recorded: The auditors were not only affected, but their hearts were touched with a kindly remorse: they mourn for sin, and inquire what they should do to be saved. Some in our days would have been offended at such an inquiry, and told them, it was not doing, but believing only, that God expected; that Christ had done all for them, and that they had nothing to do, but to believe strongly that all was done to their hands; but St. Peter reproves them not for their iniquity, but puts them upon doing; namely, the exercise and practice of repentance, in the next verse. Here note, 1. That conversion, where it is in truth, begets and occasions a very great and sensible change. 2. That the preaching of the word is the instrumental means for the effecting and accomplishing of this change. 3. That the best preaching is that which pricks men's hearts, wounds and convinces their consciences, and makes them thoroughly sensible both of their sin and danger, and of the great necessity of a change. 4. That when men are once convinced of their bad state, and dangerous condition, their first enquiry will be, yea should, and ought to be, What they should do to be saved? They said, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" The apostle liked that enquiry very well; and answers it in the next verse.

38 Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39 For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

Observe. 1. St. Peter exhorts them to repentance. But did they not repent already? were they not now pricked at their hearts! and will the apostles add grief to grief, and pain to smart? Know, that the apostle advises them to join to their legal sorrow, evangelical repentance, such as is attended and accompanied with owning Christ to be the true Messiah, with believing in him with desire and hope of pardon from him. Where, by the way, observe, That St. Peter prescribes a dose of the same physic for them, which he had very lately taken himself with good success, when upon his hearty sorrow he obtained pardon for denying his Lord and Master, Mat. xxvi. 75. "He went out and wept bitterly." No sermons are so sovereign and so successful as those which proceed from the minister's personal and comfortable experience. St. Peter presses upon his auditors the doctrine of repentance, which he himself had practised.—Observe, 2. Upon their repentance, their owning of, and believing in Christ, he directs them to be baptized in his name, and then they should be capable of the gifts of the Holy Ghost; even of those miraculous gifts which they now saw and admired in the apostles. Learn hence, That baptism is a solemn ordinance and sacred institution of Jesus Christ, which is not to be administered to any out of the christian church, till they profess repentance and faith in Christ, and sincere obedience to him, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you." Observe, 3. The argument which the apostle uses with them, by way of encouragement, to persuade them to repent and be baptized; for, says he, "The promise is unto you and to your children." To you, Jews of the seed of Abraham, and to your seed; and to as many of the Gentiles, and their seed, as shall be called by the preaching of the gospel to profess faith in Christ, and subjection to him. Where, by the promise, is meant the gracious covenant of God, whereby he offers pardon and peace to such as will accept them. Now this acceptance is twofold: 1. Cordially; which intitles a person to all the benefits of the covenant, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. And, 2. Professionally only; which intitles a person and his seed to his church privileges only.—Hence learn, That when God takes believing parents into covenant with himself, he takes also their children or seed into covenant with himself likewise. And if so, then the seal of the covenant, which is baptism, ought to be applied to them. It is evident, that under the Old Testament, children were in covenant with God, as well as their parents. And do we any where find that ever they were cast out under the gospel? The apostle doth not say, The promise was unto you and to your seed: but still it is; for otherwise children would be in a worse condition under the gospel of Christ, than they were under the law of Moses; but surely the privileges of the gospel are not straiter and narrower than those of the law. Observe, lastly, How St. Peter closes all with an exhortation to his auditors, "to save themselves from that untoward generation;" that is, from the scribes and pharisees, that sour sort of men, who desperately and maliciously opposed Christ and his gospel, and by their authority and example, kept people from embracing the only way of salvation revealed by Jesus Christ.

41 ¶ Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

Observe here, 1. The wonderful success of St. Peter's sermon: About three thousand were converted to the profession of the christian religion in one day, by hearing a single sermon. How many thousand sermons have been since preached, without the conversion of a single person! Oh! what an high holiday was this memorable day in heaven!

This All Saints' Day was a festival of great solemnity there, where there is joy over one sinner that repenteth. But here did concur several advantages to render St. Peter's sermon more effectual. 1. The sufferings of our Saviour were so near in place, and so late in time, that his wounds were still fresh bleeding in the guilty memories of the people now assembled. 2. The present miracle of tongues bestowed on St. Peter; and his unlearned companions, did wonderfully make way for the word delivered. And, 3. His auditors were devout men, ver. 5. ignorant enough, but yet brought with them minds fairly disposed for information and conviction. 4. The Holy Spirit wrought now extraordinarily by and with the word, and caused this miraculous improvement. How did our Saviour fulfil his promise to his disciples, John xiv. 12. "Greater works than these shall ye do, when I go to my Father." Now was Peter the disciple above his Master in success; Christ all his life-time was angling for a few fishes, whilst St. Peter comes with his drag-net, and catches three thousand at one cast. Observe, 2. These three thousand were baptized the same day in which they were converted, and probably in the same place, which was at Jerusalem; either in the temple, or in some house, where the sermon was preached. We need not inquire, whether the apostles did it by dipping or sprinkling, both being lawful; but this may be said, it is hard to guess how such a quantity of water could be brought to the place, as might serve for the decent dipping of three thousand persons in so short a time. And, upon supposition that the water was not brought to them, but they went down to that; baptizing so many by dipping, would have required a week, rather than a day, to dispatch it in.

42 And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers.

Which words give us an account of the behaviour of the first christians, particularly in their religious assemblies, and of the way of worship used in the church of Jerusalem, the true mother church in the time of the apostles. Where observe, 1. The doctrine which they adhered to, the doctrine of the apostles; that is, the doctrine delivered by Christ, and taught by the apostles, and contained in the holy scriptures. This was the rule which the first christians governed themselves by, both as to faith and manners. It was infinite wisdom in God to inspire holy men for committing this doctrine to writing, and not to leave it to the hazardous and uncertain way of tradition. Observe, 2. The steady adherence of the first christians to this doctrine of the apostles; They continued steadfastly in it; that is, they were constant hearers of it, and attendants upon it; they received it not upon trust, but due examination. Learn hence, That religion being the great interest and common concern of mankind, he that espouses it aright, must first understand and examine the fundamental grounds and principles of it, and then choose accordingly; otherwise our adherence to the best religion in the world, will rather be the result of chance than of judgment and choice. Observe, 3. They continued steadfast in fellowship: this may signify and import three things: 1. Their communion with the apostles, their keeping close to their own teachers, in opposition to schism, which is a causeless, and therefore a culpable separation; they were obedient to their spiritual governors and instructors. 2. Their society among themselves, and communion one with another; as the communion of saints in heaven is a considerable part of the happiness of heaven, so the fellowship of saints on earth is a sort of heaven upon earth: The comfort of our lives depends much upon society, but more upon the suitableness of society. The primitive saints were all of one mind, and therefore fit to make one body. For though man loves company, yet it is the company of those he loves. 3. Mutual assistance which they gave and received, a communication or free distribution to the necessities of each other; they did by love serve one another, and parted with their possessions for the support of each other: This liberality, and mutual supplying one another's wants, did plainly show, that they esteemed themselves as fellow-members of the same body, and that they were perfectly united in heart and affection. Observe, 4. Another religious office in which they continued constant, was breaking of bread; that is, receiving the sacrament. So great and fervent was the devotion of the first christians, that none of their religious assemblies passed, in which they did not make this solemn commemoration of our Saviour, and show forth his death; looking upon their other religious services as lame and defective without this. Our Saviour's blood was still warm, and those first christians kept it so, by their devout and frequent remembrance of it; and it was their constancy in breaking of bread, which quickened and put life into all their religious actions: This fitted them both for doing and dying. Their frequent drinking of the blood of Christ fired them with zeal for shedding their blood for Christ, Lord! what reason can men now give for neglecting so holy and useful an institution! Are we above these helps to a good life which they used? Have we not as much need to arm ourselves against sin and temptations as they had? But the plain truth is, Men are not willing to be so holy now, as they were then. This ordinance, their consciences tell them, would engage them to greater strictness of life than they are willing to undergo. They must leave their sins, which they are loth to part with; they must forgive their enemies, whom they had rather be revenged of: they must enter into new engagements, whereas they had rather be at liberty; so that those things which make men loath to come to the sacrament, are indeed, if duly considered, the greatest arguments to draw them thither: and according to the example of these primitive christians, to be constant in breaking of bread. Observe, 5. The last thing which they continued steadfast and constant in, was prayer: that is, in the public and solemn addresses made to God in the religious assemblies, whereby they poured out their souls to God both in prayer and supplication, and in praise and thanksgivings. The public prayers and intercessions of the church of Christ, are greatly to be esteemed by all christians; they glorify God most, he esteems and accepts them best: This keeps up a sense of God and religion in the world, and nothing delights God more than the joint prayers and praises of his people. Psal. lxxxvii. 2. "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the performances in the dwellings of Jacob."

43 And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44 And all that believed were together, and had all things common;

45 And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

Observe here, 1. That awful respect God obliged the people of Jerusalem to pay unto the apostles: "Fear came upon every soul, at the sight of those wonders and signs which were wrought by the apostles." 'Tis God that keeps up the authority and reverence of his ministers in the minds of their people: Did not he hold these stars in his own right hand, how soon would men trample them under their feet? Observe, 2. An extraordinary instance of a noble charity among these primitive christians; They had all things common: that is, they chose rather to part with their estates, than that any of their brethren should want; the rich very readily sold their possessions and goods to help and relieve the poor. Yet note, 1. That this community was not of all their goods, but of that part only which every one did voluntarily consecrate and devote to the relief of the church's necessities. It was not in a strict sense a community of goods that was here practised; but, by all things, we are to understand, such things as every one freely laid aside for the service of the poor. Note, 2. That this practice was only used in Jerusalem, in the beginning of christianity, without being a precedent for after times and places. Res quæ erat temporaria necessitatis et liberi arbitrii, non debet in exemplum trahi, multo minus ut necessaria obtrudi. Christ's gospel doth not destroy the moral law: the eighth commandment is still in force, which it could not be, if there were no property. The lesson for your instruction, to be gathered from this instance, is this, that they who have ability ought to abound always in ordinary, and sometimes in extraordinary works of charity: We must always relieve the saints' wants as we are able, and sometimes, upon an extraordinary occasion, above what we are well able.

46 And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart;

47 Praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

This chapter concludes with giving us an account how these primitive christians spent their time together in the service of God, and in great simplicity and sincerity amongst themselves. They continued daily in the temple; that is, at the usual time of prayer they joined with the Jews in their prayers in the temple: We must not think that they preached sermons, and administered sacraments in the temple; that would not be endured, as appeareth chap. iv. 1. But having performed their public devotions daily in the temple at the accustomed times of prayers there, they used to resort to a private and particular place to celebrate the Lord's Supper, and afterwards took their ordinary and necessary repast with gladness and singleness of heart. And thus these holy christians conversing together with great simplicity, and sincerity, they went on cheerfully in their christian course, praising God for what he had done for them.

and by them; and their holy and harmless conversation procured them favor with the generality of the people, who had not their hearts possessed with the prejudice against christianity, as the Pharisees had. And thus, by the parity of the apostles' doctrine, and the exemplary piety and unblameableness of their lives, the Lord daily added more and more converts to his infant christian church. Learn hence, That the work of a thorough and saving conversion upon the hearts, and in the lives of men, is God's work. It was not the mighty rushing wind, nor the miracle of the fiery cloven tongues, nor St. Peter's sermon, nor any of these, nor all of these, that did or could alone produce this great effect without God and the internal operation of his holy Spirit. Therefore it is expressly said, That the Lord added to the church, not St. Peter, nor all the apostles. Yet note, 2. That though God and his Holy Spirit be the author and efficient cause, yet the preaching of the gospel, and an exemplary conversation agreeably thereunto, were the subordinate helps and instrumental means conducing thereunto. "They continued daily in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart. And thereby the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

CHAPTER III.

The constituting of the first gospel church, we had recorded in the former chapters. The first persecution raised against that church, is here related in this and the next chapter, together with the occasion of it; which was, St. Peter's healing the lame beggar. No sooner was the primitive church planted, though miraculously, but a persecution is stirred up against it most maliciously to root it up, and lay it waste: Wherever God has his church, the devil will be sure to set up his chapel; not a chapel of ease for the saints, but a chapel of service for himself; hoping at once to strengthen the walls of his own kingdom, and to raise the foundation of Christ's church, which yet the gates of hell shall never fully nor finally prevail against.

NOW Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

Observe here, 1. The remarkable diligence and industry of St. Peter and the other apostles in preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. At the third hour of the day on the feast of Pentecost, that is, at nine o'clock in the morning, St. Peter preached a sermon, chap. ii. 14, which, by the blessing of the Holy Spirit accompanying it, converted three thousand souls. Here at three o'clock in the afternoon on the same day, (as the learned Dr. Lightfoot notes) he preached a second sermon, which converts five thousand more. This affords at once a good precedent, and a good encouragement to the apostles' successors, the ministers of Christ, to the end of the world, for the preaching twice upon the Lord's day: If, in the room of three and five thousand souls, we be instrumental for the conversion of a single soul, it is infinitely worth the indefatigable pains and diligence of our whole lives. Observe, 2. The place which the apostle preaches in, the temple: thither the apostles went, not to offer sacrifice, but to inform the Jews, that the law of sacrifices was now abolished by the death of Christ; not to communicate with them in their antiquated worship, but they might have a larger field to sow the seed of the gospel in. Observe, 3. The circumstances of time, at the hour of prayer. In all ages, since God had a church in the world, there have been stated times and places for solemn public worship; by which means a sense of God and religion has been preserved and kept up in the world, which otherwise would be in danger of being lost. The worship of God in the closet will not do this, because it is unseen; but stated, solemn, public worship, glorifies God most, and he accepts it best, Psal. lxxxvii. 2. "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. The apostles went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer." Sine stationibus non staret mundus.

2 And a certain man, lame from his mother's womb, was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

3 Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked an alms.

4 And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him, with John, said, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them.

Observe here, 1. The condition of this person. 1. He was poor, even to beggary: but poverty is no sign of God's disfavor, nor doth exclude any from partaking of the best of blessings. 2. He was born a cripple, not lamed by casualty or accident, but lame from his mother's womb. 4. He had continued a cripple forty years, chap. iv. 22. "The man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was showed." Consequently the cure was the harder, and the person cured the more credible witness against them that cavilled at his cure. Observe, 2. The wonderful mercy and goodness of God towards this poor cripple; his miseries and calamities, his lameness and poverty, are over-ruled by God for good to him, even for the best good; namely, for bringing him to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and salvation by him. O how good is God at making up all our losses, and exceeding not only our deserts, but our expectations also! This poor man only begged an alms, God gives him his limbs; yea, gives him his Son and salvation by him. Thus we receive of God daily more than we can either ask or think — Observe, 3. The apostle's advice to a lame man, and his ready compliance with that advice. Look on us, says St. Peter; he doth not say, believe on us, but look on us, and believe on Christ. This the apostle spake to quicken his attention and excite his hope. As if St. Peter had said

"You look upon many others as able to relieve your necessities; now look on us, and see what we can do for you."—Accordingly he fastened his eyes upon the apostles, and beheld them as expectant of relief. Here note, 1. The great mercy of God that was mingled with this poor man's affliction, though he was lame, he was not blind. He could and did steadfastly behold the apostle, with a fixed eye both of body and mind. Note, 2. That what the cripple could do, he must and did do, towards his own healing; he could not move a foot, but he could fix his eye. We are spiritual cripples, laboring under a moral impotency; being without strength, Rom. v. 6. But God expects the exercise of our faculties, and the use of our endeavours, in order to our recovery, help and healing. As the cripple looked up to the apostles, so may we look up to the ministers of God; hear them and apply to them, place ourselves under the word dispensed by them; for he that made us without ourselves, will never save us without ourselves: but we must work out our own salvation, Phil. ii. 12.

6 Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ancle-bones received strength.

8 And he, leaping up, stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

Observe here, 1. The poverty of this great apostle St. Peter, and his holy contempt of the world; silver and gold he had none; his pretended successor, the pope, upon his election, says the same; but, with as little sincerity as he says, Nolo episcopari: The apostle's poverty was real, not fictitious. The holiest, the wisest, and best men, are seldom the wealthiest. "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have I give." As if he had said, "I have no money to give thee, but that which is better than money: I have received power from Christ to cure and heal diseases; and having received it freely, I will give it freely: therefore, in the name of Jesus; that is, by the power of Jesus, whom in contempt ye call Jesus of Nazareth, be healed, rise up and walk." Observe, 2. The nature of the miracle here wrought: it was, 1. Public and open, not done in a corner, but before all the people at a public time, (Pentecost) and at a public-place (the gates of the temple.) The miracles, that is, the lying wonders wrought in the church of Rome, will not bear the light. Miracles are by them most pretended to, where people are most ignorant, and a dark shop is fittest for their false wares. 2. Instantaneous and sudden; "Immediately his feet and ancle-bones received strength." This evidently shows it to be God's work; he was perfectly cured, and instantly cured, though he was lame from his birth, and had continued lame above forty years. All things are easy, yea, equally easy, to an Almighty power: if God speaks but the word, "the lame shall leap as an hart," Isaiah xxxv. 6. Observe, 3. The humility and faith of this great apostle (No. 31.)

discovered in the manner of the cure; his humility, in not disdaining to touch and take hold of, and lift up this poor cripple from the ground; his faith, in being fully persuaded of Christ's presence, relying upon his power, and depending upon his promise Mark xvi. 18. They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. The apostles had not a power at their pleasure to work miracles; but when God pleased to work them, he made it known to them by inspiration, and put them upon it. Observe, 4. How the poor cripple piously ascribes the praise of this miracle to God only: He leaped and praised God, not the apostles. No instrument must rob God of his glory; we may pay and gratify the messenger, but must return our prime and principal thanks to our benefactor. No doubt the cripple returned thanks to the apostle, but his prayers unto God only. To conceal God's mercies is ingratitude; to attribute them to second causes is sacrilege.

9 And all the people saw him walking, and praising God:

10 And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And, as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering.

12 ¶ And, when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?

Observe here, 1. As soon as ever the poor cripple received strength, all the people beheld him praising and blessing God. Learn thence, That the very first appearances of the power and mercy of God, towards ourselves or any of ours, should put us upon the works of praise and rejoicing. We truly say, "Better late than never;" but it is best to be in every good work, especially in the noblest and most angelical work; namely, that of thanksgiving and praise. My voice shalt thou hear, says David, betimes in the morning; my praying voice, my praising voice. Observe, 2. The influence and effect that this miracle had upon the minds of the multitude; it occasioned wonder, but did not produce faith. They wondered, but not believed. Miracles will confirm faith, but not alone beget it. The Spirit's extraordinary works may produce astonishment; but it is the work of the Spirit that must produce faith. Observe, 3. How the apostle abaseth himself and his fellow disciples, that he might exalt Christ; he will not suffer the least part of the praise and glory of this miracle to stick to their own fingers, but gives it all to Christ.—Think not "that we by our power and holiness have made this man to walk." The Jews had a conceit, that extraordinary holiness would enable a man to work miracles: the apostle denies it: for though there be a great difference betwixt miraculous faith and justifying faith, yet true justifying faith has a miracle in it, though not so obvious to sense, requiring the same power to work it in us, which raised up Christ from the dead, Eph. i. 11. Learn hence, That Christ's power, not his apostles' holiness, was the cause of all the miracles that were wrought by them. "Why look you so earnestly upon us, as though by our holiness we had made this man to walk? Through faith in his name, is this man made strong" ver. 16.

13 The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.

14 But ye denied the Holy One, and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you;

15 And killed the Prince of Life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses.

16 And his name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith, which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

Observe here, 1. How St. Peter lays hold upon this opportunity, (when the people are gathered together to gaze upon this lame beggar) to preach a second awakening sermon to the Jews; in which he rebukes them sharply for their cursed contempt of Christ, and the horrible indignities offered to him.

1. They denied him although he was an Holy and Just One. 2. They delivered him up to Pilate when he was inclined to let him go. 3. They preferred Barabbas, the worst of men, and a murderer, before Jesus, the best of men, and a Saviour. 4. They murdered the Messiah, called the Prince of Life, because he came to bring life into the world. Where note, that though probably none of the Jews then and there present, did actually nail Christ unto his cross, yet they having given their consent unto it, they are charged with killing the Lord of Life. A plenary and full consent of the sins of others, makes us deeply guilty of others sins: ver. 15. "Ye delivered up and denied the Holy One: ye have crucified the Lord of Life." Observe, 2. How St. Peter ascribes the whole of this miracle to the power of faith; ver. 16. "Through faith in his name, and the faith which is by him; hath he given this man perfect soundness in the presence of you all." Faith is twice named in this one verse, because of the apostle's faith in working the miracle, and the cripple's faith in receiving of it, says Dr. Lightfoot: but questionless, it was chiefly the apostle's faith; for the lame man showed no faith in Christ before he was healed; he expected an alms, but little thought of receiving the use of his limbs; but the apostle, firmly relying on the power and promise of Christ for healing, did believe that Christ could and would help and heal him. Learn hence, That as it is the property and prerogative of God to do great things, it is the duty and property of faith to expect great things from God; great expectations from God honor the greatness of God: we dishonor God as much or more, when we believe little, as when we do little. A great God and a small faith suit not well together; accordingly St. Peter here, knowing the all-sufficiency of Christ's power, exerts strength of faith, and through faith in the name of Christ, makes this man whole.

17 And, now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.

18 But those things, which God before had shown by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

Observe here, 1. How careful the apostle was, not to drive these murderers of Christ (and consequently the worst of men to despair, but to draw them to repentance; in order to which, 1. He mitigates their sin, imputing it rather to ignorance and blind zeal, than to malice. 2. He is so charitable as to impute it to the ignorance of the pharisees their rulers also. 3. He calls them brethren, though guilty of so great a mistake in their judgment, and fault in their practice. "Now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." Learn thence, That God used the ignorance of some, and malice of others, for his own glorious ends, in accomplishing the fore-ordained and foretold death of our Redeemer. Observe, 2. St. Peter acquaints them, to keep them from despair, that God hath decreed the sufferings of Christ for man, and by his prophets foretold them, who, as they spake by one Spirit, did all speak the same things, as if they had all spoken out of one mouth. So that what the Jews did he tells them, was though unknown to them, a fulfilling of ancient prophecies and promises for man's redemption. "Those things which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath now fulfilled." The death and sufferings of Christ, with all the circumstances relating thereunto, were all ordained by God, and foretold by the prophets; which, though it doth not excuse his murderers from the guilt of a dreadful sin, yet may be improved as an argument, to keep them from despair—"What God before had showed, he hath now fulfilled."

19 ¶ Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

The apostle, like a wise physician, having discovered to the Jews the danger of their disease in the foregoing verses, now directs them to the only effectual remedy, viz. Repentance: Repent and be converted; that is, repent of your rejecting Jesus Christ, and be converted to christianity. To repent, doth denote a change in the mind and judgment: and to be converted, a change in the life and conversation. The exhortation doth denote our duty, and supposes our ability also, by the assistance of that grace, which will never be wanting to sincere endeavours. They were subjects recipient of that vis gratiæ vortcordiæ, as St. Austin calls it, "The heart-changing power of the grace of God," which could and did enable them to convert and turn to God. Note farther, How this duty of repentance is urged from the effect and fruit, and profitable consequences of it. "Your sins shall be blotted out," a metaphor taken from creditors who have the books of accounts, in which all debts and reckonings are set down. 2. "The times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;" by which some understand more generally the times of the gospel, others more particularly understand it of the time of Jerusalem's destruction; as it St. Peter had said, "Know, O my brethren, that the time of Christ's coming to Jerusalem to execute vengeance on his murderers, is now at hand! Repent, therefore, speedily of what you have done, that these dreadful days to his enemies, may be days of refreshment to you." But the days of refreshment are thought by most to signify the day of judgment, which will be a day of refreshing to all penitent sinners; because they shall then enjoy a complete and full absolution from all their sins. Note here, 1. That almighty God has his book of remembrance, in which he writes down all the sins which every person commits, in order to their accusation and charge. 2. That it is the great wisdom, interest, and duty of every person, to take care that he gets his sins now blotted out of God's debt-book, as ever he hopes that the reckoning day may be a day of refreshing to him. 3. That without repentance, conversion, and turning unto God, there will be no forgiveness, comfort, or refreshment from him.—"Repent, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshment shall come." 4. That a complete absolution and full discharge from all sin is not yet enjoyed, till the day of judgment. We are in this life continually subject to new sins; and consequently are daily contracting new guilt, whereby arise new fears; so that a soul has not a full rest till the final absolution be pronounced at that solemn day.

20 And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you;

21 Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

Here St. Peter enforces his exhortation to repentance with a strong motive; namely, the certainty of Christ's coming to judge the world. God shall send Jesus, this Jesus whom we preach to you, visibly, to justify and glorify all penitent and pardoned sinners, whom yet the heaven must contain till the restitution of all things; that is, to the end of the world, when the whole creation which now groaneth will be delivered, and more particularly restored to God, to himself, and to a blessed immortality. Learn hence, That Christ, being ascended into heaven in our human nature, shall abide and continue there until the restitution of all things, and his corporeal presence here on earth is not to be expected, until he has put all his enemies under his feet. Now if his body be, and must continue in heaven, surely then it is not in the sacrament, and the Papists' dream, who ascribe to Christ's human nature the property of a Godhead; namely, to be in ten thousand places at one and the same time, contrary to the nature of a human body. If the heavens must contain Christ, Christ must be contained in heaven, and then his presence in the sacrament doth not draw him from heaven; his bodily presence is in heaven, his spiritual presence with his people in the sacrament.

22 For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you.

23 And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

These words are recorded, Deut. xviii. 15, and here by St. Peter pertinently applied unto Christ, to convince the unbelieving Jews, that he is the true and only Messiah, the great Prophet and Teacher of his church, whose doctrine it was highly dangerous to condemn, though out of the mouth of such contemptible persons as he and St. John appeared to be unto them. Where note, 1. Christ, according to his prophetic office, is largely described, and that three ways. 1. By his title, a prophet; one that by his office is to declare the whole will of God to man. 2. By his type, a prophet like unto Moses; one that went between God and the people as Moses did; carrying God's mind to them, and returning their mind to God. As Moses was faithful in the execution of his office, so was Christ. As Moses confirmed his doctrine by miracles, so did Christ. As Moses brought Israel out of literal Egypt, so Christ brings us out of spiritual Egypt, whereof the Egyptian bondage was a figure. 3. By his stock and original, from which according to the flesh he sprang; "I will raise him up from among thy brethren."—Christ honored the nation of the Jews, and the tribe of Judah, with his nativity. Thus this great prophet is described. Note, 2. A strict injunction to hear and obey this great prophet; hear him only, hear him universally. The word (him) is to be understood exclusively, him and none but him; that is, in the same manner that we hear him; him for his own authority's sake; his ministers for his sake, as speaking from him, and in his name: And we must hear him universally, in all things; every command is to be obeyed, none to be disputed, be the duty commanded never so difficult, and the sin forbidden never so tempting. Note, 3. A severe condemnation, "The soul that will not hear shall be cut off;" that is, God will severely revenge himself upon the stubborn and disobedient. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ is constituted and appointed by God to be the great prophet and teacher of his church: He reveals the will of God perfectly, powerfully, persuasively, plainly, and infallibly.—Learn, 2. That it is the duty of all to hear and obey the voice of this great prophet, and this under the penalty of eternal destruction: "Every soul that will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people."

24 Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days.

That is, "All the prophets from Moses to Samuel, and particularly Isaiah, the evangelical prophet, did foretell the coming and kingdom of the Messias, the special mercies to them that believe on him, and the destruction of those that reject him." Where note, That Samuel is mentioned as the first prophet between them, because he was the first prophet after Moses that wrote his prophecy, and first erected the schools of the prophets. Learn hence, That Christ was the sum of the law, as well as the substance of the gospel, all the legal sacrifices pointed at him, all the prophets prophesied of him, and received their completion in him. He was Abel's Sacrifice, Isaac's Ram, Isaiah's Emmanuel, Daniel's Holy One, Zachary's Branch, and Malachi's Angel.

25 Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

Still observe, How sweetly St. Peter invites and encourages these murderers of Christ to repentance; the worst of men must neither be driven to despair, nor be too hastily despaired of. He tells them, they were the posterity of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with whom God first entered into covenant, and consequently they were children of the covenant, and also children of the prophets; that is, the people to whom God primarily and chiefly sent the prophets. So great were the prerogatives of the Jews, that they are called the children of the prophets, children of the promise, children of the covenant, children of the kingdom. But the higher a people are exalted by spiritual privileges, the lower they fall if they miscarry.

26 Unto you first, God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

Here note, 1. That the offer of Jesus Christ, and eternal salvation by him, was first made to the people of the Jews, because they were the children of the covenant; that is, the only people in visible communion with God throughout the whole world. Note, 2. The benefit offered; God's Son is raised up; that is, either, 1. Authorised, consecrated, and appointed to be a Saviour; or, 2. Raised from the grave.—You crucified him with wicked hands; but behold the divine clemency! He is first offered to you his crucifiers: God has sent his Son, in the preaching of the gospel, first to you; and this not to take vengeance on you, but to bless you: He being the great High Priest, blesses you authoritatively and effectually; and the blessing he dispenses is not a temporal blessing as you expected, a pompous Messiah, a secular kingdom, but spiritual, in turning souls from sin to God: He offers to bless you by turning every one of you from your iniquities. Learn hence, 1. That it is Christ's proper work to turn sinners from their iniquities. Oh! that we would all subserve Christ in that great work! He is the principal agent; let us be subordinate instruments, by practising holiness ourselves, and promoting holiness in others.—Learn, 2. That to be turned by Christ from our iniquities, is the greatest blessing we can receive from him; because it is a spiritual blessing, a fundamental blessing, a comprehensive blessing, an endearing blessing, an everlasting blessing.

CHAPTER IV.

The foregoing chapter gave us an account of a miraculous cure wrought by the apostles upon a cripple that was lame from his birth. This chapter acquaints us how exceedingly the governors, both in church and state, were offended and enraged thereat, to such a degree, that they imprison the apostles, and raise a persecution against the church; which yet God over-ruled for his own glory, and his church's increase. This infant gospel church, in the time of the apostles, being like unto the infant Jewish church in Egypt in the days of Moses, the more the church was molested, the more she multiplied; the more they were oppressed, the more they increased.

AND, as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them.

2 Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day; For it was now even-tide.

4 Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed: and the number of the men was about five thousand.

Observe here. 1. How the apostles' preaching to, and instructing the people, stirs up the devil's rage, and brings upon themselves a severe persecution: Well might Luther say, Quid est evangelium predicare, nisi in nos furorem diaboli derivare? "At the preaching of the gospel the gates of Satan's prison fly open, and the walls of his kingdom are shaken; he finds himself in danger of losing his principality."

No wonder then that he raises all the powers of hell, and stirs up all his instruments on earth to stop the mouths of the preachers of the gospel. Observe, 2. The persons by whom, and the cause for which this persecution was now stirred up against the apostles; namely, the Jewish priests, the Gentile captain, and the sottish sadducees; "As they spake, the captain of the temple, the priests and sadducees, came upon them." These were distinct persons, and they were differently distasted; the captain, who was placed with the band of soldiers near the temple to guard it, was offended for fear of a tumult from such a vast appearance of people as came to see the recovered cripple. The priests were offended, because the apostles, being private men, went about publicly to teach and instruct the people, not considering the extraordinary call which the apostles had. The Sadducees were displeased because they preached the resurrection from the dead (a doctrine which they denied,) and because they preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead; that is, through the power and efficacy of Jesus. Asserting Christ to be both the efficient and also the exemplary cause of the resurrection: and inferring from Christ's resurrection, that all his followers should arise with him, and like unto him. Observe, 3. How far God suffered these persecutors and this persecution to proceed: "They laid hands upon them, and put them, in hold." How easily might this band of soldiers have taken away the lives as well as imprisoned the bodies of the apostles! But God restrained them, and led on the apostles to their sufferings gradually; they were yet but young pupils in Christ's school; therefore they shall not have trials beyond their strength. God will not call his servants to a martyr's fire, till he hath first endued them with a martyr's faith; for this reason God suffered not the storm of persecution to break forth with over much violence upon the new planted church at first. Observe, 4. What was the event of that violence which was now offered to the apostles; God over-ruled it for his church's advantage, and a wonderful increase, by a new addition of five thousand souls more added to it. O wonderful draught of fish at the second casting out of the gospel net! These fishermen, Peter and John, now became, by the help of the Holy Spirit, fishers of men, according to their Master's prediction, Mat. iv. 19. "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. Many which heard the word believed, and the number of them was about five thousand," ver. 4. This infant church flourished the more by the frowings of men upon her. Plures efficitur, quoties metimur ab illis. Tertull. "Like a green meadow, which the oftener it is mowed; springs the faster and becomes the thicker."

5 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that the rulers, and elders, and scribes,

6 And Annas the highpriest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the highpriest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

7 And, when they had set them in the midst, they asked, By what power, or by what name, have ye done this?

(No. 31.)

8 Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11 This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

Here observe, 1. What a combined force did unite and join together of rulers, scribes, elders, highpriests, highpriests' kindred, and who not? they all, though of different interests, yet hold together as one, to extinguish and put out the light of the gospel, as soon as it began to shine forth. Need we wonder that the devil struggled so hard at the dawning of the reformation to blow out the light of the gospel; when we consider what opposition he discovered against the first plantation and propagation of the gospel? As Herod would have strangled Christ in his cradle, so would the highpriests have stifled christianity in its infancy; They all gathered together at Jerusalem. Sad! that a message of such glad tidings as the gospel, should meet with so bad entertainment. Observe, 2. How the apostles are here arraigned, and questioned. By what name and authority; that is, by what power or virtue they had done this? Some think, they suspected the apostles to have wrought by the black art, being assisted by the devil. But did not this miracle give a sufficient convincing light to demonstrate that it was heaven-born, and showed evidently that it was wrought by a supernatural and divine power? Cursed men! who accounting it a credit for themselves to do evil, make it a crime for the apostles to do good: was there any reason for their asking, by what power, when the thing itself proclaimed it to be done by the power of God? Observe, 3. The bold and resolute answer of St. Peter, to the foregoing malicious and ridiculous question! Where note, 1. His holy courage. 2. The cause of it; He was filled with the Holy Ghost. In the 5th and 6th verses, we find a full bench, not of justices, but of professed enemies, enough to have dashed ten prisoners at the bar out of countenance. But behold the ingenuousness and holy boldness of a good christian in a good cause. St. Peter, who formerly, when full of himself, was baffled by a damsel, and frightened into a denial of Christ by a silly wench; now, being filled with the Holy Ghost, silences and confounds his most potent and malicious accusers. Lord! how woefully weak are we when we rely on our own strength, but how able to do all things, when Christ strengthens us! In te stas et non stas, says St. Austin. "Thou art sure to come down when thou standest on thine own legs; but shalt be mightily upheld and carried on, when supported and conducted by God's hand." Observe, 4. A singular instance of the apostles' boldness:—namely, in preaching Jesus Christ to them that had imprisoned them. Be it known unto you, that Jesus whom ye crucified, is the stone which was set at nought of you builders; and is become the head of the corner; neither is there salvation in any other, &c. Where note, 1. The title given to the rulers of the Jewish church, Builders; so they were by office, and here are called so, to remind them of their duty; namely, to increase, strengthen, and beautify the building, the church of God; not to demolish, weaken, or deface it. Note, 2. The contempt which these builders cast upon Christ the chief corner stone; they refused him and set him at nought, according to the prophecy, Psalm cxviii. 22. which was a prophecy of the rejection of the Messiah, though the Jews would not so understand it; for they dreamed of such a pompous Messiah coming according to their heart's desire, that it should be incredible that any Jews should ever reject or despise him. Note, 3. The title given to Christ, the corner-stone; so called because he supports and sustains the whole building; and as the corner stone is equally necessary for both sides of the building, which are united to it, and borne up by it, in like manner both Jew and Gentile are united in Christ, and saved by him.

12 Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved.

Observe here, 1. A positive assertion, that there is no salvation but by Christ; or, that besides, or without him, there is no possibility of salvation, either for Jew or Gentile; both those under the Old Testament had, and we under the New Testament have, one and the same common Saviour. Observe, 2. The ground and reason of this confident assertion, That there is no salvation but by Christ; namely, because "there is no other name given under heaven by which we must be saved." There is no other person designed or appointed by God, to be the author of redemption to, and procurer of salvation for a lost and miserable world, but only Christ. Take we good heed then, that we do not reject or set him at nought; for in rejecting of Christ, we reject the wisdom of God, the authority of God, the love of God, yea, the salvation of God.

13 ¶ Now, when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

14 And, beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

17 But, that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all, nor teach in the name of Jesus.

Observe here, 1. How convincing the boldness of the apostles was, together with the undeniable evidence of the miracle wrought by them: when the council observed both, they marvelled, the apostles being unlearned men, yet now able to speak all languages, and the cripple born lame, now able to leap and walk. These men were convinced, but not converted; silenced, but not satisfied; they marvelled, but not believed; they were full of admiration, but far from faith. The evidence of the fact, with the courage of the apostles, stopped their mouths at present, but did not cure their hard hearts. Observe, 2. At what a nonplus the council was, to know what to do with the apostles; they confess the miracle, but consult upon ways and means how to conceal it; and at last conclude upon threatening them, That for the time to come they speak no more in the name of Jesus: that is, not to preach in his name, nor work miracles by a power and authority derived pretendedly from him. But the apostles soon let them understand, that they esteemed not the threatenings of the council, nor looked upon them as any excuse for the forbearing of their duty, as appeareth by the next words.

19 But Peter and John answered, and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye;

20 For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.

Observe here, The prudence and integrity of the apostles, in referring it back to the judgment of their very adversaries, whether it was reasonable to obey their commands, when they charged them to preach no more in the name of the Lord Jesus: and as if the apostle had said, "We have received a command from God to preach, Go, teach all nations, Mat. xxviii. 19. And we have received a command from you not to preach: now we leave it with you, whether it be fittest and most reasonable to obey God or you." It is a strong way of conviction, to refer a matter to their judgment and conscience, against whom we make opposition. Learn, That when the commands of God's vicegerents run counter to the command of God himself, God is to be obeyed, and not man.

21 So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people; for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old on whom this miracle of healing was showed.

23 And, being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them.

24 And, when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is;

25 Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

27 For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together.

28 For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word.

30 By stretching forth thine hand to heal: and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus.

Here observe, 1. That notwithstanding this rational plea, which the apostles used, the council added further threatenings, and so dismissed them, because of the people, who looked upon the miracle with admiration, and glorified God for working it by the apostles' hands. Where note, That it was not the sense of sin, nor any apprehensions of God's displeasure, that influenced the council to set the apostles at liberty; but either the fear or favor of the people. Thus God made the people a restraint to the rulers' rage. Observe, 2. That the apostles thus dismissed, went immediately to their own company, (that is, to the hundred and twenty, mentioned chap. i. 15.) and acquainted them both with their danger, and deliverance, the better to prepare them for sufferings, and encourage them to hope for the like support under them. Observe, 3. What use the church makes thereof; they hearing how their enemies lay in wait to persecute and destroy them, apply themselves to God by fervent prayer. Thence learn, That it is the church's duty when enemies combine together to do mischief, to give themselves much unto prayer.— Thus did the church here, and the like, chap. xiii. Observe, 4. The prayer itself, which they jointly put up at the throne of grace, with one heart and spirit. And here note, 1. They began their prayer with invocation, and a reverend compellation, suitable to their present sufferings; adoring God's omnipotency in creating and governing of the world. "Lord, thou art God, who hast made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that is therein." Whence learn, That the power and wisdom of God, in creating and governing the world, doth afford singular support and comfort under the sense of present and future sufferings. He that made all things by his power, will over-rule all things by his providence for his own glory and his church's good. Note; 2. The apostles used scripture language and expressions in their prayer: they allude to Psal. ii. and acknowledge that all that enraged malice of men and devils against the Messiah, which was foretold long ago by the prophet David, was now come to pass: for both the Jewish council and the Roman governors had combined together against Christ; and in opposing him, had opposed the Father that sent him. "Of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus are they gathered together, to do what thy hand and thy counsel had determined before to be done." Where we see, 1. That all the sufferings of Christ were fore-ordained and determined by God the Father; God from all eternity decreed that Christ should die a sacrifice for sin. 2. That this decree of God did not necessitate the Jews to sin; but they acted freely and voluntarily, according to the wicked determination of their own wills; God foresaw and permitted it, but no ways influenced or compelled them to it. He over-ruled those evil instruments to fulfil his holy purposes, while they intended only to fulfil their own wicked counsels. Observe, lastly, They close their prayer with a fervent petition, that God would strengthen them, and glorify his Son, : 1. That God would strengthen them against their fears; steel them with courage, and fortify them with impregnable resolution; "Grant that with all boldness we may speak thy word." Boldness to preach the gospel, when unjustly forbidden, is a special gift of God, and a great effect of God's grace unto his servants. 2. They request that God would magnify, not them, but his Son by them, in giving them power to work miraculous cures in the name of Jesus, for confirming of the gospel; "Grant that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus." Where note, That the gift of miracles, though promised by Christ, is yet prayed for by the apostles. God will have the performance of his promises to be the answers of our prayers.

31 ¶ And, when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

32 And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them, that ought of the things which he possessed was his own: but they had all things common.

33 And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all.

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of land or houses, sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold.

35 And laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, 37 Having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

Observe here, 1. The special and speedy answer which the Lord gave to the apostles' prayer: as a testimony thereof, the place where they prayed is miraculously shaken, and many eminent graces and special gifts of the Spirit were poured out upon the apostles, particularly a greater measure of boldness to preach the gospel; and, as some think, the wonderful gift of conferring the Holy Ghost was now conferred upon the twelve; so Dr. Lightfoot. The Holy Spirit, which caused them thus to pray, gave them that boldness which they prayed for; with signal shaking of the place which they prayed in. O! how ready is God to hear and answer the prayers and pleading of his righteous servants, especially when suffering for righteousness' sake? Observe, 2. The great unity and happy unanimity which was found amongst the ministers and members of this infant church, this purest and most primitive christian church; "They were of one heart and of one soul:" That is, they were one in doctrine and opinion, and they were one in heart and affection: A singular pattern for succeeding christians to the end of the world, so to carry it one towards another, as members of the same body, and influenced by the same head. Observe, 3. As their unanimity, so their liberality, in contributing to the necessities of each other. They called nothing their own, when their brethren's wants required it; the rich readily sold their possessions and goods, to help and relieve the poor. Notwithstanding, this example cannot be a copy for after times, to follow as a command, or to imitate as a perfection: seeing that such was the state of the church at that time, as was never since, or like to be; it was but newly born: It was all in one city; all in a possibility to be soon scattered by persecution. Res quæ erat temporariæ necessitatis et liberi arbitrii non debet in exemplum trahi, multo minus ut necessaria obtrudi. The lesson to be gathered from this instance for our instruction, is this, That those who are of ability, ought to abound always in ordinary, and sometimes in extraordinary acts of charity. We must always relieve the saints' wants as we are able, and sometimes upon an extraordinary occasion, above what we are well able. Observe, 4. How the apostles with great authority and assurance gave testimony to the resurrection of Christ, and their doctrine found great favor and acceptance with the people, v. 33. "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all." The resurrection of Christ from the dead, was the great point now in controversy, therefore with evident miracles and wonderful gifts of the holy Spirit, did the apostles perform their testimony of his resurrection. So that as Christ was declared to the apostles to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead; in like manner, the apostles by miracles and wonderful gifts did bear witness to the certainty of our Saviour's resurrection, and their doctrine found acceptance with the people. Learn hence, 1. That our Lord Jesus Christ, by the almighty power of his godhead, revived and rose again from the dead, to the consternation of his enemies, and the consolation of all believers. 2. That the doctrine of Christ's resurrection being not only attested by the preaching, but confirmed by the miracles of the apostles, found deservedly belief in the world, and is a point of infallible certainty amongst all those whom wilful obstinacy has not blinded.

CHAPTER V.

BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession.

2 And kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

3 But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

4 Whilst it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.

The last verses of the foregoing chapter acquainted us with the practice of the primitive christians at the first plantation of the gospel, in selling their possessions for charitable uses, and laying down the money at the apostles' feet, for the relief of their fellow-brethren and members in Christ. Now this chapter informs us, that according to their example, one Ananias, and Sapphira his wife, consecrated a possession unto God, and sold the same to that purpose; but fraudulently kept back part of the price; and thus, as St. Chrysostom notes, was found stealing his own goods: he had the formality to sell his lands as others did; but had not the sincerity to part with his money as others had. Observe here, 1. The true nature of Ananias' sin, it was sacrilege; that is, a purloining or stealing of that which was consecrated unto God, not by actual performance, but by vow and inward purpose of heart: covetousness and vain-glory, lying and hypocrisy, did all attend and accompany this sin; but the sin itself was sacrilege. Learn hence, 1. That what is consecrated to God, must not be alienated or applied to other uses. 2. That such an alienation is sacrilege, and a sin against God, being a breach of vow or promise made unto him; a lying unto God, as the text calls it. 3. That it is an heinous sin, which God will severely punish. Observe, 2. How this secret sin, lying in the intention of the heart, was known to God, and by divine revelation made known to St. Peter. Learn thence, That not only our outward actions are taken notice of by God, but even the purposes and intents of our hearts are all manifest and open to him, and thoroughly understood by him.—Observe, 3. How St. Peter justly aggravates their sin from the divinity of the person (the Holy Ghost) against whom it was committed; “Why hath satan filled thine heart to lie unto the Holy Ghost? Thou hast not lied unto man, but unto God.” But why is Ananias said to lie unto the Holy Ghost, rather than to God the Father, or Jesus Christ the Son? Answer, Either, 1. Because it is the proper work of the Spirit to search the heart, and to know the thoughts and purposes thereof: Or, 2. Because the wealth brought in to the apostles and laid at their feet, was an effect of the Holy Spirit's inclining the hearts of believers so to do. Learn hence, The divinity of the Holy Ghost, that he is truly and really God; he whom the scriptures calls the great and true God, is God; but the scripture calls the Holy Ghost the great and true God; therefore the Holy Ghost is God. Either the Holy Ghost is man, and God's messenger, or God himself; but the antithesis or opposite show, that he is not man; for says the apostle, Thou hast not lied unto man; and if the Holy Ghost had been only God's messenger, it had been as great a sin to lie to Peter, (he being God's extraordinary messenger,) as to lie to the Holy Ghost; therefore the apostle, in the fourth verse, doth explain what he meant, by lying to the Holy Ghost, in the third verse; namely, lying unto God: “Thou hast not lied unto man, a creature like thyself, but unto God, even the Holy Ghost, who is God.

5 And Ananias, hearing these words, fell down, and gave up the ghost: And great fear came on all them that heard these things.
(No. 31.)

6 And the young men arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

10 Then fell she down straightway at his feet and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.

11 And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

Observe here, 1. The justice of the punishment inflicted upon Ananias for his sin; he is struck dead upon the spot for his sacrilege, covetousness, hypocrisy and lying: doubtless it was a very heinous sin which God so severely punished, and it was the first sin of this kind under the New Testament. This was the first consecration of goods that ever was made unto Christ our Lord, after he was exalted at the right hand of God in heaven: and this was the first sacrilege: the first sin of this kind, and therefore the first persons that were found guilty of it met with this severity, in tertorent, to make all others afraid of it. The first transgressors in any kind have been made public examples. Thus the angels before the Jewish church; Nadab and Abihu at the beginning of the Jewish church; and here Ananias and Sapphira, at the beginning of the christian church: Observe, 2. How Sapphira, the wife's subjection to her husband, doth not excuse her from partaking in his sin, nor exempt her from the severity of the punishment. God's authority in commanding or forbidding, must be first observed and obeyed, otherwise we put the creature in God's place, debase him and set up an idol, which the jealousy and holiness of God will never endure. Observe, 3. How the same sin meets with the same punishment. Husband and wife had here agreed both what to do and what to say, and they that sinned together suffered together. God is no respecter of persons, male and female, Jew or Gentile, prince or subject, husband or wife; the soul that sinneth, it shall die; "Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost," ver. 10. Observe, 4. That this miraculous way of punishing offenders with immediate death by the apostles, was not common:— This is the only instance in the New Testament of so severe a punishment inflicted by the mouth of the apostles for any sin whatsoever; and it seems accommodated and suited to that particular time, in which magistrates were so far from defending the church, that they furthered the persecution, and endeavoured the extirpation of it. Observe lastly, The effect which this tremendous miracle had upon the whole church: it awfully affected them with fear and trembling; "Great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things." God's extraordinary providences, either judgments or mercies, towards ourselves or towards others, ought to affect us with holy fear, and that fear which works righteousness, Isa. xxvi. 9. "When his judgments are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness;" that is, they ought to do so, and if ever they will do it, they will do it then: judgments work fear, and fear works righteousness.

12 ¶ And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people: (And they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13 And of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women:)

15 Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on bed and couches, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.

Three things are here observable: 1. How that act of severity upon Ananias and Sapphira for their hypocrisy, is instantly succeeded with acts of clemency and mercy upon others: the former acts of severity in the apostles were necessary to prevent the intrusion of hypocrites into the christian church: these subsequent acts of mercy were as necessary for the propagating of the gospel, and to invite people to the love of christianity. Accordingly, the apostles, after the death of Ananias, are endued with power from on high to work signs and wonders, to heal diseases, to cast out devils; insomuch that the people brought forth their sick into the streets, and laid them upon beds, and couches, hoping that the shadow of Peter, as he passed by, might reach and recover some of them. The church of Rome makes a noise with this text, and produces it to prove St. Peter's supremacy over the rest of the apostles, because his very shadow cured the diseased: but very groundlessly; for, 1. By the same argument they may prove St. Peter to be superior to Christ himself; this being more than what Christ himself wrought, according to what he foretold, St. John xiv. 12. "Greater works than these shall ye do," &c. 2. The papists might observe, were they not wilfully blind, that the napkins and handkerchiefs, which were carried from St. Paul's body, cured diseases also, and dispossessed devils, Acts xix. 12. 3. Besides all this, it is not here expressly said, that any sick were actually healed by St. Peter's shadow, but that the diseased were brought, in hopes that his shadow might produce such effects; and, if it did so, Almighty God thereby put honor upon the gospel, and upon all the apostles, without any particular respect, or special regard to the person of St. Peter. Observe, 2. the place where the apostles assembled to preach the gospel, and work miracles for the confirmation of the same, "They were all with one accord in Solomon's porch." Where note, 1. Their unity and unanimity: there were no persons among them guilty of schismatical separation in forsaking the public assembly; but with one mouth, as well as with one mind and heart, they glorified God. 2. Their prudential boldness and holy courage appeared in preaching to the people in Solomon's porch; for the sanhedrim, or great council, sat in, or very near that place, even that council, which in the former chapter imprisoned them, and in this beat them. (See ver. 40.) Learn hence, That nothing better becomes the ministers and messengers of Jesus Christ, than an holy and humble, a wise and meek, a zealous and convincing boldness, in asserting the truths of the gospel, and in reproving sin, and denouncing judgments against impenitent sinners. Consider we, how bold and zealous our Lord and Master was in his ministry, Luke xx. 21. "We know thou teachest the way of God truly, and acceptest not the person of any." And the apostles learned the same of their Master, Acts iv. 13. "When the highpriest saw the boldness of Peter and John, they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." Observe, 3. How God over-ruled the judgment inflicted upon Ananias and Sapphira, and caused it to work for special good. Thus, such of the apostles' hearers, who were unsound and insincere, durst not join themselves to them, having seen a great instance of severity upon concealed hypocrisy! They were afraid to come among them any more, or to make a show of such piety and zeal as Ananias did, for fear of the same, or such like punishment as he had. But however the people extolled and magnified, admired and applauded them, and multitudes were daily added to the church. This seems to be the sense of ver. 13. "And of the rest durst no man join himself to them, but the people magnified them, and believers were added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." Nothing doth more affect and afflict unsound and drossy hypocrites, than the sight of God's judgments inflicted upon others in this world, and the fear of the righteous judgment of God upon themselves in the world to come.

17 ¶ Then the highpriest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the Sadducees, and were filled with indignation.

18 And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison.

19 But the angel of the Lord, by night, opened the prison doors, and brought them forth and said, 20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life.

Note here, 1. How the persecutions of the holy apostles did gradually advance and increase. In the former chapters the apostles were only secured, kept in hold for a night, and dismissed with a threatening next day; but now being filled a second time with the Holy Spirit, they are better enabled to grapple with sufferings, and to glorify God under them, and accordingly here they are committed to the common prison amongst malefactors, and afterwards beaten and exposed to public shame, ver. 40. O the tenderness of God towards his tender servants! While these apostles were striplings, their faith feeble, and their grace weak, God stayeth the rough wind, keeps off the storm of persecution from them.—God will evermore suit the stroke to his people's strength, proportion their burden to their back, and never suffer them to be tempted above what they are able. Note, 2. The apostles being prisoners for Christ and his gospel, they have an angel for their keeper and deliverer, who opens the prison door and overpowers and puts out the devil. God could otherwise have delivered them, but he makes use of the ministry of angels for the confirming of their faith, and to let them see by experience that he had given his angels charge over them. Since the establishment of the gospel, God will have us to live more by faith, and to walk less by sense, and therefore we must not now (ordinarily) see those ministering and beneficent spirits; but although their visible apparitions be ceased, yet their invisible operations for the heirs of salvation shall never cease, Heb. i. ult. "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Note, 3. The apostles being thus brought out of prison by an angel, are commanded to preach, and they have their text given them by the angel that opened both the prison and the pulpit doors for them. The angel said unto them, "Go and speak unto the people all the words of this life," ver. 20. That is, of this life for which you were imprisoned, this life, which the sadducees, who imprisoned you, deny; namely the resurrection of the body and eternal life. Learn, That not the things of this life; but the things of eternity and the life to come, the unseen things of another world, are the things which all the ministers of Christ ought to preach, and press their people to the pursuit of; "Go and speak unto the people all the words of this life:" That is, the gospel, which is the word of life, and directs them how to attain eternal life and salvation by Jesus Christ.

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high-priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned, and told,

23 Saying, 'The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors; but when we had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now, when the highpriest, and the captain of the temple, and the chief priests, heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence; (For they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned.)

27 And, when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the highpriest asked them, 28 Saying, Did not we straitly command you, that you should not teach in this name? And, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us.

Observe here, 1. No sooner were the apostles out of prison, but they enter into the temple and preach, with a redoubled zeal and diligence; no doubt, satan had better have let these holy men alone, than have cast them into prison; for the cold blasts of persecution and imprisonment beating upon their outward man, by a spiritual antiperistasis, augmented the heat of grace within. There is no such way to be even with the devil and his instruments, for all their spite and malice against us, as by doing all the good we can to the souls of men. Observe, 2. How the deliverance which God wrought for the apostles, in bringing them miraculously out of prison by the conduct of an angel, did confound the council which laid them in: they were nonplussed and horribly perplexed at it: "They doubted whereunto this would grow."

They stood musing and amazed, and knew not what measures to take; but were at last well-said. Sin often-times brings men into straits, but straits do not always bring men off from their sins. Thus here, notwithstanding their present perplexity of spirit, they spurn, and bring them again before the council, ver. 26. "Then went the captain with the officers of the temple, and brought them without violence." Observe, 3. The crimes which the holy apostles were unjustly accused of; namely obstinacy and sedition. They are charged with obstinacy for persisting to preach the gospel, when they had strictly (but very wickedly) forbidden them: and they are accused of sedition, as if they endeavoured to stir up the people to avenge the blood of Christ upon the rulers, as being unjustly shed by them. The greatest innocency cannot protect the holiest persons from slander and false accusation. The best of men have sometimes been charged with the blackest crimes. No wonder that the sanhedrim, or great council, which charged Christ himself with imposture and blasphemy, did accuse the apostles of sedition and contumacy; "The disciple is not above his Master." Observe, 4. The contumacious reflection which they had made upon our Lord Jesus Christ himself: You intend, says the council, to bring this man's blood upon us: as if the holy Jesus had not been worthy the naming by them. Christ told his disciples, Luke vi. 22. that the world should cast out their name as evil. Behold! his own is used no better: he is homo nullius in nomis. This man, this fellow, this deceiver were the opprobrious titles which the learned Rabbies thought fit to impose upon the best man that ever the world had.—Lord! how can we be abused enough for thee, who wast so degraded and debased for us?

29 Then Peter and the other apostles answered, and said, We ought to obey God rather than men.

39 The God of our fathers raised up Jesus whom ye slew and hanged on a tree.

31 Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

32 And we are his witnesses of these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 When they heard that, they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

To the foregoing charge of obstinacy brought in against the apostles, St. Peter answers, in the name, and as the mouth of the rest; owning that they had not obeyed them in their injunction, because they had commanded that which was contrary to the command of God. Where observe, How the apostles assert the prerogative of Christ as their apology for disobedience to human commands; "We ought to obey God rather than men." The second part of the charge was sedition; as if the apostles endeavoured to stir up the people to revenge the blood of Christ upon the chief priests and rulers. Thence note, That it is no new thing to tax the ministers of Christ for preaching sedition, when rulers design to stop their mouths, and not suffer them to preach at all. But to remove this part of the charge, the apostle tells them, that this Jesus, whom they ignominiously slew on earth, is now an exalted Prince in heaven, able to give repentance and remission of sins to the worst of his murderers, if they unfeignedly desire it: "Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance, &c." Whence learn, 1. That Jesus will be a Saviour to none to whom he is not a Prince. We must submit ourselves to his ruling power, as well as commit ourselves to his saving mercy. For it is in vain to expect salvation by him, if we do not yield subjection to him. 2. That repentance and remission of sins are the special fruits and advantages of Christ's exaltation: "Him hath God exalted to give repentance and remission of sins." Learn, 3. That it is the sole prerogative of our Lord Jesus Christ, to give repentance and remission of sins. Where note, The encouragement which the apostle's ministry gave to the murderers of Christ to be his parish; he preaches the duty of repentance, and the privilege of remission of sins, but assureth them, for their comfort, that Christ stands ready to dispense both. But observe the sad effects which this sermon had upon these hearers; it was for substance the same which St. Peter preached, chap. ii. when so many thousands were pricked at the heart by sorrow and compunction; whereas these men were cut to the heart with anger and indignation. Whence learn, 1. That the most sound and sacred doctrine is an intolerable torment to an unsound and unholy heart; That the word of God dispensed by the same minister, and in the same manner, has not always the same success. The substance of both these sermons was the same (Jesus and the resurrection,) and the preacher (St. Peter) was the same, but the success was not the same; to let the apostle know that the excellency of the power was of God, and not of himself, as St. Paul speaks, 2 Cor. iv. 7.

34 Then stood there up one in the council; a pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space;

35 And said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

36 For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain, and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

37 After this man arose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he also perished, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38 And now, I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel, or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply, ye be found even to fight against God.

40 And to him they agreed: and, when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go.

41 And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.

42 And daily, in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.

Observe here, 1. A general council erring, and that fundamentally in matters of faith. They determined peremptorily, that the doctrine and practice of the apostles was not from God; and accordingly resolved to suppress them, and that by death. Thence learn, that no determination of a council against a doctrine or practice, is any demonstrative or sufficient proof, that such a doctrine or practice is not from God. Observe, 2. How God raised up a particular person in the council. Gamaliel, to interpose in the apostles' behalf as Nicodemus before had done on Christ's behalf; and uses him as an instrument to preserve them from the rage and fury of their persecutors. Without question, Gamaliel's spirit was actuated and influenced by the Spirit of God, to give such counsel as is here given. Observe, 3. The counsel and advice given in the several parts of it. 1. He advises them to take heed what they did to these men, ver. 35, implying, that men had need take heed how they engage themselves in suppressing or destroying any sort of men, whatsoever, until they have clear and expressive warrant from heaven for the execution. 2. He assures them, that if this work be of men, it will certainly come to nought; which he proves by a double instance, namely, Theudas, and Judas of Galilee, who both pretended to be sent of God as saviours of their country, and gathered many followers, but miscarried in their enterprise; intimating, that every invention, contrivance, or device of man, especially in things pertaining to God and religion, will in time be blasted and blown upon by God, and come to nothing. 3. He adds, That if this work be of God, it can never be overthrown, but the attempt will be deemed a fighting against God: signifying to us, that for any person to attempt the suppression of any doctrine or practice that is from God, is to fight against God himself. 4. He intimates to them the great peril and danger of fighting against God, in the word even, lest ye be found even fighting against God. Thence learn, that fighting against God is a most dangerous enterprise for any person at any time to be found engaged or concerned in. Observe, 4. The success or issue of Gamaliel's counsel; his advice being so wise and rational, it prevailed with the rulers to desist from their former intention of putting the apostles to death: but they come not off without blows, though without bloodshed; they are scourged, as their Master was before them, which was both a painful and reproachful punishment. Yet were they so far from being discouraged, that they were the more resolved. They rejoiced that they were so graced as to be disgraced for Christ, and accounted it their highest honor to be dishonored for him; esteeming it a very great favor and happiness to bear reproach for Christ, according to that of the apostle St. Peter, 1 Epist. iv. 14. "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." This sent them from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. Observe lastly, How wisely and well the holy apostles improve their restored liberty: they redouble their pains and diligence in preaching the gospel, and are unwearied in the way of their duty, and in the work of their God, ver. 42. "Daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus Christ; that is, they laid hold on every opportunity, in season and out of season, publicly and privately, to publish the gospel to those that had not received it, and farther to instruct those that had already received the faith of Christ. Thus the more outrageous were their adversaries, the more courageous were the holy apostles. They religiously profess the name of Christ, and resolutely abide by their profession, though they were derided, imprisoned, persecuted, and beaten for the same.—Lord help thy ministers at this day to suffer reproach for thy gospel; but never let any of them either reproach it, or be a reproach unto it. Amen.

CHAPTER VI.

In the foregoing chapters, an account is given of the two first persecutions that befel the christian church after Christ's ascension; the former in the imprisoning, the latter in the beating of the apostles. This and the next chapter acquaint us with a third blow given to this infant-church, blacker and bloodier than both the former, in the death of the holy Martyr St. Stephen; and the occasion of it was thus:

AND in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration.

6 K

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables.

3 Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.

4 But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

Here observe, 1. How the number of christians increased upon the foregoing persecution; as the Jewish church in Egypt, the more it was oppressed, the more it multiplied; so the christian church here got ground by opposition; ver. 1. "In those days the number of the disciples was multiplied." Observe, 2. How the number of believers increasing, there arose (as it often happens among a multitude) a murmuring among them: the Grecians, that is, such Jews as were dispersed abroad among the Greeks, complaining that their widows were neglected, and received less than the widows of the Hebrews in the daily distribution of the church's money, for charitable uses. Thence learn, That neglect of the poor, particularly of the godly poor, is a sin in all, but especially in the churches of Christ. Observe, 3. How the apostles desiring to have the poor well provided for, not having leisure themselves personally to take care of them, advise the church to choose seven persons out of the hundred and twenty, mentioned in chapter the first, to be stewards and dispensers of the church's stock, to distribute the same with equity and indifference to all proper objects of charity without exception. Thence learn, That a general concern for the poor, and a tender regard to their necessities and wants, is a duty that will become the ministers and ambassadors of God: God's poor are his treasure, his jewels, the signet upon his arm; they are always in his eye, and upon his heart; how well then doth it become the ministers of God to take care of them who are so dear to him? Observe, 4. How the apostles resolve to perform their duty to God and their people, with such zeal and supplication, as became persons of their holy character and profession. We will give ourselves continually unto prayer, and to the ministry of the word." Where note, 1. That such as are called by God to the work of the ministry, ought to give themselves wholly to it: We will give ourselves continually thereunto. 2. That a minister's giving himself unto prayer, is as great, if not a greater duty than giving himself to the preaching of the word: "We will give ourselves continually unto prayer, and to the ministry of the word:" to the one as the end, to the other as the mean; it is God that sets the word on work, but it is prayer that sets God on work: that minister that is not fervent in prayer cannot expect to be successful in preaching. Pray for us, says the apostle to the Thessalonians, that the word may run and be glorified; he that begged prayer of others, did not neglect it himself, but prayed, without ceasing.

5 And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicholas a proselyte of Antioch:

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and, when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.

7 And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith.

Observe here, That to remove the forementioned murmuring at the inequality of the poor's relief, seven deacons were chosen to assist the apostles, and to dispose of that treasure (which had been laid down at the apostles' feet) with more indifference to all fit objects of charity without exception.— Here note, 1. The qualification of the persons chosen; men full of the Holy Ghost; that is, persons that were extraordinarily assisted by the Spirit to perform the duties required of them; for the office of a deacon was, besides the taking care of the poor, to preach the gospel, and to baptize, as it appears Philip did; had it been only to take care of the poor, they needed not to be so inquisitive to find out men full of the Holy Ghost for that service. Here observe, That the scripture mentions a threefold fulness of the Holy Ghost according to a threefold capacity of the receivers. There is plenitudo sufficientia, the fulness of a vessel; this every believer hath; there is plenitudo abundantia, the fulness of a stream; this the apostles had, when extraordinarily inspired, and filled with the Spirit at the first plantation of the gospel; and there is plenitudo superabundantia, the fulness of the fountain; and this Christ had, Col. i. 19. "It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." Note, 2. The manner how these deacons enter into their office; it is by prayer and imposition of hands, ver. 6. They prayed and laid their hands on them." This rite of laying on of hands was used anciently upon a threefold occasion in the Jewish church; namely, in their sacrifices; Exod. xxix. 15. In their blessings Gen. xlvii. 14. And in their designation unto a charge or office; Numb. xxvii. 18. Thus Moses laid his hands on Joshua; and from hence it was derived and brought into the gospel church, when ministers were ordained by the apostles in the primitive times, they laid their hands upon them, 1. Tim. v. 22. Note, 3. The almighty success of the gospel, notwithstanding all the violent opposition that was made against it; The word of God, that is, the doctrine of the gospel, increased, the number of believers multiplied; yea, some of the priests themselves, though formerly bitter enemies to Christ, now embraced the faith, and were joined to the church; great is truth, especially the spirit of truth, and will prevail. Naked truth is too hard for armed error. Truth has the strength of God in it, and therefore human power can never prevail against divine truth. "So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed."

8 And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 ¶ Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia, and of Asia, disputing with Stephen.

13 And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spake.

11 Then they suborned men, which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God.

12 And they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law :

14 For we have heard him say, That this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us.

15 And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

Observe here, The great character given of St. Stephen; a man full of the grace of God, full of faith, full of power to work miracles, mighty in word and deed; able to do all things, and to suffer all things through Christ that strengthened him. Observe, 2. The violent opposition which this good man met with in the way of his duty. He is, 1. Encountered by disputation with the heads of five colleges in Jerusalem, namely, Libertines, Cyrenians, Alexandrians, Cilicians, and Asiatics. Behold here, an admirable act kept, wherein St. Stephen was the respondent, against whom opponents appeared from all parts of the then known world; but all too few to resist the wisdom and spirit by which he spake. He asserted the truth so convincingly, that all his opponents had no power to oppose him. See here how faithful Christ was in fulfilling of his promise, Luke xxi. xv. "I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or oppose." 2. His adversaries being baffled in their disputes, they burn with revenge; they hire men to accuse him falsely, that they might take away his life. The best arguments of a baffled adversary are ever found to be craft and cruelty; it has been an old artifice of the devil, to swear innocent men out of their lives: and therefore it is next to a miracle, that no greater number of innocent persons have been murdered in the world by perjury and false accusation; when so many thousands hate them, who make no conscience of false oaths. Observe, 2. The charge and accusation brought against Stephen, that he spake dishonorably of the Jewish religion, that he was continually foretelling destruction to the temple, and threatening the change of all the Mosaic rites. It is very probable, that he told them the shadows and ceremonies were to vanish, now the substance was come; and that the Mosaic rites were to give place, that a more excellent and spiritual worship might succeed. For as God was worshipped aright four hundred years before either temple or tabernacle were built, or the Jewish rites instituted: so he might again be truly worshipped after they were abolished. Observe, lastly, How Almighty God, by a miracle, bears witness to the innocency of his holy servant St. Stephen; and to convince his accusers, that he had done no wrong to Moses, God makes his face to shine now as Moses' face had shined of old, and gave him an angelical countenance, in which appeared an extraordinary lustre and radiancy; not that an angel has a face, or shines visibly; but it intimates that amazing brightness of beauty which was instamped upon the face of Stephen. He now began to border upon heaven, and had received some beams of glory approaching: it pleaseth God sometimes to give his children and servants some prelibations and foretastes of heaven before they step into heaven, especially holy martyrs and confessors, who love not their lives unto death: God bears an honorable respect to them that bear witness to his name and truth; and as they shall shine forth in the kingdom of their Father, so will God sometimes put a lustre upon their faces here: "All in the council saw St. Stephen's face, as it had been the face of an angel."

CHAPTER VII.

THEN said the high priest, Are these things so?

2 And he said, Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken: The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran,

3 And said unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee.

4 Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran; and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed into this land wherein ye now dwell.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

This chapter contains St. Stephen's apology, or defensive plea which he makes for himself: the Jews had, in the foregoing chapter, accused him for blaspheming their law, and profaning their temple, imagining that Almighty God was so pleased with the temple service and Moasic rites, that no other way of worship could be acceptable to him. Therefore by an historical deduction, he shows them that God was worshipped aright before either tabernacle or temple was built, or any of the Moasic rites instituted or ordained, and consequently that the true worship of God was not necessarily and inseparably annexed to any of these things. For the proof of this he begins at Abraham, and shows them, that he living of old at Ur of the Chaldeans, in the midst of idolators, God was pleased of his free mercy to call him to enlighten, and draw him to own and worship the true God, and commanding him to leave his native country, and go into a land which he should show him: he promised to make of him a great nation, and that in him all the families of the earth should be blessed. Now the design and drift of Stephen in this relation, is to prove, that Abraham, from his first call in Chaldea, when he was seventy years old, to the time of his being ninety years old, had served God faithfully all that time, without either circumcision or ceremony, without tabernacle or temple; and consequently that the true worship of God might be now performed acceptably after these ceremonies were abolished, as well as it was performed before they were instituted. Learn hence, 1. That religious worship is manifestly due to God by the law and light of nature. 2. That the manner how that worship should be acceptably performed, was not known by the law of nature, but discovered by divine revelation. Adam in innocence knew that God was to be worshipped: yet he did not know by what outward acts he was to testify that homage, till God the Sovereign Governor and Supreme lawgiver did give direction. 3. That the worship due from the creature to God the creator, is a spiritual worship, and ought to be spiritually performed. 4. The Judaical worship, though appointed by God himself, was fleshly and carnal, and never pleased God for its own sake. 5. The evangelical worship being spiritual and most suitable to the nature of God, is therefore most acceptable and best pleasing to him. The ceremonial worship was therefore good, because God commanded it; but the evangelical worship is therefore commanded, because good. The legal worship is called flesh in scripture, and a carnal ordinance, in opposition to the gospel, which is called spirit, and a ministration of the spirit, because attended with a more spiritual efficacy on the hearts and lives of men.

6 And God spake on this wise, That his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.

7 And the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God: And after that shall they come forth, and serve me in this place.

8 And he gave him the covenant of circumcision: And so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

Observe here, The great trial which God put Abraham's faith unto: the Lord promised to give him the land of Canaan for a possession, but he gave him not a foot's breadth. He promised to give it unto his seed, when as yet he had no child; and when God gave him seed, yet they were to sojourn in a strange land, Egypt; and continue there in bondage four hundred years. Learn hence, That there is no faith which God delights more to exercise and try, than the faith of his people; as faith puts honor upon God, so doth God put honor upon faith; and faith never honors God more, nor is more highly honored by him, than when it is put upon the greatest exercise and trial; 1 Pet. i. 7. "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory."—Here the apostle compares faith unto, and prefers it before gold, even the most precious gold purified in the fire. Is gold precious and rare? So is faith. Is gold pure and resplendent? So is faith. Is gold lasting and durable? So is faith. Is gold purified and improved by trying in the fire? So is faith by exercise; as the instance of Abraham here fully proves. Observe, 2. How God takes Abraham and his seed into covenant with him, and gives him circumcision, the seal of the covenant. Thence learn, That in the covenant which God made with Abraham, he gave himself to be a God to Abraham and to his seed, and received Abraham and his seed to be a people unto himself. 2. That circumcision was both the sign and the seal of the covenant which God made with Abraham, and his seed, the people of the Jews: it is here called the covenant of circumcision, because circumcision was both the sign and the seal of that covenant made with Abraham. 1. Circumcision was a sign, and that in several respects: it was a commemorative sign of God's covenant with Abraham; it was a representative sign of Abraham's faith and obedience towards God. A demonstrative sign of original sin, and the depravity of human nature. A discriminating and distinguishing sign of the true church, and people of God, from all the rest of the world. An initiating sign, by which all strangers were admitted into the Jewish church. And lastly, it was a prefigurative sign of baptism, which succeeded in the room of circumcision in the christian church. 2. Circumcision was not only a sign, but a seal also; Rom. iv. 11. "He received the sign of circumcision, the seal of the righteousness by faith." It was a seal on God's part, to confirm all the promises made to Abraham and his seed: and it was a seal on his and their part to bind him to renounce the service of all other gods, and to oblige them to the observation of the whole Jewish law.

9 And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt; but God was with him.

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favor and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt, and all his house.

11 Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12 But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first.

13 And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him; and all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls.

15 So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers, 16 And were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem.

17 But when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt,

18 Till another king arose, which knew not Joseph:

19 The same dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil-entreated our fathers, so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

From the history of Abraham, Stephen proceeds to that of Joseph; and shows, as he did before, that Joseph, as well as Abraham, worshipped God acceptably without either tabernacle or temple, and without such customs as Moses delivered; and consequently, that the worship of God is not confined to an outward temple, or a Mosaical ministration; and that therefore it was not blasphemy in him to say, that God might be so worshipped. This is St. Stephen's argument from the instance of Joseph: As to the particular story of Joseph, Observe, 1. The great and sore afflictions which befel that holy and good man; he was envied and hated of his brethren, they conspired against him, and sought to take away his life: he is thrown into a pit, and afterwards sold for a bond slave to the Madianites; they sell him into Egypt where he was imprisoned so long, till the iron entered into his soul; that is, so loaded with irons, that his flesh was eaten with them. Learn thence, That afflictions, many and great afflictions, long and sore afflictions, have been, and may be, the lot and portion of the holiest and best of men, and all these occasioned by their own brethren; "Joseph's brethren, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt." Observe, 2. The singular support and comfort which Joseph experienced in, and under his great afflictions; God was with him: God was with Joseph in Potiphar's house, and gave him favor in the eyes of his master, who reposed an entire confidence in him. God was with Joseph in prison, and caused his imprisonment to make way for his enlargement. God was with Joseph in Pharaoh's court, and gave him a prudent and provident spirit, making him a father unto Pharaoh, and to all his people: giving him also a compassionate and merciful spirit to his brethren; pardoning their cruelties and forgiving the injuries done unto him. Hence we learn, That all the envy, malice, and mischievous designs of men, shall never be able to hinder or disappoint the purpose and pleasure of God: "The patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt; but God was with him." Observe, 3. The religious desire which Jacob and Joseph, and the rest of the holy patriarchs, had to be buried together in the land of Canaan, ver. 15, 16. "Jacob died, and our fathers, and were carried over into Sychem, and laid in a sepulchre." No doubt, this was done by way of declaration of their own faith, and in order to the confirmation of the faith of others; that their posterity should enjoy and possess that land: so that this act of theirs was a profession of their faith in the promises which God had made to them of their possessing and enjoying the land of Canaan. There is a natural desire in persons to be buried by their ancestors; but here was a religious desire, they died in the faith of their ancestors, and laid down their heads together upon the same pillow of dust, in hope of a blessed and glorious resurrection.

(No. 32.)

20 In which time Moses was born, and was exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months;

21 And when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and deeds.

23 And, when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

24 And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

25 For he supposed, his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood not.

26 And the next day he showed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, Saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?

29 Then fled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

From the history of Abraham and Joseph, St. Stephen descends to that of Moses; where we have observable, 1. The birth and education of Moses, he was born and hid three months in his father's house; and then being cast out, was taken in by Pharaoh's daughter, and had a noble education given to him; being instructed in all kinds of good literature, to fit him for such great services as a prince's court might probably have brought him to: Moses was learned. Hence note, That the greater men are, the greater should their care be for the learning and religious education of their children: because nothing is more incongruous and unsuitable than greatness of estate and meanness of understanding. It is a shame for great men to breed up their children sensually, to gaming, sporting, and excess, as if an inheritance did serve for no other purpose but to make the heir of it useless and good for nothing. Again note, the latitude and extent of Moses' learning. He was learned in all the learning of the Egyptians. Where remark, 1. The different end which God had in his providence, from what Pharaoh's daughter had in her particular care. She intended by this education of Moses, the good of Egypt; but God intended the good of Israel: she designed the service of Pharaoh; but God designed Moses to be a deliverer from Pharaoh. Thus the wise and holy providence of God useth the diligence of men to effect and bring things about which they never thought of. 2. We may remark, how that Moses, the great prophet, whom God spake to, mouth to mouth, is here commended for his learning, yea, for Egyptian learning. Thence we may gather, That human learning is a noble and beneficial gift of God, and a very great ornament and honor unto the greatest and most excellent men; for it is in itself an ornament and perfection to the mind; it renders men the more useful and serviceable in their generation, and a greater blessing to human society, but especially to the church of God. Human learning indeed is far inferior to holiness: but in holy men, learning is a rare ornament and accession to holiness. Sanctified wit beautifies religion, sanctified reason defends it, sanctified power protects it, sanctified eloquence persuades others to the love of it; so that to decry the use of human learning must proceed either from ignorance or from malice, and a desire of having religion betrayed. Let us see that we get our learning seasoned with holiness, that we use it with humility, moderation, and sobriety, as an handmaid unto Christ; not vain-gloriously unto ostentation, not proudly with contempt of others, not heretically in defence of error; never suffering human learning but divine revelation, to determine articles of faith; then, if with Moses we be learned in all the learning of the philosophers, the more glory we shall bring to God, and be the more useful and beneficial to mankind. Observe, 2. As the education of Moses in Pharaoh's court, so the time of his continuing there: namely, till he was forty years old: after which God put it into his heart to visit his brethren, the children of Israel, and to offer himself to be a deliverer to them; and he supposed that they would have understood the purpose of God to save them by his hand, but they understood it not. But what reason was there for the Israelites to suppose that Moses was the person designed by God for their deliverer? Answer, Very great reason; because, 1. They knew that the time of their deliverance did now draw very near. 2. From the extraordinariness of Moses' preservation: by his being hid three months in his father's house without discovery; by his floating upon the waters in an ark of bulrushes without danger, when an infant; they might have rationally thought that such a person was designed by God for very great purposes. 3. From his readiness to defend them at this time, when an Israelite and an Egyptian contended; for it was wonderful that so great a person as Moses was, and might have been, should concern himself in a private quarrel betwixt two obscure persons. Moses might well suppose that his brethren would have understood, how that God, by his hand would have delivered them; but they understood it not. Observe, 3. The ill treatment given to Moses, when he offered himself to be a reconciler: they thrust him from them and expostulate with him, Who made thee a ruler or a judge? The meek man replies, Sirs, ye are brethren, why do ye wrong one to another? Where note, 1. Who were the persons doing wrong to each other; they were Israelites, both Israelites. To see an Israelite and an Egyptian struggling, had been no wonder; but to see two Israelites, who were brethren by nation, brethren by religion, brethren in tribulation, both of the seed of Abraham, both initiated into the same covenant, both in bondage to a cruel tyrant, Pharaoh, who had condemned them to an ignominious slavery, and designed such a degree of cruelty, as to murder all the male issue; this was an astonishing sight, and Moses might well say, Why do ye wrong one to another? Plainly implying, that both parties were to blame; but that party most who would not hear of a reconciliation, or putting a stop to the quarrel; a reconciler is more odious than a stranger in the apprehension of some. Observe lastly, How Moses, being thus ill-treated by them, departs from them, and they hear no more of him for forty years, ver. 20. Then fled Moses, and was a stranger in the land of Madian; Where observe, The years of Moses' life were an hundred and twenty: forty years he spent at the court in Egypt; forty years he spent in Madian with his father-in-law Jethro: and the last forty years of his life in the wilderness. Now all this time Moses was a worshipper of the true God, and that in an acceptable manner; and most of this time he worshipped God without either tabernacle or temple. From whence St. Stephen draws his argument to prove, that as God was acceptably worshipped by holy men, before either tabernacle or temple were erected, in like manner he may be so again, after both tabernacle and temple are destroyed; and consequently, that they unjustly accused him of blasphemy, or speaking blasphemous words against Moses, and against God.

30 And, when forty years were expired, there appeared to him, in the wilderness of mount Sina, an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.

31 When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled and durst not behold.

33 Then said the Lord to him, Put off thy shoes from thy feet; for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

34 I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people, which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now, come, I will send thee into Egypt.

35 This Moses, whom they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush.

36 He brought them out, after that he had showed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red Sea, and in the wilderness forty years.

37 ¶ This is that Moses which said unto the children of Israel, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me: him shall ye hear.

38 This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us;

39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt;

40 Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

41 And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

42 Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen:

45 Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drove out before the face of our fathers unto the days of David;

46 Who found favor before God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.

47 But Solomon built him an house.

48 Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, 49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool; what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?

50 Hath not my hand made all these things?

St. Stephen here goes on with the history of Moses, and having, in the former verses, made mention of what occurred to him in Egypt and in Madian, here an account is given of what happened to him in the wilderness; and the first thing observable, is the appearance of God to him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush, which burned, but was not consumed. This bush was an emblem of the church: this bush burning, pointed out the afflicted state of the church in Egypt, having a long time been in the fiery furnace there; but the burning bush, not consumed, signified the church's preservation. God was in the midst of the bush, whilst the bush was in the midst of the burning. Where note, How Almighty God, intending to send Moses as a deliverer of his people out of Egypt, gives him a visible sign for confirming of his faith, in the sight of this burning but unconsumed bush: 1. To assure him of his people's deliverance, that though they were now slaves in Egypt, yet they should be set free, and instated in a land flowing with milk and honey; next to satisfy him that he should be the instrument to bring to pass so glorious a work. O how gracious is God's condescension towards his servants, who is pleased, by visible signs, to support the weakness of their faith. "The Lord appeared to Moses in a flame of fire in the bush." Observe, 2. How Moses, in the faith of God's presence with him, protection over him, and assistance of him, goes forth for Egypt, where he works many signs and wonders before Pharaoh, at last brings the people forth into the wilderness to mount Sinai, where God gave them his law; and appointed Moses then to make a tabernacle for his worship. Now, the use which St. Stephen makes of this, is to convince the Jews, that for above four hundred years their fathers had worshipped God without any tabernacle at all, and consequently, that now that sort of worship was abolished, God might be very acceptably served and worshipped in the absence of it. Observe, 3. That notwithstanding Moses was raised up by God, and sent to be a deliverer into Egypt, and a lawgiver to the Israelites in the wilderness; yet they rebelled against him, and against God in him: for they ran into the vilest idolatry, even to make and worship a golden calf, to adore the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, for deities; yea, they carried about with them the images and pictures of the heathen gods, Mars, and Saturn, with design to worship them; for which gross idolatry God sent them into captivity beyond Babylon. Hence learn, 1. That there is a strange inclination in man's heart to the sin of idolatry; the reason is, because it is a worship of our own invention. Now, man is most fond of and forward for, that service of God which is of his own finding out and setting up. We love a devotion of our own devising very dearly. Learn, 2. That idolatry in worshipping the sun, moon and stars, is a very ancient sin; both the old Gentiles and old Jews were guilty of it; and consequently, we may infer, that neither antiquity nor universality will bear us out in idolatrous worship. Example is no plea against a rule, nor antiquity against truth: it is no excuse to us, when we do evil, to say our forefathers did so before us. Learn, 3. That the idolatry of the Jews was a grand iniquity, and much worse than the idolatry of the heathens; the Gentiles knew not God; but the Jews owned him, and gloried in him. But "though they knew God, they worshipped him not as God." Observe, 4. The Israelites being come out of Egypt by the conduct of Moses, and having entered the wilderness at God's appointment and particular direction, the tabernacle for his public worship and service is erected; this is here called, ver. 44. The tabernacle of witness; it being the place where God used to witness and manifest his glorious presence, and because the ark of the covenant, the law and the testimonies, were laid up in it, which were witnesses and declarations of God's will how he would be served. Now this tabernacle was an ambulatory temple, as the temple was a standing tabernacle. This tabernacle was moveable; they carried it with them from place to place, while they sojourned in the wilderness, and at last they brought it with them into Canaan, ver. 45.— which tabernacle our forefathers brought in with Jesus, (that is, Joshua) into the possession of the Gentiles, that is, the land of Canaan, where it continued all the days of David, till Solomon began his reign, who built the temple in a most magnificent and sumptuous manner. Here note, 1. That the public worship of Almighty God is a moral duty, founded in the light of nature, and the common reason of mankind.— 2. That solemn places for public worship have been from the beginning, before the giving of the law. The ancient devotion of the world delighted much in groves, Gen. xxi. 33. "Abraham planted a grove, and called there on the name of the Lord." This was a sort of oratory or chapel, whither Abraham and his family resorted to worship the true God. After the giving of the law, while the people of the Jews were in an unsettled condition, God was contented with a mean tabernacle; but when they were settled in Canaan, then a magnificent temple is built, in some measure suitable to the greatness and majesty of that God who was to be worshipped in it. From whence we may infer, That the public worship of God, though it doth require inward and spiritual devotion, yet, as public, is necessarily external; and as such, it ought to express, in the best manner we are able, that profound reverence which we pay to the divine Majesty. And therefore, that the circumstances of it should not only be decent, but very solemn and magnificent, the light of nature seems plainly to require, and the gospel doth no where gainsay. When David determined to build God an house for public worship, he resolved it should be exceedingly magnificent; which resolution was not a piece of ceremonial piety, but grounded upon a moral, and eternal reason, of equal force in all ages; namely, that the greatest and best of beings be most awfully adored by us in the best manner we are able; and that we declare our high regard and esteem of so glorious a Majesty, by all outward fitting testimonies of respect and reverence. Observe lastly, That after the temple was built, the worship of God was not so tied to that place, as that he could not be worshipped acceptably any where else; for God hath declared, by the mouth of his holy prophet, Isa. lvi. 1, 2. "That he delighted not in temples made with hands," as if he were included therein, and bound thereto.

And thus St. Stephen, by a large induction of particulars, made good his defence, that he was not guilty of blasphemy, for affirming that Christ would destroy the temple, and change the customs which Moses delivered. He closes his apology with this argument, that which was not blasphemy to affirm of the tabernacle, though it was set up by God's special appointment given to Moses, is not blasphemy to affirm of the temple; but it was no blasphemy to affirm the use of the tabernacle to have been a temporary, and consequently alterable; therefore to affirm the same of the temple is not blasphemy; especially since the Lord hath said, That "he dwelleth not in temples made with hands."

51 Ye stiff-necked, and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye.

52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them, which showed before of the coming of the just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53 Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it.

Observe here, 1. How St. Stephen, having finished his general discourse in the foregoing verses to the Jews, comes now to a particular and close application of it to them. All the while he was generally discoursing, they were quiet and still, and made no noise at all; for generals do not affect: but when he came to apply it particularly, and say, "You are the men, ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart," this enrages them, and drives them into the worst kind of madness. Learn hence, 1. That the efficacy of the word preached lies in a particular and close application of it to every man's conscience. 2. That it is ministers' great duty not to satisfy themselves with delivering general truths to their people, but they must point at their particular sins (though not at their particular persons) and reprove them for the same, what hazards soever they run, and whatever the event may be. St. Stephen's close preaching here, and impartial reproving of sin, he saw would cost him his life; but, nothing terrified by his adversaries, he spares not to tell them, the greatest of them, of their faults. Accordingly, observe, 2. The particular sins which St. Stephen here convicts them of, and reproves them for: 1. The stoutness, and stubbornness, and stiff-neckedness of their hearts; Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart: a metaphor taken from a bullock not used to the yoke, who therefore will not submit his neck to bear it. Wicked men are often called children of Belial, because they will not endure the yoke of obedience; but when God comes to put it upon their necks, they lift up their heel against him. 2. He charges them with rebelling against, and resisting of the holy Spirit of God: Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; That is, both the outward testimony of the Holy Ghost, speaking to them in the ministry of the prophets and apostles, and also the inward operations of the holy Spirit, in that work of illumination and conviction which they had been under. 3. For their imitating their cruel ancestors, who killed the old prophets, and crucified the Lord of life and glory: As your fathers did so do ye. 4. For their wicked violation of the holy law of God, which was given them by the glorious ministry and proclamation of angels: Ye received the law by the disposition of angels: that is, the angels were testes and internuncii, witnesses and messengers betwixt God and Moses, in giving of the law, or Jesus Christ the angel of the covenant, who is God's messenger, and the angel that appeared to Moses in the bush: he gave that law to Moses, and by Moses to you, which law ye have notwithstanding violated and never kept.

(No. 32)

54 ¶ When they heard these things they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth.

55 But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God.

56 And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.

57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord.

58 And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.

Observe here, 1. The Jews' angry and unreasonable resentment of the foregoing representation; though it was exact truth and matter of fact, yet were they cut to the heart; that is they were angry even unto madness. Here was a most proper corrosive, and applied by a skilful hand, but they would not let it stick, nor endure a cure; such is the enmity of wicked hearts, that when the ministers of God reprove sin sharply, instead of receiving the message, they rage at the messenger: When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart. Observe, 2. How they discover their rage against the holy man two ways: by their gestures, and by their actions: their gestures made a full discovery of their enraged minds. 1. They gnashed upon him with their teeth; the action of damned fiends. 2. They made a great outcry with an unanimous and tumultuous rage; They cried out with a loud voice. 3. They stopped their ears, resolved to hear no more either of his counsels or complaints. 4. They ran upon him with one accord, like persons combined and united together in malice and madness. 5. They cast him out of the city, not out of the synagogue only, but out of the city also. They look upon this good man, of whom the world was not worthy; as a person not fit for human society. "Lord! why should any of thy present ministers and ambassadors wonder at or be discouraged by the ill treatment which an unkind world now gives them; when thy blessed apostles, full of the Holy Ghost, and endowed with power to work miracles, were cast out before us, as the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things!" But this was not all; not only by their gestures, but by their actions did they discover the utmost effects of their rage and malice against this holy and innocent person: for they put him to death; yea, stoned him to death; shooting a whole volley of cruelty at his naked breast; a shower of stones came down upon him, from those hands which ought to have cast the first stone at themselves; but all this did but join him the closer to Christ the chief Corner-stone; Et per tot lapides Petra conjungitur uni. Learn hence, that it is not in the power of piety and religion to exempt and secure the most holy and religious person either from the attempts of popular fury, or from the stroke of a violent and bloody death; "They cast him out of the city and stoned him." Observe, 3. What a blessed sight St. Stephen had of heaven, and of Jesus in heaven, to prepare and fit him for his sufferings, and to support and uphold him under them, ver. 56. "Behold I see the heavens opened, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God." Blessed Jesus: what an encouragement it is to us, suffering for thee on earth, to look up steadfastly by faith unto thee in heaven, who art continually standing there to behold and observe, to strengthen and support, to receive and reward thy suffering servants; to count every stone cast at them, and to revenge all the injuries and wrongs done unto them! Observe lastly, How these bloody persecutors manage their cruelties under a form of law, that they may appear the more specious. By the law of God, stoning was the punishment due to blaspheming; and they that witnessed against the blasphemer were, by the law of God, to cast the first stone at him, Deut. xvii. 7. Accordingly, the witnesses here put off their upper garments to fit themselves for their bloody work; and a young man called Saul, undertook to look to them, kept their garments for them, and consequently consented unto his death, and had a hand in stoning of him: "The witnesses laid down their garments at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul." By consenting to the sins of other men, we certainly become partakers of other men's sins.

59 And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit.

Observe here, 1. The holy deportment of this humble saint at his death; he prays. Learn thence, That good men should shut up their lives with prayer, and die with prayer in their mouths. Our Saviour did so; his first martyr here did so. St. Stephen imitated the death of Christ, and he imitated Christ in his death: turning from malicious men, to speak unto a merciful God in prayer. They stoned Stephen, calling upon God. Observe, 2. The object of his prayer, or whom St. Stephen prays to, Jesus Christ: he doth not say, "O blessed Virgin! O St. Thomas! O St. Bridget! intercede with my Saviour for me." But he directs his supplications immediately to Christ, saying, Lord Jesus! From whence we may strongly infer the divinity of Christ. Prayer is an act of religious worship, and he that is the proper object of religious worship must be God: none must be the object of my prayer, but he that is the object of my faith. How shall I pray to him, in whom I have not believed? Observe, 3. The subject of his prayer, or what he prays for, his soul Lord Jesus receive my spirit; he doth not say, Lord Jesus, save my life, which is in so much danger of being taken away; O, deliver me from the hands of my persecutors, and bring me off safe! Not a word like this; but let it go well with my soul: Lord, receive my spirit. Learn hence, That the godly man's care, living and dying, is for his soul; because this is the principal and immortal part, because this is the greatest talent that ever God put into our hands, and because the happiness and eternal welfare of the body depends upon the blessed condition of the soul: if the soul be happy, the body cannot be miserable. Observe, 4. The sweet surrender, the willing and cheerful resignation which the good man makes of his soul into the hands of Christ; Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. 1. The godly man's spirit or soul is his own, he has not sold it to sin, nor pawned it to Satan, nor exchanged it for the world; but he has reserved it for Christ, who redeemed it for him. 2. Receive. Learn thence it is the duty and disposition of a gracious person, to resign up his soul willingly and cheerfully into Christ's hands, whenever God calls for it; his soul is surrendered by him, not extorted from him. The knowledge that a good man has of Christ's love and care, of his faithfulness and power, encourages him to this resignation, Psal. xxxi. 6. "Lord, into thy hands I commit my spirit, for thou hast redeemed it." And sure he that redeemed it will not hurt it.

60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this he fell asleep.

We had St. Stephen's prayer in the foregoing verse for himself: here in this verse he prays for his murderers.—Where note, 1. His pious charity in forgiving his enemies, and praying for them, that God would forgive them also; Lord lay not this sin to their charge: how doth this holy martyr imitate his dying Saviour? Luke xxiii. 34. Father forgive them—Note, 2. His regular charity; his charity began at home; he prays first for himself, then for his murderers; first, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit; next, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. Where remark, that Christ prayed first for his enemies, then for himself, Luke xxiii. 35, 36. "Father, forgive them: Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit;" but St. Stephen intercedes first for himself. The reason of the difference in this, Christ needed no prayer for himself, but Stephen did: we are to love our enemies as ourselves; but Christ loved his enemies above himself, and better than himself. Christ's love to his enemies was the copy and pattern, St. Stephen's but the transcript.—Note, 3. His holy fervency in prayer: he cried out with a loud voice, endeavouring by the cry of his prayers to drown the noise of the stone which rattled about his ears, and to divert that shower of vengeance from them, which their shower of stones upon him deservedly called for from heaven. Note, 4. The holy martyr prayed for himself standing, but for his enemies kneeling. Ver. 59. He stood when he said, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit;" but ver. 60. when he said, "Lord lay not this sin to their charge, he kneeled down and cried." He was more importunate for his enemies, than he was for himself. How near did St. Stephen, the first martyr, come to his blessed Master Jesus Christ, in praying for his enemies? Note, 5. The success and benefit of his prayer: God heard and answered Stephen's prayer in Paul's conversion, recorded in the ninth chapter, Si Stephanus non orasset, Ecclesia Paulum non habuisset, saith one of the ancients; "Saul's conversion was owing to St. Stephen's intercession." Note, 6. The holy man's exit and happy conclusion, He fell asleep. Where note, 1. The thing recorded of him is his death. 2. The metaphor which his death is set out by, and clothed with, and that is sleep. 3. The circumstance of time when he fell asleep, namely, after he had served Christ, and suffered for him. Learn thence, That it is a blessed thing when death calls us off the stage of this world, after a life of service and suffering: When he had so said, he fell asleep. Happy is that christian who falls asleep with his Lord's work in his hand.

CHAPTER VIII.

The history of Saul's cruelty and conversion is next recorded; the former in this chapter, the latter in the next; the design of both is to excite us to consider, what a great change the grace of God can make in turning Saul into Paul; persecutors into professors: and the opposers of Christ and his truth, into faithful servants unto both.

AND Saul was consenting unto his death.

That is, St. Stephen's, mentioned in the close of the last chapter; how far he consented to his death, the text tells us, "He kept the garments of them that stoned him, they laid down their clothes at his feet," chap. vii. 58. His hand did not throw one stone at the holy martyr's head, but his will concurred with others in that bloody act; and this denominated him guilty. Learn hence, That God chiefly inspects the heart, and if the vote be passed there, he looks upon the man as guilty, though he proceeds no farther. It is easy to murder another by silent wish, or passionate desire. In all moral actions God values the will for the deed, and reckons that man an actor, that is an applauder. Consent unto the sins of others makes their guilt our own: Saul was consenting unto his death. It follows:

—And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem: and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.

Observe here, 1. How the spite and cruelty of the church's adversaries was not quenched, but rather inflamed by the blood of Stephen: from whence arose a bitter persecution against the church at Jerusalem, upon which the multitude of believers fled from thence. Persecution scatters the professors of religion; but God makes scattering the way to increasing, and what was intended for the hindrance, God overruled for the furtherance of the gospel: as God overpowers the devil, so he outwits him too. This scattering persecution at Jerusalem, which was designed to smother and suppress the gospel, did propagate and spread it more and more. Observe, 2. How God sets bounds and limits to this sharp persecution: though the believers were scattered, yet the apostles continued at Jerusalem; They were all scattered, except the apostles. The twelve stay there untouched in the midst of the fiery furnace of persecution, to comfort and cherish the church in that sad and doleful day, manre the malice of angry men, and of enraged devils; and those who were scattered, carried the light of the gospel among the Gentiles. Thus out of the darkness of persecution, God bringeth forth the light of the gospel, providing at once for the safety of some by their flight, and for the calling home of others by their dispersion: "They were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria."

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

Observe, 1. Though St. Stephen was stoned to death by his bloody persecutors, yet are they not so inhuman as to deny him burial; it is a mercy to have a grave, and a decent burial is a blessing: the body is the garment of the soul; we lay up this garment in the wardrobe of the grave, with assurance that we shall put it on again (when made spiritual and incorruptible) in the morning of the resurrection, and wear it to all eternity. Observe, 2. The persons described who carried Stephen to the bed of the grave; devout men: That is, truly religious men, men of eminent piety and holy courage also; Devout men carried Stephen to his burial.—A noble instance of a generous and christian courage, that they durst, among such a multitude of persecutors and furious zealots, own their esteem of, and pay their last respects unto, the name and memory of the holy martyr. Observe, 3. The doleful solemnity of his funeral, They made great lamentation over him; and reason enough there was for it, because of the church's great loss at that time. When any of the ministers of God are snatched away by death, especially by a violent death, from the service of the church, there is a just cause for great and solemn lamentations: "Devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him."

3 As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women, committed them to prison.

"Bloody Saul! was it not enough for thee to see a single saint destroyed, but wilt thou seek to destroy the whole fraternity and communion of saints?" Behold the fiery zeal of this furious persecutor: he spares neither age nor sex, neither men nor women, neither young nor old, but without respect he hales them to prison. O fury! worse than inhuman, not only to drag men spitefully, but to hale women shamefully to prison. Women in all ages have been exempted from the insults of tyranny, but not always freed from the persecutor's fury. And blessed be God for that masculine courage and constancy which the feeble sex have shown when they have been called forth to bear their testimony for Christ; out of weakness they have been made strong. With what wisdom and courage have they answered their examiners, convicted their accusers, confuted their opposers, kissing the stake, hugging the faggots, embracing the flame! thus can God help the weak things of the world to confound the strong: and teach the foolish to confute the wise.

4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad, went every where preaching the word.

The severe persecution at Jerusalem dispersed the whole body of the church, and scattered both members and teachers thereof, except the apostles. Some went to Damascus, some to Samaria, some to Phœnice, Cyprus, and Antioch. But God overruled this scattering for his church's increasing: he brought good out of evil, light out of darkness, order out of confusion. It is a great and certain truth, that the Holy God would suffer no sort of evil to be, did he not know how to bring some excellent good out of that evil.

5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached unto them.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.

7 For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

Observe here, 1. Amongst the dispersed, who went to Samaria, Philip was one: not Philip the apostle, (for all of them remained at Jerusalem,) but Philip the deacon, who was the second in order after Stephen, among the seven deacons: he comes to Samaria, and preaches there. Observe, 2. The doctrines which he preached; he preached Christ, unto them; that is, christianity, or the christian religion; namely, The doctrine of Christ's incarnation, holy life and death, resurrection and ascension, together with remission of sins through faith in his name. Observe, 3. The success of Philip's doctrine at Samaria; the people with one accord embrace the gospel, Giving heed to the things which he spake: The presence of the Holy Spirit accompanying his ministry, united his hearers' hearts, as well as their ears, to attend diligently to the doctrine of Christ delivered to them. This diligent attention was a blessed preparative to the Samaritans' conversion, seeing faith comes by hearing: yea, they did not only attend to, but acquiesce in all he spake. Note thence, That were there a more reverent attention to the word, there would be more conversions by it than at this day there are. Observe, 4. The external ground and reason of Philip's success in his ministry at Samaria; the miracles which he wrought. These were undeniable evidences of the truth of what he spake, and by which he showed God's authority for what he did and said; he healed diseases, and cast out devils, (called unclean spirits, because they delight in sin, that spiritual uncleanness of the soul,) who cried out with a loud voice, as very loath to leave their lodgings, had they not been constrained to it. The miracles which Christ and his apostle wrought were heaven's broad-seal, to confirm the truth of what they taught: "The people gave heed to what Philip spake, seeing the miracles which he did." Observe, lastly, What joy and rejoicing there was among the Samaritans at their receiving and entertaining of the gospel; There was great joy in that city; not only for the cures wrought upon their bodies, but for the doctrine of reconciliation and salvation preached to their souls. As the gospel is in itself a message of joy and glad tidings, so it fills that soul with joy unspeakable, that cordially receives and entertains it. Joy in the Holy Ghost is one of the sweetest effects of the kingdom of God; that is, the gospel, Rom. xiv. 17. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

9 But there was a certain man called Simon, which before time in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one:

10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

An account is here given of one of Philip's auditors at Samaria, Simon Magus by name, or Simon the sorcerer, a vile man, the blackest Ethiopian that ever baptismal water wet or washed. Notorious for sorcery, for hypocrisy, for final apostasy, and avowed impiety. Ecclesiastical history informs us of the heresies he broached, of the divine honors he assumed, of the statues and images built to him and his strumpet Helen, which lewdly accompanied with him; of an altar erected to him with this blasphemous inscription, Simoni Deo sancto: "To Simon the holy God;" and of his tragical end, by breaking his neck, when attempting to fly up to heaven, because the people would no longer be cheated with his impostures here below. From this example, note, 1. That into the most eminent and populous cities do oft-times enter the greatest and vilest impostors, the most atheistical and diabolical sorcerers: there they lurk and lodge, there they seek to set up and play their prizes. Note, 2. That the vilest impostors and the worst seducers have yet many, very many followers: the silly multitude is soon deluded: To him they all gave heed from the least to the greatest. Note, 3. That such vile deceivers have the confidence to brag, and the deluded multitude have the weakness to believe, that they are very extraordinary persons, and can do extraordinary things. Simon gave it out himself, that he was some great one; and the people cry him up as the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.

12 But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himself believed also : and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

Observe here, 1. How long a time this vile sorcerer, by God's permission, and Satan's power, wrought these lying wonders among the people : "He had of a long time bewitched them with sorceries," ver. 11. Deceivers are not always suddenly detected, and drossy hypocrites are not presently discovered ; but the vizard will drop off sooner or later. Observe, 2. That where the true knowledge of God comes, and the clear light of the gospel shines, there gross impieties and impostures, there cheats and delusions will be found out, detested and abhorred : "When they believed Philip's preaching, they were baptized, both men and women." Where the light shines, satan falls as lightning ; magic vanishes. This Dagon cannot stand before the ark of God : when the people of Ephesus received the gospel ; they soon made a bonfire of their magic books, Acts xix. 19. Observe, 3. The success of the gospel preached by Philip ; the people believed, and were baptized, both men and women. Mark 4. Believed, and then baptized ; these were adult, or grown persons, not infants, and they were heathenish idolators, strangers to the covenant ; and therefore, must believe the gospel, and profess their faith in Christ, before their baptism. Baptism is not to be administered to any that are out of the visible church, till they profess their faith in Christ, and obedience to him. Mark 2. The persons baptized were women as well as men ; "When they believed Philip, they were baptized both men and women." Women under the gospel are capable of the seal of the covenant as well as men. Under the law they were not : then they were circumcised in the men : now they are baptized for themselves : "They were baptized both men and women." Observe, 4. A great and sudden change wrought in Simon himself, by the preaching of Philip : "He believed also, and was baptized." Behold, the sorcerer is become a professor, a believer, a baptized person. The gospel preached may have a common operation upon a soul, where it never produced inward sanctification. All that are by the gospel proselyted are not savingly converted. All are not good fish that are inclosed in the gospel's net ; but some fish, some trash. As there will be wheat and tares on the same field, chaff and corn on the same floor ; so will there be some saints and some sinners in the purest earthly church. Observe, lastly, Upon a bare profession of faith, Simon Magus is baptized. Learn thence, That outward profession justly gains admission into the christian congregation, and gives a person right to external ordinances ; De occultis non judicat ecclesia. "The church's judgment is a judgment of charity, not of certainty ;" of the outward, not of the inward man ; of the life, not of the heart. The faith of Simon Magus was no other than a temporary, historical, yea, hypocritical faith : however, Philip baptizes him upon his making profession of it. An heart hypocrite is no hypocrite (in foro ecclesie) in the sight of the church, though most abominable in the sight of God. Simeon the unsound professor was more odious in the sight of God than Simon the sorcerer.

(No. 32.)

14 ¶ Now, when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John ;

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost.

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them : only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost, Observe here, 1. How the apostles at Jerusalem, hearing the glad tidings of Samaria's conversion by Philip's ministry, thought fit to send down two of the twelve to confirm the new converts in their faith, and to constitute a church there by their apostolical authority. Observe, 2. The persons whom the college of the apostles at Jerusalem thought fit to send to Samaria, Peter and John. Where note, That Peter's being deputed by the rest of the apostles to this service, is an argument that Peter had no primacy or superiority over the rest of the apostles : or, if in this employment there was any sign of primacy, John was sharer in that as well as Peter. "The apostles sent Peter and John." Observe, 3. What the apostles Peter and John did when they came to Samaria. "They prayed and laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." Where, by the Holy Ghost, is not to be understood the sanctifying graces of the Holy Ghost, which the apostles never did, nor could dispense, but the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, the gifts of tongues and prophecy, and a power to work miracles. Those were now conferred on such persons whom the Holy Ghost directed them to lay their hands upon, as persons appointed and chosen to be preachers of the gospel. Where note, That imposition or laying on of hands has been an ancient rite used by the officers of the church, in their solemn dedicating of persons to the service of God and his church.

18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter ; for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

Here Observe, 1. How infinitely mistaken this wretch was in thinking that the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost could be purchased with money. 2. In supposing that the apostles had a power to dispense these gifts, when and where, and to whom they pleased. 3. And that they could enable others to impart this also; which were all very gross conceits. From this deed of Simon's, it is called simony, to seek to buy spiritual gifts or offices with money. Observe, 2. What it was that put Simon upon purchasing this power; doubtless it was covetousness and vain-glory. He hoped to make a penny of this privilege, and to render himself famous among his followers by this prerogative. Learn thence, That cunning and close hypocrites, corrupt and hypocritical professors, do seek to make a gain of godliness, and a merchandise of christianity. Simon had never bid so freely for the Holy Ghost, if he had not expected to receive as freely of others for the Holy Ghost; which he desired to buy, but not to keep; and intended to sell, not to give. Observe, 3. How St. Peter scorns the vile motion made by Simon, and rejects it with the greatest detestation: Thy money perish with thee. Learn thence, That wicked (though gainful) motions are to be scorned and refused by the godly with the greatest detestation and abhorrence. Our hearts can never rise too high in just indignation against sin, and against all temptation unto sin; Thy money perish with thee; thou and thy money perish together. Observe, 4. How plainly St. Peter deals with him; he searches him to the quick, to the heart, sounds the depths of sin; lays open the core of his hypocrisy before his face, and tells him to his teeth, that his heart was rotten and unsound; Thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

The baptismal water had washed his outside, but his inwards were unclean. The heart is the worst part of man till it be mended, and then it is best: where most evil lies; there we must first begin to be good; all will be good, if the heart, which is the seat, the sink and seed-plot of all evil, be made good. The life would not be so bad, if the heart were not worse: all the obliquity of our lives proceeds from the impurity of our hearts and nature, as the muddiness of the stream from the foulness of the fountain.

22 Repent, therefore, of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans, Observe here, 1. The odious character wherewith sin in general, and hypocrisy in particular, is branded, it is bitterness and bondage; it is the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity. Learn thence, 1. That sin is an exceeding bitter thing: it is bitter to God, it provokes him to bitter anger; it was bitter to Christ, it laid him under the bitter wrath of God: it was bitter to the angels, it turned them out of heaven, and banished them from the presence of God evermore; it is bitter to good men, it costs them bitter repentance, and it occasions them bitter chastisements, and it will be bitter, eternally bitter to the wicked and impenitent world. Now the bitterness of sin is not a medicinal and wholesome bitterness, but an intoxicating and stupifying bitterness, a poisonous and a baneful bitterness. Sin's bitter draught is a baneful draught. Learn, 2. That not only bitterness, but bondage attends the service and servants of sin: as sin is the gall of bitterness, so it is the bond of iniquity, and the bondage of sin; it is a shameful and ignominious bondage, a fruitless and unprofitable bondage, a stupifying and insensible bondage, a restless and unwearied bondage, an endless and eternal bondage. Learn, 3. That every soul before conversion is in and under this deplorable bondage; Thou art in the bond of iniquity. Observe, 2. The means prescribed and directed for the soul's delivery 'out of this deplorable bondage; namely, repentance and prayer. "Repent of thy wickedness and pray to God." 1. Repent. Learn thence, That timely and sincere repentance is a special mean, prescribed and appointed by God, for the recovery of the worst of sinners out of this deplorable bondage. 1. Pray. Here note, 1. A wicked man may pray, and ought to pray. As bad as Simon Magus was, St. Peter doth not drive him to despair, but directs him to his duty: Pray to God. Prayer is a part of natural worship, which we owe to God; it is the soul's motion Godward: therefore to say a wicked man should not pray, is to say, he should not turn to God. Note, 2. That all the prayer in the world, without a man's own prayer to God for pardon and remission, will be ineffectual and unavailable to salvation. Simon Magus desired the apostles to pray for him, ver. 24. But St. Peter bids him to pray for himself, as ever he hopes for forgiveness with God: repent of this thy wickedness, and pray to God. Observe, 3. The encouragement given to make use of the means prescribed; namely, a probability of forgiveness and acceptance with God. "Repent and pray, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee." Learn thence, That the vilest and worst of sinners, upon their repentance, accompanied with prayer and supplication unto God, have good ground of encouragement to hope for pardon of sin and acceptance with him. Observe, 4. How St. Peter takes notice of that, of which Simon Magus took least; and that was of the wickedness of his thoughts; "That the thoughts of thy heart may be forgiven thee." Thence learn, That wicked and evil thoughts, lodged and entertained in the heart, ought in a special manner to be repented of, and humbled for, by all that expect forgiveness with God; for sinful thoughts are radical and seminal evils; they were the root of the angels' apostasy and of Adam's apostasy also. A world of sin may be lodged in the thoughts.

26 ¶ And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go towards the south, unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.

27 And he arose and went: and, behold a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship.

28 Was returning, and sitting in his chariot, read Esaias the prophet.

29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?

31 And he said, how can I, except some man shall guide me? and he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

Here we have recorded the remarkable conversion of the eunuch by the preaching of Philip; concerning which several circumstances are to be observed; 1. The author or instrument converting, Philip, who was commanded by the angel in a vision to go to Gaza: but not the common way or ordinary road, but by the way of the desert, a difficult, and perhaps a dangerous way, over mountains and through valleys: Philip knew not whither he was going; but God knew whither, and wherefore he sent him. O Philip! it was worth thy going many steps out of the way, to convert and save a soul: happy for the eunuch that thou wast out of the way, and that he as happily met with thee. Observe, 2. The subject or person converted, 1. An Ethiopian, the most despised of all the Gentiles in the sight of the Jews. Behold! the sanctifying grace of God washing a blackamoor white, and making an Ethiopian clean. 2. A nobleman, a courtier, a treasurer to the queen; yet he concerns himself with religion, and, being a proselyte, travels in his chariot as far as Jerusalem, to worship God in a solemn manner. O how will this example rise up in judgment against our great ones, who have more light, but less heat; more knowledge, but less love! 3. A bookish man, one that delighted in reading, and in reading of the scriptures too, and thus, whilst he was riding in his chariot, to lose no time for gaining the knowledge of his duty. If our courtiers and great men read not at all in their coaches, or if so, plays or romances only, this ignorant Ethiopian lord did better, though he knew not so much as these. He read in his chariot in the prophet Esaias. Observe, 3. The means which God sanctified and blessed for the eunuch's conversion; it was the reading and expounding of the holy scriptures: the word of God, read and preached, is the great instrument in the hand of the Spirit for sinners' illumination, conversion, and salvation: and blessed are they that hear and read the word with attention, affection, and application. Observe, 4. The wonderful modesty and humility of this great man, he thankfully accepts Philip's offer to instruct and teach him: (some would have huffed at it as a rude affront,) but he condescends to learn of one beneath him. Such as are modest and thoroughly humble, are also truly docile and teachable, willing to learn knowledge, although from the mouth of an inferior: "He desired Philip to come up and sit with him."

32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter: and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth.

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

Observe here, 1. The particular text of holy scripture which God directed the eunuch to read in order to his conversion; it was a prophecy of Christ, the promised Messias, recorded in the liii. of Isaiah: "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter, and as a lamb dumb before the shearer". Pointing out the innocency, the meekness and patience of the Lord Jesus Christ, in and under all his satisfactory sufferings for our sins: In the day of his humiliation, particularly in the day of his trial and sentence: his judgment was taken away: that is, his right was taken away by the unrighteous judgment of the Jewish sanhedrim, and no right or justice done him; and who can declare sufficiently the wickedness of that generation, which cut off so innocent a person from the land of the living? This text, Philip informs the eunuch, was truly applicable to the Messias, who was certainly come into the world, and both did and suffered all that was prophesied of him. Here note, How wonderfully the divine providence did work in a concurring tendency towards the eunuch's conversion. God moves his heart to read, to read the scriptures, to read this scripture, which informed him of the sufferings of the Lord Jesus, and sends Philip out of his way to meet him, and he meets him just as he was reading that portion of scripture which most concerned him. He wanted to be informed concerning Christ, and Philip is at his elbow at that very juncture, to instruct him in a most fundamental truth in order to his conversion and salvation.—O the wonderful love and manifold wisdom of God, in finding out ways and methods for bringing home souls to himself! If this providence brings not them under the means, it will bring the means to them. This eunuch wanted the ordinary means of knowledge; but being desirous of a spiritual knowledge, God steps out of the ordinary road to meet him, though an Ethiopian, commonly esteemed the meanest of mankind; and thereby shows, that as there is no respect of persons, so no difference of nations with him; but whoever feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him. In the close Philip preaches a gospel sermon to him, he displays Jesus Christ before him, and by the blessing of God upon the ordinance, saving faith was effectually wrought in the eunuch's soul.

36 And, as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, see, here is water: what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch: and he baptized him.

39 And, when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus; and, passing through, he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cesarea.

Observe here, 1. The eunuch is instructed before baptized, and he desireth baptism of Philip; it was not forced upon him by Philip against his will, "The eunuch said, What hinders me to be baptized?" To drive men to baptism, as they drive beasts to watering, and force christianity upon them against their wills, to send forth booted apostles with javelins in their hands, and crosses on their breasts, as the Romish church doth to dragoon men into christianity, is the way to make hypocrites, but not proselytes; for it is not whole armies that can besiege my reason, nor cannons batter my will. It is conviction, not compulsion, that must induce assent. Observe, 2. The eunuch after instruction desired baptism, See, here is water; let me be baptized. As if he had said, "O Philip! as thou hast instructed me, I pray thee also baptize me. Now that I have received the benefit of thy doctrine, let me not want the comfort of the sacrament." Where the heart is truly touched by the ministry of the word, and the soul thoroughly converted unto God, there is a desire to be partaker of the sacraments. Observe, 3. The condition required of the eunuch before he was baptized, namely, a profession of his faith in the promised Messias; If thou believest, thou mayest be baptized. There is a necessity of faith, to render man a meet partaker of the holy sacrament: if we come to any of the sacraments without faith, we are sure to depart without fruit. Observe, 4. The qualification of that faith which gives a right to the holy sacrament: If thou believest with all thine heart: only that faith gives a right to baptism, and intitles to salvation, which is with all the heart. The eunuch believed with his whole heart, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God. This gave him at once a right to baptism, and a title to heaven.—Observe, 5. The manner of the administration of baptism to the eunuch: he went down into the water and was baptized by Philip: in those hot countries it was usual so to do, and we do not oppose the lawfulness of dipping in some cases, but the necessity of dipping in all cases.

In sacraments, it is not the quantity of the elements, but the significancy of them that ought to be attended to; as in circumcision, it was not the quantity of the flesh cut off; and in the Lord's supper, it is not the quantity of the bread and wine taken down; so in baptism, a few drops of water poured upon me, doth signify and seal, and convey and confirm to me a right and interest in all the benefits of my Saviour's death and resurrection, as fully as if, with Jonah, I were plunged into the main ocean. Observe, 6. What followed upon the eunuch's baptizing and coming out of the water.—1. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip; by the ministry of an angel he was carried out of his sight, that the eunuch might be the more assured of the truth of those things which were taught him by Philip's ministry; and that he was a person sent of God to direct him in the way to true happiness. 2. The eunuch went on his way rejoicing, as well he might; it was the happiest journey he ever took, to meet with Christ and conversion in his way, and heaven and salvation at his journey's end. A converted man hath great cause of rejoicing: the gospel proclaimed, much more heartily embraced, is matter of great joy. Behold the fruit of faith, joy and rejoicing; the eunuch is instructed, believed, is baptized, and goes home rejoicing. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Observe lastly, Philip was found at Azotus, or Ashdod, thirty-four miles from Gaza, so far had the ministry of the angels carried him, and there safely set him down. Learn, How good it is to obey God in the most difficult command. Philip had a hard and tiresome journey from Samaria to Gaza, footing it through a desert, in untrodden paths, and running as fast as the eunuch's chariot, to join himself unto it at the command of God. But now from Gaza to Azotus he has a swifter and easier passage, he rides in an angelical flying chariot. When we attend the execution of God's commands, the holy angels shall attend us, and take care of us, and administer necessary help unto us; like tender nurses, they keep us fast while we live, and bring us home in their arms to our Father's house when we die. Blessed be God for the ministry of his holy angels.

Conversion of St. Paul.

CHAPTER IX.

This chapter relates to us both Saul's cruelty and conversion; and acquaints us with the wonderful method which the infinitely wise God took for his church's deliverance from the fury of persecution; namely, by the conversion (not confusion) of Saul the principal persecutor; whereby the churches had rest and peace. His cruelty is recorded, ver. 1. and 2.

AND Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest,

2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.

Observe here, 1. The lively character of a bloody persecutor: "He breathes threatenings and slaughters against the members of Christ." His very breath smells of fire; threatenings and slaughter, like lightnings and thunder, proceed out of his mouth. Whilst a persecutor hath in him the breath of his own life, he breathes nothing but death against others: nothing will satisfy him but the death and destruction of the members of Christ. An in-fierce and ungovernable zeal soon degenerates into fury and madness. Observe, 2. How restless and unwearied persecutors are in the prosecution of their bloody designs and purposes. Saul was now inquisitor hæretice pravitatis; away he trots to the high priests for a commission to bind heretics, who believed on Jesus, and opposed the traditions of the fathers; and having, as he thought, swept Jerusalem of saints, he resolved next to ransack Damascus, though it was five or six days' journey from Jerusalem: however he spurs on, away he goes through fire and water to revenge his palace on the poor members of Jesus Christ. Learn thence, That persecutors will spare neither purse nor pains, they will sicken and stop at nothing, though never so toilsome and hazardous, so they may glut their malice, and satisfy their revenge upon the poor disciples of Jesus Christ. The high priests needed not to hire Saul to this black work, he both offers himself, and sues for the office: no doubt the high priest and council highly applauded his zeal and forwardness for extirpating heretics, commending the gallantry of his resolution, and the bravery of his mind; and having sealed his commission, sent him away with wishes of success.

3 And, as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

(No. 33.)

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

5 And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

Saul was now onward of his journey to Damascus (the worst journey that ever he intended, but the best that ever he undertook;) a journey most ardently purposed by him, but most mercifully disposed by God. Heaven had designed him for better service and work of another nature; and accordingly he is stopped in his way. Knocked off his horse, a sudden beam of light beyond the brightness of the sun darts upon him, dazzles him, and he hears a voice, saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? that is, me in my members. Whatever is done against christians for any thing that Christ commandeth them, he takes it as done against himself. Such as persecute the saints for their sanctity, persecute Christ himself; and he can no more endure to see them wronged, than himself. As the honor of Christ, the Head, redounds to the members, so the sorrows of the members are resented by the Head. Christ said not thus to his murderers on earth, Why bind ye me? Why buffet ye me? Why scourge ye, and why crucify ye me? but here, when the members suffer, he cries out from heaven, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Lord! thou art more tender of thy body mystical, than thou wast of thy body natural; more sensible of thy members' sufferings than of thine own. Observe, 2. The wonderful power of the heart-changing grace of God. Saul cries out, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Saul is no longer a lion, but a lamb; the wolf that hunted before for his prey, now gently couches like a sheep; hears and obeys the voice of Christ the great Shepherd; and of a persecutor of the church, becomes the great doctor of the Gentiles. Behold! the tare is become wheat; the child of wrath a chosen vessel: the prodigy of nature, the miracle of grace. Lord! who can enough admire and magnify the sovereignty and omnipotent prevalence of divine grace, which could refine and did extract very precious gold from so rough, so coarse, and so base a metal? Conversion is a work of wonder in all men, but a miracle in this man, and extraordinarily strange, and instantaneously sudden; and therefore is by no means to be made the measure and standard of every man's conversion. Shall we think no man converted, unless he be struck down with a light and power immediately from heaven, and be taken with a fit of trembling, and frighted almost out of his wits? How many by the benefit of a good education, others by the blessing of God upon some affliction, and upon calm consideration, without any great terror and amazement, have been visibly changed and converted? The effects and fruits of conversion are very visible in all, but the manner of conversion is not alike in all. Things may be very visible in their effects, which yet are not visible in their cause. If the fruits of our conversion be visible, the certainty of it is unquestionable, and the advantage of it will be unspeakable, although we cannot tell the time when, or the manner how, the Holy Spirit wrought it in us.

6 And he, trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? and the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

Observe here, 1. How easily God can make the fiercest persecutor to quake and tremble; Saul is struck down, but it is to convert him, not confound him? he trembles, but his trembling was in order to rejoicing. It was a favorable, though an affrighting stroke, which struck him down, but with design to raise him up again. Humiliation for sin, in some measure, always goes before a soul's acceptance of Christ, and subjection to him. Observe, 2. How ready and desirous a converted person is to know and do the mind and will of God; Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? He is inquisitive after his duty, and desirous of the knowledge of it. We may sooner find fire without heat, than a true convert without operative grace. It is not, Lord, what wilt thou have me to say? but, what wilt thou have me to do? It is not the talking, but the walking and working person that is the true christian. Observe, 3. God's answer to Saul's inquiry; Arise, go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. Mark, he was going to Damascus before on the devil's errand, now God bids him go; he had better authority for his going thither now, than what he had from the high priest before: he went before for others' destruction; he now goes for his own instruction, in order to salvation: There it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.

Observe here, The testimony or witness of Saul's conversion, to wit, the men that journeyed with him; it is probable that he had a considerable number of officers with him, to bring both men and women that professed christianity bound to Jerusalem. These saw the light shining, and heard a confused noise like thunder, but they saw not Christ himself, as he did, nor heard the articulate voice of Christ that he heard, which spake so powerfully, so convincingly, and so convertingly to his soul. Lord, how many are there that come under thine ordinances, who hear only (like Saul's companions) a confused noise and empty sound! they do not hear the distinct voice of Christ speaking to their hearts with a strong hand, inwardly and effectually, and so remain under the power of unbelief, in an unconverted state.

8 And Saul arose from the earth: and, when his eyes were opened, he saw no man; but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

Observe here, 1. The change of Saul's posture; He arose from the earth. He that fell to the earth a persecutor, rises up a saint. O free mercy and astonishing grace! that the earth upon which he lay did not open her mouth and swallow him up alive: he that had run away from God, and employed his feet in the service of the devil, is once more set upon his feet again. Observe, 2. His blindness and loss of sight: When his eyes were opened, he saw no man. Christ taught him, by his bodily blindness, the blindness of his soul in spiritual things, which till now he was insensible of. As Saul was, so all men naturally are, spiritually blind before regeneration and conversion: true, he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and was a great proficient in human learning, but after his conversion he counted that knowledge no better than blindness, Phil. iii. 7, 8. Observe, 3. His manuduction or leading by the hand into the city; They led him by the hand into Damascus. Who led him? Doubtless his companions that came along with him upon his bloody design from Jerusalem. Here the blind lead the blind; those very hands lead him to Damascus, which should have haled the saints from Damascus to Jerusalem. But, O Saul! thou hadst a better leader than all these, even Christ himself; he led thee by the hand into the city, in order to the completing of thy conversion: now happy Saul! though formerly rebellious, who hast thy Saviour for a leader, thou shalt neither wander nor miscarry." Observe, 4. The duration and continuance of Saul's blindness; He was three days without sight. This was a long night to him who persecuted the children of the day; a just time for him to be in darkness, who so implacably attempted to blow out the light of the gospel: but perhaps no less time would have been sufficient to humble him for his rage and madness against Christ and his members, besides, there are some that think that, in these three days of his continued blindness, he had that rapture into the third heaven, which is mentioned, 2. Cor. xii. 2. But however that be, doubtless in this time his mind was filled with divine contemplations; and that glorious gospel was taught him in three days, which he taught to others all his days. Observe, 5. His abstinence from food; He did neither eat nor drink: he spent those three days, we may believe, in fasting and prayer, and extraordinary humiliation before God, for his former wicked life, and particularly for his violent persecution of the church of Christ: he fasted to make him more fervent in prayer: for fasting prepares for prayer, and gives wings to prayer.

10 ¶ And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias, and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire at the house of Judas, for one called Saul of Tarsus; for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias, coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

Observe here, 1. Though Christ converted Saul himself, yet Ananias his minister must instruct him. By Christ is grace infused, but by his ministers increased: such an honor doth Christ put upon the ministers of the gospel, that he makes use of their endeavours, ordinarily, both for the production and augmentation of grace in the hearts of his people. Oh, the necessity and usefulness of a standing ministry! It is a singular favor to have the mind of God made known to us by men like ourselves: and behold the honor that God puts upon the ministers, in using them as conduit pipes, for conveying the water of life unto us, which he is not pleased to communicate immediately from himself. Observe, 2. What an exact knowledge the Lord has of particular persons and particular places: he tells Ananias in what city Saul was, in Damascus; in what street he was, in the street called Straight, in whose house he was, in the house of Judas. It is matter of consolation, yea, of highest consolation to the children of God, to know and remember that God knows them, that God knows their persons, knows their purposes, knows their performances, knows their place of abode; that he knows who they are, what they do, and where they dwell. It assures them as to their persons, that they shall be accepted; as to their performances, that they shall be rewarded; as to their habitations, that they shall be loved, blessed and protected by him. So dear are the holy servants of God unto him, that he loves the very street in which they lodge, the house in which they dwell; the walls of their habitation are always before him, and he delights continually to look upon them. Let holiness to the Lord then be always writ in fair and legible characters upon the walls of our houses, Zech. xiv. 10. Observe, 2. The course which almighty God takes to remove all fear from Ananias' mind, and to encourage him to go to Saul, according to the direction given him; although he had been such a bloody persecutor, he tells him; that, Behold, he prayeth: as if he, had said, "Though he has been bad, he is not now what he was, he is another man; nay, he is a new man, he is truly and thoroughly converted; and this is the undeniable evidence and testimony of it, that whereas before he persecuted, now he prayeth: Behold he prayeth: Learn hence, That spiritual breath is a good sign of spiritual birth: none of God's children are still-born, they all come crying into the world. The duty of prayer faithfully and perseveringly performed, is a good evidence that a soul is thoroughly converted and brought home by repentance unto God: Behold, Saul prayeth! But did he never pray till now? Yes, no doubt, many a time when he was a strict pharisee, he prayed after a loose and customary manner: but he never prayed so sensibly and feelingly, so spiritually and affectionately, so fervently and perseveringly before, as he did after his conversion: his prayer before, was the cry of the old, now of the new creature; before he prayed with coldness and indifference, now he prays with warmth and fervency, as a person in earnest for his soul's happiness and salvation; therefore Christ brings it with a note of attention and observation: now, Behold, he prayeth.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem;

14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name.

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel:

16 For I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake.

Observe here, 1. Ananias' reluctance and fear to go to Saul, because of his former violent persecution, and present commission; Lord, I have heard of this man, &c. Learn, That such as are very ready and forward for Christ's service, may, upon appearing difficulties, hang back, till they be helped over those difficulties by the helping hand of Christ. Thus it was with Ananias; Behold, says he, here am I Lord, ver. 10. to show his readiness to run on any errand that Christ would send him: but when he came to understand his message, he was affrighted, and began to draw back: therefore the Lord graciously condescends to remove the stumbling-block that lay in the way of the servant's obedience. Fear not; as if Christ had said, "Go thy way, he is not what he was, he is another man; yea, he is a new man." Observe, 2. The honorable title which Christ puts upon Saul, He is a chosen vessel; that is, a person chosen of God to convey the divine treasure of the gospel, not only to Jews, but Gentiles also, even to the greatest and highest among them: "He is a chosen vessel, to bear my name before the Gentiles and kings." Where note, 1. The term of usefulness: he is a vessel. Now a vessel is not a natural but an artificial instrument. No man is born, but made a minister of the gospel. Vessels are not of equal capacity, some are greater, others less; all ministers have not alike endowments, nor are they equally fitted for the sacred employment. Again, vessels are receptive instruments; they must take in before they can give out. What the ministers of the gospel have received of the Lord, that they deliver to their people; they give out what God gives in. Finally, vessels are for effusion, as well as for reception: they let out as well as take in; yea, therefore take in, that they may let out; therefore have the ministers of Christ a treasure of divine knowledge in themselves, that they may communicate and impart it to others. And it is not impaired by imparting, but like the oil in the widow's vessel, increased by pouring out. A minister, by communicating the treasure of his knowledge, enriches others without impoverishing himself. Note, 2. The term of excellency, He is a chosen vessel, chosen to preach Christ, chosen to suffer for Christ; a vessel chosen to bear the divine treasure of the gospel both to Jews and Gentiles. Lord! what honor dost thou put upon thy ministers in making them vessels of honor fit for their master's use and the family's service! If I may not be a vessel of gold or silver, let me be a vessel of wood or stone, so I may be a vessel unto honor, a successful instrument in thy hand, for thy glory, and the church's good.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and, putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, (even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest,) hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales : and he received sight forthwith, and he arose, and was baptized :

19 And when he had received meat he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

Observe here, 1. Ananias; though no apostle, no deacon, nor minister, that we read of, but an ordinary and private christian only, yet he has power to heal Saul of his blindness, and to confer the Holy Ghost : "Receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." If so, undoubtedly he had an extraordinary warrant for this extraordinary work; for none but the apostles had power to confer the Holy Ghost. No ordinary person ought to undertake any part of the ministerial functions without an extraordinary call and commission. Observe, 2. The title given by Ananias to Saul, Brother Saul; they were now brethren by faith and profession, owning the same God, united to the same Saviour, animated by the same Spirit, encouraged by the same promises, partakers of the same hope, and heirs of the same glory. As the scripture speaks of a brotherhood betwixt Christ and believers. He is not ashamed to call them brethren; so it speaks of a brotherhood betwixt believers themselves, Love the brotherhood; that is, the whole fraternity and society of christians, who are sanguine Christi conglutinati, cemented by the blood of Christ, and united by the bond of love. Observe, 3. How this converted person, Saul, takes upon him the badge of christianity by baptism; He arose, and was baptized.—Listing himself thereby a soldier under Christ's exalted banner, and entering himself a member of that church which heretofore he had made havoc of. Observe, 4. The prudent care which Saul takes of his health, by giving nature its necessary refreshment: He received meat and was strengthened. Doubtless his body was much weakened and enfeebled, by his long journey partly, but by his consternation, fear, and grief especially, as also by his humiliation, watchings, fasting and prayer: it was therefore his duty to refresh nature, and to strengthen himself for the service of his great Master, wherever he should please to send him. Whilst we are in the body, there is a debt of care which we owe to the body: meat and drink are the supports of life, under the influence of the divine blessing; and all superstitious abstinence from food is no better than will-worship. Observe lastly, Saul is no sooner changed himself, but he changeth his company and acquaintance. He no longer associates with the chief priest and rulers of the synagogues, but with the followers of Jesus, ver. 19. "Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus." Men who cunningly conceal their inclinations, may yet be known by their constant companions. Saul was now a companion of them that feared God, and kept his commandments. The disciples at Damascus, whom he came to destroy, are now become his delight; "He continued certain days with the disciples."

20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogue, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?

22 But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.

23 ¶ And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him:

24 But their laying await was known of Saul: and they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

Here we have an account of St. Paul's entrance upon his ministerial office in preaching the gospel; "Straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues." Where note, 1. The time of his preaching, Straightway: he fell presently to his Master's work, not consulting flesh and blood about the difficulties and dangers that might attend it; but performs his duty with such zeal and immediate application, as became a person of his holy character and profession. Note, 2. The place where he preached. In the Jewish synagogues: he was afterwards indeed the apostle of the Gentiles, but according to Christ's command he first preached the word of life to the Jews, to convert some, and to leave others without excuse: after which he turned from them unto the Gentiles, according to Acts xiii. 46. "It was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken to you; but because you put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo we turn to the Gentiles." Note, 3. The doctrine he preached; That Jesus was the Son of God, the true, promised and expected Messiah; and that all the prophecies and predictions of the prophets concerning the Messiah, were exactly fulfilled in his person. Note, 4. The effect of his preaching: 1. Some of his auditors were amazed, admiring that so pestilent a persecutor was become a powerful preacher, These glorified God in him. 2. Others were confuted, yea, confounded, being unable to withstand the force and dint of his argument, by which he proved, that this is the very Christ. Note, 5. The hazard which the apostles ran in preaching the gospel at Damascus; his enemies, who were not able to resist the wisdom and spirit by which he spake, took counsel to kill him, and in order to it, watched the gates of the city day and night, there being in their apprehensions no possibility of his escaping. Note, 6. The manner and means of his deliverance: some christians who dwelt at Damascus, let him down in a basket by the wall, and so he escaped the hands of his bloody enemies. The wisdom of God is never at a loss to find out ways and means, either ordinary or extraordinary, for the deliverance of his servants, when their deliverance makes most for his own glory, and the gospel's advantage. God had much work for Paul to do; and till he had finished his work, his enemies could not take him off with all their combined power and malice.

26 And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him; and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him.

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.

Here we have an account of the second place which Paul exercised his ministry in; namely, Jerusalem. Having escaped with his life at Damascus, he comes to Jerusalem, and attempts to join himself to the disciples there, who were all afraid of him, knowing how bloody a persecutor he had been. The conversion of a persecutor is so rare and seldom heard of, that it puts the largest charity hard to it, to believe the verity and reality of such a person's conversion unto God. The disciples, who had formerly felt the effects of Saul's persecuting rage and fury, might justly be afraid of taking him into intimate fellowship and communion with the church. Observe, next, How Barnabas was stirred up by the Spirit of God to present Saul to the church, and free their minds of all fears and jealousies which they had entertained concerning him; and this he doth by a threefold argument: 1. Because he had seen Jesus Christ in the way, as he went to persecute the saints at Damascus. 2. Because the Lord had spoken to him with a strong hand, and wrought a mighty change in him, and upon him; the persecutor being now become a great professor. Because he was not only become a professor, but a preacher of that gospel he had persecuted, and this boldly and publicly, both at Damascus and in Arabia; proving undeniably that Jesus was the Christ, and the true Messiah. This testimony of Barnabas was full and satisfactory, both to the church at Jerusalem, and also to Peter, James, and John, who gave Paul the right hand of fellowship, and he went with him to the work. Observe, lastly, How the enemies of the gospel conspire against Paul's life here at Jerusalem, as they did before at Damascus; for preaching Christ, and disputing with the Grecians in defence of the gospel of Christ, they lay siege for his life. Learn thence, That always opposition, and often persecution, is the evil ghost that hunts the preachers and preaching of the gospel wherever it goes. To preach the word convincingly, brings the ill-will of an evil world infallibly upon the head of the preacher. But why did these men rather seek to kill Paul than Peter, James, or Barnabas? Answer, Because he was formerly one of their own company, of their own college; a persecutor like themselves, and a persecutor with themselves. This enraged them; they looked not upon him as an apostle, but as an apostate; one that had revolted from them, a renegade, and as such they meditate his destruction night and day; inasmuch, that it is probable, that never were so many sufferings heaped upon the head of any minister of the gospel throughout the world, as upon St. Paul. (see them reckoned up, 2 Cor. xi. 23. &c.) partly through the hatred of the Jews, and partly through the fury of the blind Gentiles; yet the Lord delivered him out of all. Till his work was done, and his race run, and he had finished the course of his ministry, neither the malice of men, nor the rage of devils, could take him off. Blessed be God, our times are in his hands, not in our enemies, nor yet in our own.

31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified; and, walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

That is, "After Saul's miraculous conversion, and after he was sent away, and departed from those parts, where the Jews, his old companions in persecution, could not endure his presence, he having been just before, as zealous a persecutor as themselves: then the churches planted by Philip and others throughout Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, had much rest and peace, and were greatly edified in knowledge and faith, in holiness and love; and the graces and comforts of the holy Spirit daily increasing in them, the number of believers daily multiplied." Learn thence, That after the persecution and wearisome troubles of the church, God has his times for their peace and rest. God sends his church sun-shine after showers, a calm after a storm, health after an hectic, and a Canaan's rest after a wilderness journey. Learn, 2. That it is the church's duty to improve her peace and rest for her establishment and increase in all the graces and comforts of the holy Spirit. Learn, 3. That it is a very great blessing to have the churches of God multiplied, and their multiplication is the happy fruit and consequent of their having peace; Then had the churches rest, were edified, and multiplied.

32 ¶ And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.

23 And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy.

34 And Peter said unto him, Eneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole; arise and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

35 And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord.

The Holy Ghost now leaves the relation of St. Paul's life and actions for the present, and returns to give a farther account of St. Peter, what he said, what he did, and what he suffered, particularly at Lydda, at Joppa, and Cesarea: at Lydda he healed Eneas, at Joppa he raised Dorcas, and at Cesarea he preached the gospel to the Gentiles. Observe, 1. What this great apostle St. Peter did at Lydda: he there in the name, that is, by the power of Christ, healed Eneas, who lay sick of the palsy, and had kept his bed eight years. Where note, The difficulty of the cure, the manner of the cure, and the effects of the cure. Note, 1. The difficulty of the cure; the disease was a dead-palsy, which had taken away the use of his limbs, and made him bed-ridden for eight years: all this is recorded, to show the difficulty of the cure, and the greatness of the miracle: Onnipotenti medico nullus insanabilis occurrit morbus; "To such an Almighty Physician, as the great God is, no disease is found incurable." Note, 2. The manner of the cure: St. Peter acts in Christ's name, not his own; and lets the lame man know whom he should own for his benefactor, Christ, himself: the apostle was but the instrument in Christ's hand; and that the cure was perfectly miraculous, appears by this: the cripple was cured immediately, and cured perfectly; it was a present cure, ver. 34. And he arose immediately. The instantaneous manner of the cure shows it to be miraculous, and by divine power; for nature and art act in time and by degrees, bringing nothing to perfection on a sudden: whereas this cure was wrought in a moment, his strength is restored in an instant. It was also a perfect cure, and as an evidence of it, he takes up his bed. This was to show that he was fully recovered. Note, 3. The effects of this cure: it had such an influence upon the spectators of this miracle, that all that dwell at Lydda and Saron, when they saw it, turned to the Lord, ver. 35. That is, they embraced the faith, seeing this cripple so strangely, so suddenly, and so perfectly cured.

36 ¶ Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation, is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom, when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter arose, and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber; and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made while she was yet with them.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down and prayed; and turning him to the body, said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up; and, when he had called the saints and widows, he presented her alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

This chapter concludes with a relation of a second miracle wrought by St. Peter at Joppa, in raising dead Dorcas to life. Where note, 1. The person upon whom this miracle was wrought, Dorcas, a woman rich in good works, full of alms-deeds; yet neither her piety towards God, nor her liberality to the poor could preserve her either from death or from diseases. A dear disciple may be diseased, and die; Behold he whom thou lovest is sick, John xi. 3. yea, and dead too. Strength of grace, and deariness of respect, even from Christ himself, cannot prevail against diseases. Good Dorcas here lies dead, with her body washed, not only to fit her for burial, but especially to show their hope of the resurrection. Note, 2. The doleful lamentation made by the widows for the loss of this good woman, who used to clothe the naked with the labor of her hands: she did not spend her time in making rich apparel for herself, but in making garments for the poor; and it seems she had good store of them ready made by her for the poor's use, as their necessities did require; They showed the coats and garments which Dorcas had made; the undoubted tokens and evidences of her pious charity. Learn hence, That the best relics of saints that can remain in honor of them when departed, are acts of piety towards God and of charity to the poor. Note, 3. The manner of St. Peter's working this miracle. 1. He puts them all out of the room where the dead lay; partly to prevent ostentation and vain-glory; partly to prevent disturbance by their immoderate mourning; and partly to prevent interruption in the exercises of prayer, which he was now about to perform. 2. He kneeled down; which recommends to us that reverential posture in our prayers to the great God of kneeling before him. 3. He prayed; thereby owning and acknowledging, that the power of raising her was from God, not from himself. Note, lastly, The effect of this miracle: many believed in the Lord: she was raised more for the good of others than her own; for her restoring to natural life was the occasion of raising many to a life of faith; upon the sight of this famous miracle performed by St. Peter, many believed in the Lord.

CHAPTER X.

This chapter acquaints us with the first overtures which the apostles made to preach the gospel to the Gentiles: according to Christ's command, they began at Jerusalem, and preached to the Jews throughout Judea, Samaria, and Galilee; but now the time was come, for beating down and laying flat the partition wall betwixt Jew and Gentile, which accordingly is done in this chapter by St. Peter's preaching to Cornelius, who was the first fruits of the Gentiles' conversion to christianity.

THERE was a certain man in Cesarea, called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band.

2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always:

Observe here, 1. The person described to whom St. Peter is sent to preach the gospel: by his name, Cornelius; by his occupation, a soldier; by his religion a proselyte or converted Gentile, of which there were two sorts; some were proselytes of the covenant, that is, such Gentiles as submitted themselves to circumcision, and the whole Mosaiical pedagogy: these were counted as Jews, and freely conversed with as such. Others were called proselytes of the gate; these were not circumcised, nor did they conform to the Mosaiic rites, but were obliged only to observe the seven precepts of Noah; namely, to worship the true God, and not idols; to abstain from blood, from fornication, from robbery, to administer justice impartially, and to do as they would be done unto. Such a proselyte as this the Jews would not converse with, but counted unclean, being a Gentile, and such an one was this Cornelius; but though a Gentile, though a soldier, though a commissioned officer, yet a pious charitable, good man. In all nations, in all places, of all employments, God has a number of holy and gracious persons to honor him in the world, according to their present measure of light received from him. Observe, 2. The evidence which Cornelius gave of his religious fearing God; He feared God with all his house, he gave much alms, and prayed to God always. Cornelius was therefore really, because relatively, religious: he obligeth his family to fear God as well as himself, and together with himself, like Abraham, He commanded his household after him to keep the way of the Lord, Gen. xviii. 19. And thus the blessing of Abraham came upon this Gentile Cornelius. He feared

God with all his house, and his charity was as eminent as his piety: He gave much alms to the people: that is, to the people of the Jews, to whom alms was not unclean, though given by an heathen person. It is further added, That He prayed to God always; he prayed to the true God not to idols; and he prayed to God always: that is, at every fitting season, and convenient opportunity for the duty. We are said in scripture to do a thing continually, when we do it seasonably. Thus to pray always, to pray evermore, to pray without ceasing, is, first to keep the heart continually, as much as may be, in a praying frame and disposition; and, 2dly, To embrace the proper seasons and opportunities for prayer. The beauty of religion lies much in the harmonious performance of the duties of it; when one duty doth not interfere with another, but we prudently find time for all. Thus did Cornelius here; He feared God with all his house, gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always.

3 He saw in a vision evidently, about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

Observe here, 1. The extraordinary favor afforded to Cornelius; namely, the vision of an holy angel. This devout man did not seek the face of God in vain; God sends him first an angel to comfort him, then an apostle, to instruct him: He saw in a vision an angel of God. Observe, 2. The effect which the sight of the angel had upon Cornelius; He was afraid. Learn hence, That whilst our souls inhabit these mortal and sinful bodies, the appearance of angels is terrible and affrighting to them, and cannot be otherwise; partly upon a natural, and partly upon a moral account: upon a natural account, because the dread of spirits strikes our natural spirits, they shrink and tremble at the approach of spirits; both the spirits of men and beasts quail at it; witness the ass, Numb. xxii. 26. that Balaam rode upon: and also upon a moral account, because of our consciousness of guilt: wherever there is guilt, there will be a fear upon an extraordinary appearance of God to us, though it be mediately by an angel. Observe, 3. The joyful message which the angel brings to Cornelius; that his prayers and his alms were come up for a memorial before God. Where note, That as God records all the prayers of his people, so he books all the acts of mercy which any of them at any time do exercise and show unto his members: he takes notice of the person, of the action, of the time when, of the manner how, of the measure and degree, how much: if it be but a cup of water, yea, a cup of cold water, given in love to Christ in his members, it shall not be forgotten, but recorded and rewarded.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:

6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea-side:

he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.

Observe here, 1. That although God sent an angel to Cornelius, to acquaint him with his will; yet the angel was to direct him to the apostle, who was to instruct him in the faith. This, no doubt, God did, to put honor upon the ministers and ministry of the gospel; as also to let us understand and know, that we are not to expect extraordinary ways of teaching, when God affords us the use of ordinary means. "Send to Joppa, and call for Peter, he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." Observe, 2. What an exact knowledge Almighty God has of particular persons, and particular places; he tells Cornelius, by the angel, in what town Peter was, in Joppa; in whose house he lodged, in Simon the tanner's; in what part of the town the house stood, by the sea-side. It is matter of consolation, yea, of great consolation to the people of God, to know and remember that God knows them; he knows their persons, their purposes, their performances, their places of abode; he knows who they are, what they do, and where they dwell. So dear are the holy servants of God unto him, that he loves the very street in which they lodge, the house in which they dwell, the walls of their habitation are continually before him, and he delights perpetually to look upon them: O let holiness to the Lord be writ in legible characters upon the walls of our houses? Zech. vii. 20. Then will God dwell where we dwell, and the beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius, was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually.

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the house-top to pray about the sixth hour.

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten; but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

11 And he saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill and eat.

14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord: for

I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again, the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call thou not common.

16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

Observe here, 2. That as Cornelius had a vision from God, to encourage him to send for Peter, so the apostle had likewise a vision to encourage him to go to Cornelius. In which, note, 1. The time when he had this vision, it was at the sixth hour, or high noon; which was one of the three hours of prayer: when we are upon our knees in prayer, then is the time for receiving gracious manifestations from God. Note, 2. The place where he had this vision; when at prayer upon the house-top. The Jewish houses being flat roofed, with battlements upon them, Peter went up to the house-top to pray, as a place of privacy and retirement, free from noise and distraction; as also to take advantage of the place for divine contemplation, and perhaps to look towards the temple, which was formerly a type of Christ. It teaches us that fitting places, as well as fitting seasons for prayer, are to be sought out and improved by us: Peter went up upon the house to pray. Note, 3. The frame wherein St. Peter was as to his body, when he had this vision; namely, exceeding hungry: God ordered it so, to fit him the more for this vision of dainty meat. O taste and see how gracious the Lord is in sending down a dish of dainties from heaven to his hungry children, that are praying to him here on earth! Note, 4. The manner how the vision was made to St. Peter: it was in the way of divine rapture or ecstasy; he fell into a trance; his soul was as it were abstracted out of the body, and absent from it; that is, drawn off from the perception of all earthly and sensible objects, and enabled unto a more entire attendance upon spiritual and heavenly matters and mysteries: to be sure it made him forget his dinner, and filled him with divine consolation; a soul fed and filled with divine dainties doth sometimes forget bodily hunger: we read no more of St. Peter's sharp hunger after this divine entertainment. Note, 5. The division itself, or what was represented to St. Peter, first to his eye, then to his ear; to his eye first, He saw heaven opened, ver. 11. teaching, that although heaven had been shut to the children of men by the sin of the first Adam, yet now it was opened by the grace of the second Adam to all believers, both Jews and Gentiles. Next, he saw a great vessel descending like a large sheet, with all sorts of meats in it, both clean and unclean; and he hears a voice from God, giving him a commission, though he was a Jew, to feed freely without distinction of clean and unclean; signifying to him thereby, that he might indifferently converse with Gentiles as well as Jews, and preach the gospel to one as well as the other. Note, lastly, How St. Peter's Jewish principles made him startle at this large commission, looking upon the command as unlawful and impious, ver. 14. "Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean." But mark the divine direction: "What God hath cleansed, that call thou not common." His mistake was rectified by God, who gave him by this vision a clear intimation, that the distinction of meats was now taken away, and the difference between nation and nation was now removed by the death of Christ; and consequently, that he might go and preach the gospel to Cornelius, a Gentile, without scruple or doubtfulness; the partition wall betwixt Jew and Gentile being now broken down. Learn hence, That the doctrine of the conversion of the Gentiles came first from heaven, was revealed and made known by God himself, who has graciously declared, Gal. iii. 28. "That there is neither Jew nor Greek; neither bond nor free, neither male nor female. For we are all one in Christ Jesus." Thanks be to God, "that the blessing of Abraham is come upon us, through Jesus Christ."

17 Now, while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate, 18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

19 While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20 Arise, therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing; for I have sent them.

Here note, 1. How St. Peter sets himself to meditate upon what he had seen and heard from God: He pondered with himself what this vision, which he had seen, should mean.—Whatever passes from God to man, either by the eye, or through the ear, ought to be the subject of our deepest meditation. We are to contemplate the excellencies and perfections which are in the word and works of God with an intellectual eye, and to dwell upon them in our serious thoughts. Note, 2. The care which the Holy Spirit took to resolve satisfactorily the inward doubtings and reasonings of St. Peter's mind concerning this matter: I have sent them, says the holy Spirit; therefore arise and go down, nothing doubting.—Where observe, Both the divinity and personality of the Holy Ghost: he that knows the thoughts, the doubtings and reasonings of man's heart, as the Holy Ghost here did St. Peter's, is truly and really God: and he that commands and forbids, is really person. So doth the Holy Spirit here; he commands St. Peter to go to Cornelius, and forbids his doubting of the lawfulness or success of his journey: Go with them, doubting nothing, for I have sent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek; what is the cause wherefore ye are come?

22 And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee.
(No. 33.)

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

24 And the morrow after they entered into Cesarea: And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.

25 And, as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up: I myself also am a man.

27 And, as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or to come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore, for what intent ye have sent for me?

Observe here, 1. The messengers whom Cornelius sent to St. Peter, two of his household servants, and a devout soldier: All soldiers are not rude; but some are religious. Behold a devout soldier under a devout captain, and two household servants, whom their master's example had rendered humble and modest. Observe, 2. The just and laudable, not false and flattering character, which they gave of their master Cornelius: "That he was a just man, one that feared God, and one of good report among all the nation of the Jews." It is both the duty and commendation of servants, to give to their masters due honor: and, when called to it, their deserved character. Observe, 3. How St. Peter's doubts being resolved, he disputes no further, delays no longer, but hastens immediately to Cornelius: when once God's command is plain, we must not dispute, but dispatch; we must no longer object, but obey. Observe, 4. The reverence given by Cornelius to St. Peter; he fell down at his feet and worshipped him. It seems to be more than a civil reverence which he gave him: it looks as if Cornelius took him for an angel in human shape, or a person sent immediately from heaven to him; and accordingly he prostrates himself before the apostle: but St. Peter would by no means receive any undue honor or respect from him, assuring him, That he was but a man, and God's messenger sent unto him. Whatever Peter's pretended successor challenges as his due, of reverence and homage, St. Peter himself would not suffer Cornelius to lie at his feet, much less to kiss his feet: the ambassador would not run away with the honor which belonged to the prince that sent him. Observe, 5. How St. Peter acquaints Cornelius, that the partition wall betwixt the Jews and Gentiles, which was erected and set up by God's command, was now by the same authority pulled down and removed; and that no man is now unclean by any ceremonial uncleanness, because he is not circumcised: and consequently, that Cornelius, though of another nation, might converse with, and be conversed with as freely as if born a Jew. Since the coming of Christ, no person or nation is legally or ceremonially unclean; but every nation, or every person, by nature, morally unclean.

30 And Cornelius said, four days ago I was fasting until this hour, and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house; and behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing, 31 And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon whose surname is Peter. He is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner, by the sea-side; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

Observe here, 1. Cornelius relates the occasion of his sending for St. Peter, and the warrant he had for so doing; he declares that as he was fasting and praying in his family, he had a vision, in which an angel directed him to send for the apostle. Where note, That Cornelius doth not talk of his fasting, praying, and alms giving, by way of ostentation, to boast of himself, but only to give satisfaction to St. Peter; that he had certain advice from heaven for what he did in sending for him. Observe, 2. The readiness of Cornelius' obedience in sending for St. Peter: Immediately therefore I sent to thee. Joppa from Cesarea is computed to be about forty miles; but no sooner did Cornelius receive the commandment, but without delay he put it in execution, and sent men to Joppa. When our call is clear, our obedience must be speedy. Observe, 3. The kind reception which Cornelius gives St. Peter: Thou hast well done that thou art come: he doth not only approve of the apostle's coming, but thanks him for it. Observe, 4. The preparation and readiness of Cornelius and his friends, to hear and receive the word of God from St. Peter's mouth: We are all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. Where note, 1. He desires the same holy doctrine which the apostle came to preach, may be delivered to his family, his friends and his kinsfolk, as well as himself. A good man would not go to heaven alone; but is desirous of the instruction, conversion, and salvation of others as well as of himself We are all here. Note, 2. The place of God's pure worship is the place of his special presence; We are all here present before God. Note, 3. The end for which they were now come into the presence of God; it was to hear what God should speak, yea, to hear all things which God should command the apostle to speak: intimating to us, that as St. Peter himself was, so all the ministers of Christ are confined within their commission, and must only speak what God commands; neither are hearers bound to receive any thing else. Wo unto us, if when God sends us of his errand, we tell our own tale: the word is the counsel of God; now it is the counsel of God only, and the whole counsel of God also, that we are to declare, and our people are to hear; We are all present before God, to hear all things that are commanded us before God.

34 ¶ Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

35 But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

As if the apostle had said, "I now very plainly perceive, that the partition-wall is broken down, and that national prerogatives, or personal excellencies, find no acceptance with God: but that any man, be he of what nation or family soever, if he feareth God, and worketh righteousness, shall find acceptance with him." Observe here, 1. That no external qualifications, personal privileges and prerogatives, will procure favor and acceptance with God, who neither receives nor rejects men barely for outward respects; I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. Observe, 2. The true character of a religious man: he is one that feareth God and worketh righteousness; that is, a strict observer of the duties of both tables, of piety towards God, and of justice and charity towards man; and the phrase of working righteousness, implies diligence, and delight, and perseverance in the ways and works of righteousness. Observe, 3. The privilege of such a religious and truly righteous man: He is accepted with God. Thence learn, That both the person fearing God, and his works of righteousness are accepted with him, of any nation under heaven, of any calling, sex or condition whatsoever; In every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: he is Lord of all;

37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached.

38 Now God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

39 And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree;

40 Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly,

41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead, 42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God, to be the judge of quick and dead.

43 To him, give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

Observe here, 1. The antiquity of the gospel, or of the doctrine of reconciliation by Jesus Christ; it was preached to the patriarchs, and by the prophets to the ancient Israelites: "The word which God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ," Thence learn, That there is but one way to salvation, namely, reconciliation with God through the blood of Christ; and this was declared to the children of Israel, as well as unto us; to them more darkly, to us more clearly. They went to heaven then the same way that believers do now, namely, by faith in the Lamb of God, who was to be slain; we by faith in him as already slain. Observe, 2. The dignifying title given to Christ: He is Lord of all. He is Lord of all, as God together with the Father and the Holy Ghost: 'the absolute and supreme Lord of the whole creation, and unto whom all creatures are subject. 2. He is Lord of all, as Mediator, Lord of all men, whether Jews or Gentiles; he is Lord of his church, Lord over saints and sinners. Hypocrites and sincere christians, all his subjects by obligation, some by voluntary consent, and by an absolute obedience unto his commands. Observe, 3. The argument by which the apostle proveth Christ to be Lord of all: as Mediator, namely, from his divine unction, ver. 38. "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth, with the Holy Ghost, and with power;" that is, endued the human nature of Christ with the fulness of the graces of his holy Spirit, and consecrated him to the work and office of a Mediator. Observe, 4. How Christ faithfully executed this office which he was anointed to. He went about doing good, all the time he was on earth, healing diseases, and casting out of devils: for God was with him, in the fulness of the Deity, as he was his eternal Son; and in power, grace, and favor, as he was man, and Mediator. Here note, 1. The great work and business of our Saviour's life; it was to do good, namely, to the souls and bodies of men, to promote the temporal happiness of the one, the spiritual and eternal happiness of the other. Note, 2. Our Saviour's diligence and indefatigable industry in this work of doing good; he made it the great business and constant employment of his life: He went about doing good; that is, seeking out all opportunities of being useful and beneficial to mankind. Observe, 5. The evidence and testimony which the apostle produces for all that he affirmed concerning Christ; "We are witnesses of all things which he did in the land of Judea and in Jerusalem." Christ took the twelve apostles as if it were into his family, that by their familiar converse and constant conversation with him, they might be enabled to testify of him: 1. Touching his death, that he was slain and hanged on a tree; dying an ignominious and shameful, as well as a dolorous and painful death. 2. Concerning his resurrection, that God raised him from the dead; though he was laid, he was not lost in the dust; God would not suffer the beloved of his soul to rot in the grave, but raised him up and shewed him openly. And, 3. As to the final judgment, the apostles were commanded to preach and testify to the people, that Jesus Christ was ordained of God to be the judge of both quick and dead; that is, of all that are in their graves, and of all that shall be found alive at his coming.

44 ¶ While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God, Then answered Peter.

47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

Observe here, 1. What a miraculous power of the Holy Ghost did accompany St. Peter's ministry at this time, thereby giving him an assurance of the future conversion of the Gentiles, to the great wonder and astonishment of the Jews, who thought the promise of sending down the Holy Ghost belonged only to the house of Israel. Accordingly, while Peter was thus preaching to Cornelius and his family, the Holy Ghost by his wonderful gift of tongues, descended on them, though Gentiles; at which the Jews marvelled. Observe, 2. The conclusion which the apostle draws from this; forasmuch as the Gentiles were baptized with the Holy Ghost, he infers, that they ought to be baptized with water; and the argument runs thus: "They that have the grace signified by, and promised in baptism, have an undoubted right to baptism, the seal of the promise; but these Gentiles have the grace signified by and promised in baptism; they have the inward part, or thing signified; why then should the outward sign be denied them? he that has the inheritance, may claim the writings, the seals, &c. belonging to the inheritance. Observe, 3. The apostle without scruple baptized these Gentile converts; Then commanded he them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus: that is, he either baptized them himself, or gave commandment to others to do it; and though only the name of the Lord Jesus be mentioned, yet this does not imply, but that they were baptized according to our Saviour's prescription, Mat. xxviii. In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. This done, they desired him to stay some days with them, that they might be farther instructed, confirmed, and comforted by his ministry.

CHAPTER XI.

This chapter gives us an account, how the promise of Jews and Gentiles becoming one flock, and enfolded in one church, received its accomplishment: this was performed by the ministry of St. Peter, who was the first that opened the door of faith to the Gentiles; of which he gives a satisfactory account in this chapter, to the objections made by the Jews against him for the same.

AND the apostles and brethren that were in Judea, heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him.

3 Saying, thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

Observe here, 1. How the Jews apprehending that Christ and his grace had been only promised and confined to themselves, the call and conversion of the Gentiles became a dreadful stumbling-block unto them, even to the believing as well as to the unbelieving Jews. Hereupon observe, 2. How they contended with Peter for eating and conversing with the Gentiles and especially for admitting them into the gospel-communion without circumcision: whereas, although God forbade marriages with the Gentiles, he never forbade commerce and conversation with them: no conversation with the Gentiles, in order to the gaining of the Gentiles unto God, was ever forbidden by God; but only such as might withdraw the Jews from God, and corrupt them by idolatry.

4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying,

5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, a certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners: and it came even to me.

6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter: slay and eat.

8 But I said, not so, Lord; for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, what God hath cleansed, that call thou not common.

10 And this was done three times; and all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cesarea unto me.

12 And the Spirit bade me go with them nothing doubting. Moreover, these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house:

13 And he showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14 Who shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water: but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

17 Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I that I could withstand God?

18 When they heard these things they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

Observe here, 1. How far St. Peter was from pretending a superiority over the rest of the apostles; he did by no means think himself so far above them, as to disdain to render an account of his actions to them, but with great sincerity and humility rehearsed and related the whole matter of fact, to their entire and joint satisfaction. Observe, 2. How he acquaints the apostles with the vision he had seen; in which he was commanded to make no distinction of clean or unclean: because there was no natural turpitude in any kind of meat, save only as it was prohibited by God; and that God, who having made the law about difference of meats, had now abrogated it, and made all meats clean, and free to be eaten. Observe, 3. How he gives them the interpretation of this vision, and acquaints them with the end for which this vision was designed; namely, not so much to reveal to him the lawfulness of eating all sorts of meats, as to acquaint him with his liberty and duty to converse with and preach the gospel to the Gentiles; whom he was no longer to look upon as unclean, though they were not circumcised; but as "heirs and fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." Observe lastly, The conclusion which St. Peter drew from these premises: "Seeing God hath made the Gentiles equal in grace with the believing Jews; seeing the Holy Ghost came down upon them in the same manner, and with the same effects as he did upon us apostles, I could not reasonably deny them baptism, and by baptism admission into the gospel-church; for having the grace signified by baptism, they ought to have baptism, the seal of that grace; they that have the inward, are not to be denied the outward baptism: and they that were baptized with the Holy Ghost (as Cornelius and his family were) might and ought to be baptized with water, as Cornelius was: for had I denied them church communion for want of the ceremony of circumcision, it had certainly been a downright resistance of, and disobedience against God." Thence learn, that it is a downright opposition to the will of God, to shut them out of the church, and to debar them from the communion of it, who have received the sanctifying graces of God's Holy Spirit; but differ from us in external rites and ceremonies only.

19 ¶ Now they which were scattered abroad, upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were came to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.
(No. 33.)

21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22 Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

23 Who when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

Observe here, 1. That Antioch becomes the Jerusalem of the Gentile christians: that is, the chief place whither the Gentile converts resorted: as Jerusalem, before the dispersion by persecution, was resorted to by the Jews, and made the principal seat of their residence. Observe, 2. How God overruled the persecution and dispersion occasioned by St. Stephen's death, for disseminating and scattering the gospel as far as Antioch, verse 19. "They which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Antioch, preaching the word." Thus has the blood of the martyrs all along been the seed of the church, and what the devil and his instruments have designed for the extirpation, God has constantly overruled for the propagation of the gospel. Observe, 3. The great success which the ministers and ministry of the gospel had at Antioch: "The hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed." By the hand of the Lord, it meant the power and assistance of the Lord, which did accompany them in dispensing of his word, and enable them to work miracles for the confirmation of it. The hand is the organ or instrument of working in man. When it is attributed to God, it denotes his power and help: the hand of God was manifested in the miracles which they wrought, and in faith and conversion, which the sight of those miracles produced. Learn hence, That faith and conversion are wrought by the hand of the Lord: they are his work: study and endeavour is the minister's, the blessing and success is God's; when he takes the sword of the Spirit into the hand of the Spirit, then shall it work wonders. Observe, 4. How the joyful tidings of the success of the gospel at Antioch, being heard and understood by the apostles that remained at Jerusalem, they sent Barnabas to confirm the new converts at Antioch in the christian faith. Learn thence, That the news of any sinner's, much more of many sinners' conversion unto God, by the preaching of the gospel, is matter of great delight and rejoicing to the ministers of Christ. Observe, 5. The holy and honorable character which the Spirit of God gives of Barnabas: "he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith; and much people were added unto the Lord." By a good man, is meant a kind and charitable man; he having actually sold his estate, and laid it at the apostles' feet, for the benefit of the poor, as Acts iv. 36. 37, informs us; and his good works accompanying his good preaching, his good life seconding his sound doctrine, was a great mean of the conversion of so many, and that much people were added to the Lord. Observe, lastly, The holy exhortation which Barnabas gave these new converts at Antioch: "He exhorted them, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord:" That is, with a firm and fixed resolution of will to keep close to the profession of the truth of Christ, whatever tribulation or distress they might meet with. Young converts need exhortation and counsel, to establish and confirm them in the faith of the gospel, and to encourage them to hold fast to Christ.

25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul.

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

Observe here, A further instance of the piety of that good man. Barnabas having a great zeal and fervent desire that the gospel might be more and more propagated, he went to Tarsus to seek out Saul, that they might join together in the work of Christ; and having found him, he brought him to Antioch: where, for a whole year, they instructed the church in that city, and taught much people. Oh how happy is it for the church of Christ, when her ministers, laying aside all private interest, do unitedly apply themselves to promote the common interest of christianity, by propagating the gospel far and near! Observe, farther, How the believers, both Jews and Gentiles, were united in one common name at Antioch: the Jews had hitherto called them Nazirites and Galileans, and they called themselves disciples, believers, brethren, and those of the church; but now in this place, Antioch, they were first called Christians; a very great honor conferred on this Gentile city, which exalted her now above Jerusalem itself. At Antioch, a Gentile city, Christ set up his standard for the Gentiles, and displayed his banner, and put his own name on the despised Gentiles. They who before were counted dogs, and the outscouring of all things, have, now the venerable name of Christ imposed upon them, "The disciples were called christians first at Antioch," Note lastly, that the disciples did not call themselves christians first at Antioch, much less did their enemies give them that name; but they had it by divine authority imposed upon them; God would have Christ's disciples called christians, As scholars, who receive their denomination from their master, they are taught to learn and imitate Christ, whose name they bear. 2. As the word christians signifies anointed ones, it puts them in mind of their divine unction, which they have received from the Holy One, whereby they are made kings and priests unto God. We are at this day called reformed christians. God grant that we may not cheat ourselves with an empty and insignificant name; but let us fill up that glorious title, and be reformed in our lives, as well as in our religion; beautifying our holy profession by an holy and becoming conversation; otherwise an unbaptized heathen, at the great day, will not change estate with many baptized christians.

27 ¶ And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28 And there stood up one of them, named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

29 Then the disciples, every man, according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea.

30 Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

Observe here, 1. That the wisdom of God, at the first planting of the christian church, did confer upon some of its members extraordinary gifts; as the gift of tongues, the gift of miracles, the gift of prophecy, and the like. Accordingly, at this time, certain persons who had the gift of prophecy, and did foretel things to come, being now at Antioch, by revelation from the Spirit of God, foretold that there would shortly be a great famine over all Judea, and several other parts of the world: which exactly came to pass in the reign of the emperor Claudius. Where note, that as it is God's prerogative to foreknow future things, so it is his prerogative to enable others to foretel future things. This famine was here foretold, not by Judicial astrology, but by divine revelation: That God, who provided for the patriarchs, by means of Joseph's foreseeing the famine in Egypt, provided now for the christians, by Agabus' foretelling the famine which came upon Judea: "Agabus stood up and signified by the Spirit, that there should be a great dearth throughout all Judea." As God's omnipotence is exerted for his church's protection, so is his omniscience employed for its sustentation and preservation: yea, all his attributes are engaged for her benefit and advantage. Observe, 2. The full proof and evidence which the new converts at Antioch gave of the truth of their conversion to the christian religion: namely, their charity, and alms seasonably sent to the succour and relief of their fellow-members in Christ, which were in Judea. These were become very poor, by reason of the extraordinary malice, and long persecution of the Jews against them. And the seasonable succour now sent them from Antioch, was a singular comfort to them, and a sweet-smelling sacrifice unto God. Observe, lastly, The wise regulation of their charity, "every man gave according to his ability." This is the true standard of charity; we are to give alms of such things as we have, and according to what we have. Christian prudence must direct us in the exercise of christian charity; that must direct us in finding fit and proper objects for our charity, that we may give most to them that have most need. Prudence must also direct us in timing of our charity, that we do not put our poor brethren off with frivolous excuses and tedious delays. And it must direct us in the measure of our charity, that it doth not exceed the bounds of our estate. Few indeed are guilty of erring on that hand; but it is possible there may be an error in the excess, as well as in the defect, of our christian charity. To prevent both evils, let the practice of these primitive christians be a pattern for our imitation: "Who determined every one according to his ability, to send relief unto the brethren, and sent it by the hands of Barnabas and Saul."

CHAPTER XII.

St. Luke the writer of this history, having related what success the apostles had at Antioch; he now returns to Judea, and declares what persecution the church met with at Jerusalem: where St. James was beheaded: and St. Peter imprisoned, but by an angel miraculously delivered, as this church informs us.

NOW, about this time, Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church.

Observe here, 1. Satan, the grand enemy of the church of God, never wants instruments for carrying on his persecuting designs against the church; he had many Pharaohs in the Old Testament times, bitter oppressors of the Jewish church; and several Herods under the New Testament; as Herod Antipas and Herod Agrippa, who were very warm in the worst works, namely, that of persecution. "Herod stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church:" that is, to kill some, and to imprison others. Satan's bloodhounds have such an insatiable thirst after the blood of the saints, that they can never be satiated with it, nor satisfied without it. A tyrannical persecutor is like an hydropic person, the more he drinks, the more he thirsts.

2 And he killed James, the brother of John, with the sword.

3 And, because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.)

Note here, 1. The person slain by the sword of Herod, James the brother of John. We read in the gospel that he was one of the sons of Zebedee, that desired of Christ the pre-eminence to sit at his right hand in his kingdom: and now he is the first of the apostles that suffered martyrdom, who drank of Christ's cup, and was baptized with his baptism. He was called Boanerges, or a son of thunder, for his zealous and earnest preaching: no wonder then that Herod and the enraged Jews hated him, and were stirred up by satan to destroy him. For such as are most useful to, and most eminent in the church, are always the object of satan's wrath and anger, and of the persecutor's rage and fury. "He killed James the brother of John with the sword." Observe, 2. James being slain, Peter is to follow: "He proceeded further to take Peter also." The rage of persecutors is not easily satisfied, and the blood which they shed, is but oil to feed the flames of their revenge. But mark the overruling power and goodness of God, though St. James was murdered, St. Peter shall be but imprisoned: the husbandman doth not permit all his corn to the oven, but saves some for seed. Persecutors cannot do all the mischief they would, and they shall not do all they can.

4 And, when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him, intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

Peter being imprisoned, Observe, What an excess of care and caution Herod takes for securing his prisoner: sixteen soldiers are set to guard him; four at a time, and to take their turns at the four watches of the night, to relieve one another. Thence learn, That the enemies of the church make the surest work they can, when at any time God permits his servants to fall into any of their hands. Thus they dealt with the Head, when they had apprehended him; the watch-word was, Hold him fast, St. Mat. xxvi. 48. When they crucified him, they nailed him fast to his cross: when they buried him, they made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch: and thus they deal with the members: St. Peter has guard upon guard set over him, some soldiers chained to him, and others always standing at the door to observe him. But all this care, concern, and caution to secure the prisoner, did illustrate the glory of the miracle in his wonderful deliverance.

5 Peter, therefore, was kept in prison; but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

That is, fervent and importunate prayer was put up to God by the church on Peter's behalf. With the united strength of their whole souls they stormed heaven, and took him by force out of Herod's hand. Learn, 1. That when the church is plunged into deep perplexities, the only help she can hope for must come unto her in the way of prayer. Learn, 2. That when God suffers any of the ministers of the church to fall under the rage of persecutors, it is the church's duty to wrestle with God by prayer in an extraordinary manner on their behalf; "prayer was made without ceasing of the church." Learn, 3. That when God intends to bestow any extraordinary mercy upon his church, he stirs up the hearts of his people to pray for it in a very extraordinary manner.

6 And, when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers; bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

Observe, Peter continued in prison till the very night before Herod intended to bring him out to the people: and if they desired it, it is probable he intended to put him to death the next day. Learn thence, That God oftentimes suffers his children to come to the pit's brink, and then delivers them, that they may be the more sensible of his mercy, and have the greater cause to magnify his power. Peter was now come to his last night; the tyrant Herod probably intended his execution next morning. Now was the time for God to step in: our extremity is his opportunity. Observe farther, That notwithstanding Peter's imminent and impending danger, he sleeps very soundly, resigning up himself into the hands of Christ, and resolving, if he may no longer live Christ's servant, that he will die his sacrifice. I question whether Herod that imprisoned him slept half so soundly. Lord! how soft and secure a pillow is a good conscience, even in the confines of death, and in the very jaws of danger! Observe lastly, That God takes most care of Peter, when he was able to take least care of himself: when he was asleep, and altogether insensible of his danger, God was awake, and acting effectually in order to his deliverance. Happy prisoners! who have God with them in prison; such are prisoners of hope indeed and shall certainly experience divine help.

7 And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals: and so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9 And he went out, and followed him, and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision.

10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city, which opened to them of its own accord: and they went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him.

Observe here, 1. That God hath sometimes made use of the ministry of angels to effect deliverance for his people. Observe, 2. The several good offices which the angels now did for Peter, in order to his enlargement. Peter is asleep, the angel awakes him; he is laid, the angel raises him; he is amazed, the angel directs him; he is bound, the angel unties him; he knows not where he is, the angel goes before him, and guides him; he is to pass through many difficulties, the angel conducts him. Lord! how innumerable are the good offices which at thy command the holy angels do for us, though they are not sensibly in this manner apprehended by us! What love and service do we owe to thee! What honor and respect should we pay to them, for their care over us, and attendance upon us! Observe, 3. Peter must arise, gird himself, bind on his sandals, cast his garment about him, follow the angel, and use his own endeavours in order to his own deliverance. God will have him use the means, even then when he was about to work a miracle for him. What a tempting of God is it then to neglect the means, when we cannot expect miracles! As to trust to means, is to neglect God, so to neglect the means, is to tempt God. We must always subserve the providence of God in the use of such means as his wisdom has appointed and directed us unto. Observe lastly, That this deliverance was so amazing and surprising, that Peter thought it a dream only, ver. 9. "He wist not that it was true, but thought he saw a vision." Learn thence, That sometimes the deliverances of the godly from imminent and apparent dangers, are so very wonderful, and attended with such a crowd of improbabilities, that they have much ado to believe them, though they see them with their eyes. When God turned the captivity of Peter, he was like unto them that dream, Psal. cxxvi. 1.

11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark, where many were gathered together, praying.

13 And, as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda.

14 And, when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.

15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so, Then said they it is his angel.

16 But Peter continued knocking, And when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17 But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of prison. And he said, Go, show these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

Observe here, 1. The wise and holy course which the church took for the apostle's enlargement, and that was keeping a day of prayer. A number of christians get together, and importune heaven; the enemies plot, the church prays; they shut the prison doors, the church opens heaven's doors, and God gives Peter in, as an answer of prayer, before they rose off from their knees. Oh how good is it to draw nigh to God! What a prayer-hearing God is our God! How great is the power and prevalency of the conjoined prayers of good men! God's praying people ever have been, and will be a prevailing people. Whilst these pious souls were in the very act of calling upon God for Peter's release, God gives in Peter released to them. God never wants means for his people's deliverance, when he is once set on work by the prayers of his people. Observe, 2. St. Peter being delivered, meditates whilst he was walking in the streets, and going along by himself, of the greatness of his danger, and the graciousness of his deliverance: holy and suitable thoughts, pious meditations and ejaculations, do well become us in any place, at all times and upon all occasions, but especially after signal deliverances from signal dangers. We can never enough ruminate upon them, or be sufficiently thankful for them. Observe, 3. The wisdom and goodness of the divine providence in directing Peter in the dead of the night, to the house where the saints were praying for him. This is the more remarkable, because the angel having done his work which God sent him upon, after he had delivered Peter from his chains and imprisonment, he left him to shift for himself, and to take care of his own safety; but though an angel left him, yet the providence of God conducted him to a place where he was both safe and welcome. Observe, 4. What an ancient opinion it was, that every good man had a guardian angel appointed him by God, to take a special care of him to his life's end; to direct him in his way, to guard him from dangers, and to deliver him in his distresses; They say, It is his angel. For which saying there could be no reason, had there not been a current opinion among them of guardian angels. Blessed be God, his holy angels are our keepers, our counsellors, our defenders, our loving and friendly associates: and they shall never depart from us, till they have conducted us safely to our heavenly Father's house, where we shall be "as the angels of God in heaven." Observe, 5. How Peter gives God, and not the angel, the glory of his deliverance, ver. 17. "He declared how the Lord had brought him out of the prison." The angel was but the instrument, God was the principal agent, ver. 11. "The Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod." All deliverances must be ascribed to him who commands deliverance for his people. Observe, 6. The prudential care which St. Peter takes for his future preservation. "He departed and went to another place." He could not think himself safe whilst Herod was so near, no more than a lamb could be safe near the lion's den. He knew he should be hunted for, therefore escapes for his life. And besides his own danger, he was not willing to endanger his friends, who did not entertain and harbour him: but both for his own and their preservation, he departs to another place. Learn, that a prudential use of all lawful means for our own and others' preservation, in subserviency to the divine providence, is our duty, our wisdom and interest, both as men and christians.

18 Now, as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers what was become of Peter.

(No. 34)

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Cesarea, and there abode.

Observe here, 1. How wicked persecutors are mightily enraged, when their bloody purposes are disappointed. Herod having lost his prize, is so incensed, that he caused the keepers first to be examined, (and possibly by tortures) and then to be put to death. Observe, 2. The justice of God, and the great injustice of Herod: it was just in God to suffer the soldiers, who were Herod's instruments in persecution, to die by the bloody hand of Herod, whose tools they were. Instruments in persecution God oftentimes meets with in this world, and sometimes they fall by the hands of persecutors themselves; yet was it notorious injustice in Herod to put to death those innocent soldiers, who could not help what was done, and were no ways accessory to the prisoner's escape.

20 ¶ And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and having made Blastus the King's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because their country was nourished by the king's country.

Observe, Herod, upon St. Peter's escape out of his hands, leaves Jerusalem, and goes to dwell at Cesarea, where, being highly displeased with the rich citizens of Tyre and Sidon, he designs to make war upon them. But they being sensible that their cities lying upon the sea coasts, and having little land belonging to them, they must be beholden to Judea and Galilee, which were under Herod's jurisdiction, for a great part of their provisions; therefore they prudently compound the matter with him, knowing that to fight with him who fed them, was the ready way to be famished. And opening the breast of Blastus the king's chamberlain, with a golden key, through that passage they made their access to pacify the king. Interest leads us to pay homage to them, whom our dependency is upon: yet though men depend upon God for all, for life, and for the comforts and supports of life, which they do enjoy, (our country being nourished by the King of heaven's country) yet how few by prayer do own their dependance upon him, or by praise and thanksgiving do acknowledge the hand that supplies them?

21 And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne and made an oration unto them.

22 And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory; and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.

Upon a set day, that is, as some suppose, on his own birthday, he was arrayed in royal apparel, in a cloak made of cloth of silver, but dyed with St. James' blood, ver. 2. which being beaten upon by the sun beams, did plainly dazzle the eyes of all spectators; he makes an eloquent oration more gaudy than his apparel, unto the people, who cried out in approbation thereof, "The voice of a god, and not of a man!" Herod instead of repelling this their impious flattery, embraces and hugs their praises, as proper to himself; and thereupon an angel, and worms, the best and the basest of creatures, meet in his punishment; the angel smiling him, and the worms eating him up: and no wonder that worms quickly devour him, whom those flesh-flies had blown upon before; no wonder that he is eaten up of worms, who forgot that he was a worm! Quest. But why were not the people punished as well as the prince, seeing they were equally guilty of robbing God of his honor? True, Herod was the receiver, but they were the thieves: why then fell not the punishment on the whole multitude? Ans. Because more discretion is expected from a prince, than from the rabble: besides, what in them was but a blasphemous compliment, was by his acceptance of it made a reality, and was usurped by him, and assumed to him as due to his deserts. From the whole note, 1. That flattery, either given or taken, is a very dangerous sin, a God-provoking, and a wrath-procuring sin. If we flatter men, God will not flatter us, but deal plainly, yet severely with us. One of the ancients said, he was afraid of praise and commendation as much as of a crack of thunder. When men give much glory to men, it is very hard for men to give that glory back again to God. Herod was so pleased and tickled with the glory which the people gave him, that he could not part with it; but by keeping that, he lost his life. Note, 2. That though God bears long with many sorts of sinners, yet not with sinners of this sort: "Immediately the angel of the Lord smote him:" Agreeably to that of Job, chap. xxxii. 22. "I know not how to give flattering titles, for in so doing my Maker would soon take me away." The great God will admit of no co-rivals; he will not suffer his glory to be given to another; he will be a swift witness against the flatterer, as well as against the false swearer, Malachi iii. 5. He can destroy both flatterer and flattered with the twinkling of an eye, or with the turning of a hand; and those that are cried up as gods to-day, are as dung to-morrow.

24 ¶ But the word of God grew and multiplied.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

Observe, Herod the tyrant and persecutor being dead, the gospel prospered, and was preached up and down with great success. Persecutors, by their weak endeavours to pull down the church, do build it up the stronger. The church in Egypt never grew so high as when Pharaoh labored to keep it low: the more he molested them, the more he multiplied them. Thus here, after Herod's death, and Peter's deliverance, the word of God grew and multiplied: that is, the number of believers increased through the preaching of the word, as seed is multiplied by the scattering of the hands; the word preached is the seed sown in the furrows of the field; the ground was now harrowed by the hand of the persecutors, and the seed grew the better, and the fruits of faith and obedience did by every shower of persecution more and more abound. The truth of God may for a time be oppressed, but it shall never be fully and finally suppressed: still "the word of God grew and multiplied."

CHAPTER XIII.

St. Luke the writer of this history, having given us an account how the christian church was first planted among the Jews by St. Peter's ministry, in the twelve first chapters; he now applies his pen in declaring how the gospel was planted and propagated amongst the Gentiles by St. Paul's ministry, to the end of the book. Now in this chapter we have the solemn mission of Saul and Barnabas to the ministry among the Gentiles, fully related.

NOW there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

Observe here, That the city of Antioch being the first Gentile city which entertained the gospel, there were at that time several prophets and teachers in that city to instruct the people, and to lay a foundation of a christian church amongst them: and amongst others, there was found one very eminent person named Manaen, who was of that high rank and quality, that he was brought up with Herod at court; and, as the learned Lightfoot thinks, was converted there by the preaching of St. John the Baptist; yet this man, contemning with Moses the pleasures of the court, did think it no disparagement to him to be a teacher at Antioch. Learn thence, That God is pleased to manifest the freeness of his grace in effectually calling some of all sorts and ranks of men, to the knowledge and obedience of the gospel, and to a participation of the benefit offered in and by the Lord Jesus Christ: "Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch."

2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

Observe here, How the Holy Ghost takes occasion, when the teachers of the church at Antioch were assembled together in God's presence, and about his work, to give them particular instructions and directions concerning his will and their duty. Observe farther, The solemn charge given by the Holy Ghost, to set apart Saul and Barnabas by solemn imposition of hands, for preaching the gospel to the Gentiles: this was a great work, and not to be undertaken without a special call from God: therefore, says the Holy Ghost "Separate me Barnabas and Saul to the work whereunto I have called them:" Which words prove both the Duty and personality of the Holy Ghost: he who calls ministers to the office, and unto whose service they are separated, is both God and a distinct person in the Godhead; but this the Holy Ghost did: "separate me Barnabas and Saul." Here note, 1. That the work of the ministry is a separate work. Ministers must be set apart for the work of the ministry before they undertake it; a call from God is not sufficient without a separation by man. Note, 2. That this separation ought to be performed by the chief ministers of the church, who have authority from Christ to separate and set others apart for the work of the ministry. The Holy Ghost said to the teachers of the church at Antioch, "Separate me." Note, 3. That this solemn act and ordinance ought to be performed in a very solemn manner, by fasting, prayer, and imposition of hands. Note, 4. That when thus performed, it is agreeable to the mind, and according to the institution and appointment of the Holy Ghost: "The Holy Ghost said, 'Separate, &c.'" Note lastly, Though the office of the ministry be an honorable office, yet withal it is a laborious work. Separate them for the work whereunto I have called them. It is a work that requires attendance, and zealous application, both in season and out of season. Praying, preaching, administering sacraments; guiding and governing the flock by private admonition, and public censure: these are weighty works, found so now by those that perform them faithfully, and will be found so at the great day, by the slothful and negligent. How can that be esteemed to be any slight and inconsiderable work, unto the faithful performance whereof so great a reward is promised, and to the omission thereof so dreadful a woe is denounced? If Satan destroy men's souls he shall answer for them as a murderer only, not as an officer intrusted with the care of them: but if the watchman doth not warn, if the shepherd doth not feed; if the prophet doth not instruct, if the steward doth not provide, he shall answer not only for the souls that have miscarried, but for an office neglected, for a talent hidden, and for a stewardship unfaithfully administered. Lord, how unable shall we be at the making up of our accounts, to endure the hideous outcries of distressed souls, saying, Parentes sensimus parricidas: Our guides have misled us, our watchmen have betrayed us, our stewards have defrauded us, and the following of their evil example has undone us.

4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia: and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God, in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister.

6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-jesus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man, who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him.

10 And said. O full of all subtilty, and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist, and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

Observe here, 1. The apostles Barnabas and Saul having received their commission, set forth for their work to which they were designed; and their first journey was from Antioch to Cyprus, an island of the Gentiles, lewd and wicked; where Venus was worshipped: and much filthiness was committed by them in that abominable Pagan worship. Yet the free grace of God cast a look of pity and love upon sinful Cyprus: the Holy Ghost directs these apostles thither, to reclaim them from sin, and reduce them to the obedience of the gospel. Observe, 2. That though Saul and Barnabas were sent forth to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, yet they made the first tender of it to the Jews wherever they came; accordingly here in Cyprus, there being a great number of Jews, the apostles went into the synagogues, and preached to them. Christ was the minister of circumcision, who was himself "sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel;" and accordingly sent his apostles out first, to feed and gather those poor scattered sheep: these were accounted the children of the house, and the Gentiles reckoned as dogs; but when those wanton and full-fed children began to waste their meat, and cast it under their table, then did the Gentile dogs gather up their leavings; Acts xiii. 46. "It was necessary," both by virtue of Christ's command and example also, "that the word of God should be first spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Observe, 3. What an early opposition the devil made against the apostles in their preaching the gospels to the Gentiles; he feared the battering down the walls of his kingdom, and therefore stirs up his instrument Elymas the sorcerer to withstand them, and particularly to endeavour to divert Sergius Paulus, who governed that island, from the faith. Where note, The character given of this vile man by the apostles, "Oh full of all subtilty and mischief; a child of the devil, an enemy of all righteousness:" Intimating, 1. That to be subtle, to do mischief, is the genius or disposition of the devil's children. 2. That to be an opposer of good is to be conformable to the devil: it is the height of wickedness, not only to do evil, but to oppose good; to be an enemy to, and an opposer of goodness, is the very character of Satan and his children. So much as any man opposes goodness, so much he has of the devil's disposition in him: "thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness." Observe, 4. The judgment inflicted by God on this wicked instrument of the devil, and the suitableness of the judgment inflicted on the sin committed: he wickedly shut the eyes of his understanding against the light of the gospel, and God deprives him of his bodily sight. Thus the wisdom of God doth oft-times so suit his judgment to the sins committed, that a person may ever read his sin in his punishment. Yet how did God temper mercy with the judgment, inflicting blindness upon this vile wretch only for a season? Even the very judgments of God are medicinal and in mercy: when God punishes, it is with a design not to ruin, but reform. Observe lastly, What success St. Paul's ministry, together with this miracle, had upon Sergius Paulus the governor; he was thereby converted to the faith: "When he saw what was done he believed; being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord." The word never works more kindly, than when it is received with admiration. Yet doth the word sometimes work admiration, where it doth not produce faith: many marvelled who never believed; but this governor was astonished, and believed also.

13 Now, when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John, departing from them, returned to Jerusalem.

14 ¶ But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and sat down.

15 And, after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

Here we have an account of another journey which Paul and Barnabas took to preach, plant, and propagate the gospel: namely, to Perga, in Pamphylia; and from thence to Antioch in Pisidia, so called, to distinguish it from the other Antioch in Syria, from whence they were sent forth, ver. 1, 2, 3, where their colleague and companion John Mark withdrew from them and went no farther with them to the work. This Paul took very ill, as he might, if he left them, because of the difficulties and dangers which he saw did accompany and attend them in the planting and propagating of the gospel; for he that putteth his hand to that plough, and then draweth back, justly deserveth censure and reproof. However such was the zeal of the two apostles, that they travel on to Antioch without their companion, where entering into one of the synagogues of the Jews on the sabbath-day; after the reading some sections in the law and the prophets, as their manner was, the rulers of the synagogues desired a word of exhortation from them. Where note, How wonderfully God overrules the hearts of these rulers of the synagogues, not only to suffer, but to desire the apostles to preach the gospel to them. Hereupon the apostle St. Paul stands up and makes a most excellent sermon to them in the following verses. Where note, How readily the blessed apostle embraces an opportunity to preach the gospel: the rulers need not ask him twice: little opportunity will serve to persuade an holy heart to undertake the work of God. The faithful ministers of Christ are forward for, as well as zealous in their Master's work. No sooner did the rulers of the synagogue request a word of exhortation from the apostle, but immediately, though not unpreparedly, he stands up, and preaches to the people.

16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand, said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience.

17 The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

18 And about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness.

19 And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that, he gave unto them judges, about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.

22 And when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will.

23 Of this man's seed hath God, according to his promise, raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus;

24 When John had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

25 And, as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But, behold, there cometh one after me whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent.

This latter part of the chapter containeth an historical and practical sermon, preached by St Paul at the request of the rulers of the synagogue. Where observe, 1. His prologue or preface, in which he craves their careful attention; withal intimating that none of them would attend but only such as truly feared God, Men of Israel and ye that fear God, give audience. That is the proper character of a right attentive hearer. Observe, 2 The narrative which the apostle gives of the many divine favors, benefits and blessings, which the Lord bestowed of old upon Israel his people; namely, his free election and choosing them before all nations: his wonderful deliverance of them out of Egypt; his great indulgence towards them for forty years in the wilderness, as a mother bears with a child's frowardness and stubbornness: and his constituting a form of government for them under the judges first, and kings afterwards, particularly Saul and David; who is described first by his conformity to the nature of God; he was a man after his own heart. Secondly, by his conformity to the will of God; He shall fulfil all my will. Having thus ended the historical part, he next begins the practical part of his discourse; and lays down this grand proposition, That Jesus is the Christ and Saviour of the world. This assertion he defends and proves, 1. From his stock and family according to the flesh, foretold by God. 2. From the testimony of John the Baptist his forerunner, ver. 23, 24, "of David's seed hath God, according to his promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, when John had first preached the baptism of repentance." After this he makes a close application of the whole of them: "Men and brethren, to you is the word of this salvation sent." Learn thence, That the gospel is the doctrine or word of salvation sent by God unto a lost world. The gospel is a message of glad tidings; the glad tidings which the gospel brings, is salvation: and the way and manner how the gospel brings salvation, is threefold; 1. By way of satisfaction and discovery; the gospel makes a discovery of salvation exclusively to any other way; no angel in heaven could have discovered it, if God had not first declared it in and by the gospel. 2. By way of tender and offer. Oh this joyful message of salvation is sent to every man's door! free grace falls upon its knees, and begs of every sinner to accept it. 3. By way of efficacy and power. The gospel brings with it a convincing and converting power, to put men into a state of salvation; and hath also an establishing and confirming power, to preserve them in that estate. Blessed be God, that to us, even to every one of us, is the word of this salvation sent. What monsters then are they who are enemies to the preaching of the gospel? they are enemies to our salvation: the only way to heaven is by Christ, the only way to Christ is by faith, and the only way to faith is by the word. It cometh by hearing.

(No. 34.)

27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are ready every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

28 And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain.

29 And, when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre.

30 But God raised him from the dead:

31 And he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers.

33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David.

35 Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

Observe here, 1. The apostle declares the ignominious death; 2. The glorious resurrection of the Lord Jesus, whom he proves to be the true and promised Messiah. 1. For the ignominious death, the Jews hanged him upon a tree. The Son of God was not only put to death, but to the worst of deaths, even the death of the cross, by the wicked Jews: yet the apostle acknowledges, that neither the Jewish rulers nor people did understand him to be the Messiah, as they might have done, had they considered the predictions of the prophets; and therefore their ignorance would not excuse them; for the ignorance and heedlessness of men, enjoying the means and opportunities of knowledge, will certainly bring destruction upon them. To sin blindly without knowledge, or to sin wilfully against knowledge, when we have the means of knowledge, is a damnable sin; the rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets, have fulfilled them in condemning him." Observe, 2. To take away the scandal of the cross, the apostle shows, that our Saviour's resurrection was as glorious as his death was ignominious. God wiped away the reproach of the cross, by raising up Christ from the grave, and declared him to be his Son with power, by the resurrection from the dead: and accordingly the apostle applies that prophecy to Christ, in Psal. ii. 7. Thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee: as if the Father had said, "Now thou hast again recovered thy glory, and thy resurrection-day is to thee as a new birth-day." Three ways is Christ said to be begotten: 1. Of the essence of the Father before all worlds. 2. When his body was formed of the substance of the Virgin's flesh. 3. When God raised him from the dead: this day have I begotten thee: this is, declaratively, for he was the Son of God before, even from all eternity; but whilst he was in a suffering condition, his divinity was veiled: whereas after his resurrection it was more apparent, and he was then declared to be the Son of God; not then made the Son of God, but then made manifest to be the Son of God, by the resurrection from the dead. Learn, That the Lord Jesus Christ was the Son of God antecedent to his resurrection, even from all eternity! he was declared and manifested, but not made or constituted the Son of God by the resurrection. Then it was that his divinity brake forth as the sun, after it had been shut up under a dark and thick cloud. Christ was the eternal Son of God; but his resurrection was a declaration, and full manifestation of it to the world; Rom. i. 4. "Declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead."

36 For David, after he had served his own generation, by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption.

The Holy Ghost here gives a compendious account of David's life and death: of his life, "He served his generation according to the will of God: of his death, He fell asleep, and was gathered to his fathers, and saw corruption." In the account given of David's life, note, 1. His activity and zeal for God, he served as well as reigned: this serving implies not a single or individual act, but a series and succession of good actions throughout the whole course of his life. Note, 2. The publicness of his activity; he served not himself, but his own generation. Note, 3. The rule of his activity, and that was the will of God, as he served his generation, so he served God in his generation faithfully according to his will. All our serviceableness of God and our generation, must be guided and directed by the word and will of God. David served his own generation by the will of God. This is the account of his life. Observe, next, the relation of his death. "He fell asleep, was gathered to his fathers, and saw corruption." He fell asleep; death to the servants of God is a sleep, and but a sleep. As a sleep it gives rest and cessation from labor; and as a sleep, it gives refreshment after labor; and they that sleep shall certainly awake, so those that sleep in Jesus, shall awake in the morning of the resurrection, to see their glorified Redeemer face to face. Note, 2. No serviceableness to God in our generation can exempt from death; for David fell asleep; this is the lot of the faithful, as well as of the slothful servants. Note, 3. It is a blessed thing when we fall asleep with our work in our hands; when death meets us after a life spent in the service of Christ. David, after he had served his generation, fell asleep; it follows, he was gathered to his fathers; that is, he was buried among his ancestors: and he saw corruption; that is, his body corrupted in the grave like other men's.

37 But he whom God raised again, saw no corruption.

That is, Jesus Christ, whom God the Father raised to life the third day; he saw a dissolution, but no corruption. Sin had no inheritance in him; therefore death could have no dominion over him; but he overcame death in its own territories, the grave. Thus the apostle draws the argument home, that the foregoing word could not be meant of David's person, but of the Messiah, whom David typified and represented.

38 Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

39 And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

40 Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets.

41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

The apostle having proved this point, that Jesus was the true, the promised, and expected Messiah, by his resurrection from the dead, he now applies it to his auditory: and tells them, that by the meritorious satisfaction and prevailing intercession of this Jesus, remission of sins is to be obtained, and deliverance from the wrath of God, from which the law of Moses could not with all its ceremonial washing and sacrifices, cleanse and free them. Here note, the impossibility of our being justified by the law, and the certainty of our justification by the faith in Christ; by him all that believe are justified. Where observe, the procurer of our justification, Christ; the qualification of the subjects justified by him them that believe; and the extent and measure of our justification; not from some, but from all things, by him all that believe are justified from all things. Next the apostle exhorts his hearers to take heed, lest by their obstinate rejecting and refusing this way of salvation now preached to them, they bring such a remarkable destruction upon themselves now, as God threatened to bring upon their forefathers of old. The sense is, "If ye reject this Jesus, and the way to life and salvation by him, ye shall be destroyed by the Romans as your ancestors were by the Chaldeans." Sin is as odious to God at one time as another, and in one people as another; particularly the sin of obstinate infidelity and unbelief, is a God-provoking, and a wrath procuring sin: "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish."

42 ¶ And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath, 43 Now, when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God.

44 ¶ And the next sabbath-day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, it was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles:

47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.

49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51 But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

Observe here, 1. The apostle having ended his sermon to the Jews, the Gentile proselytes desired to hear more of this subject the next sabbath-day. Such to whom the word of God is savory and sweet, are not soon cloyed with it, but hunger after it. Neither do they loath the heavenly manna, because it is rained down frequently about their tents. Observe, 2. The apostle readily complies with their desire; he preaches again the next sabbath, when almost the whole city came together to hear the gospel. But this angered the devil, and occasioned great envy and persecution to the apostles. Learn thence, That a crowd of hearers, but especially of young converts, is very hurtful to satan, and doth usually stir up abundance of rage in his servants against the ministers of Christ. "When the Jews saw the multitudes they were filled with envy." Observe, 3. The instrument satan makes use of, to carry on this fierce persecution against the apostles: "He stirred up the devout and honorable women, and chief men of the city." Learn thence, 1. That the power and successful preaching of the gospel, usually stirs up violent persecution against the preachers of the gospel. 2. That devout women, and great men, nourished up in ignorance, are oftentimes great opposers of the truth, and instruments of persecution; "The Jews stirred up the devout women, &c." Observe, 4. How the apostles with great boldness and courage acquaint them with their sin and danger; "Ye judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life." But how so? Not directly and formally, but interpretively and practically: they thought very well of themselves, no doubt, and judged themselves worthy of eternal life, but their practice pronounced them unworthy, and gave sentence against them, whilst they acquitted themselves; for this their contempt of the grace of the gospel, did declare them unworthy of eternal life. Observe, 5. The emblematical action performed by the apostles, to signify God's rejection of this miserable people; they shook off the dust of their feet against them." This signifies, 1. That the very earth was polluted where such refusers of the precious gospel did inhabit, and was therefore to be shaken off as a filthy thing. 2. That they were a base people, vile as the dust, and that as such God had now shaken them off. 3. That the dust of the apostles' feet there left might be as a witness against them, that the gospel had been preached to them. This action of shaking off the dust of their feet, was a dismal signification of a forsaken people. Observe, 6. With what joy and gladness the poor Gentiles entertained the glad tidings of the gospel: "when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." That is, when the Gentiles heard the good news, and understood their own interest in it, they rejoiced exceedingly, and as many as were by the Holy Spirit of God prepared and disposed to seek after eternal life, believed.

52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

That is, "The apostles and disciples, in this city were nothing discouraged with the Jews' blasphemies, oppositions and persecutions, but were filled with spiritual joy that they had embraced the gospel, and went on courageously in the profession of it. Learn thence, that God's grace, and the church's joy, may and do increase under the greatest opposition and persecution of men. Infinite wisdom and sovereign power knows how to overrule the contradiction of sinners, for glory to himself, and good to his church.

CHAPTER XIV.

AND it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together unto the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews, and also of the Greeks, believed.

2 But the believing Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil-affected against the brethren.

Here we have an account of the fourth journey which Paul and Barnabas undertook in their travels, to plant and propagate the christian faith, and that was to Iconium. Where observe, 1. The unity of these two great apostles, both amongst themselves, and in the word of God; "They went both together into the synagogue." Oh how happy is it for the ministers of Christ to walk and work together in unity! to go hand in hand together in the service of the gospel: and with united endeavours promote the glory of God, and the interest of souls! Observe, 2. As their unity, so their great constancy in performing their duty, notwithstanding all their persecutors' fury and obstinacy; though "the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles against the apostles," yet they continue preaching in the synagogues. Observe, 3. The great success with which it pleased God to crown the endeavours of the holy apostles, "a great multitude of both Jews and Gentiles believed;" and that which doth constantly attend the success of the ministry of the word, namely, the envy and opposition of wicked men; they exasperated or made the Gentiles' minds evil-affected against their brethren.

3 Long time, therefore, abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

Note here, 1. The manner of the apostles' preaching at Iconium: they speak boldly; that is, openly in the synagogues: and there, with great freedom and plainness of speech, asserted truth, condemned error, reprov'd sin, and denounced judgments against impenitent sinners; and this with a wise but convincing boldness; with a meek, but zealous boldness; knowing, that if they had not now been bold for Christ, they could not at the great day be bold before him. That minister that is afraid to speak and plead for Christ now, will certainly be ashamed to look him in the face then. A serious thought of this, when we are going to preach, will make us shut all base fear out of the pulpit. Note, 2. The time of their preaching at Iconium; it was not a single sermon or two, in transitu, but "long time they abode speaking boldly in the Lord." A constant course of preaching is needful to root that word which one or two sermons oft leaveth loose; the end of the ministry is to build up, as well as bring in, and this is done by our constancy in preaching, and exemplariness in holy living. Note, 3. How God honored his word in the mouth of his ministers, confirming their doctrine by miracles; "He gave testimony by the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands." The miracles which the apostles wrought, were the convincing cause of the credibility of the apostles' testimony.

4 But the multitude of the city was divided; and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles.

5 And when there was an assault made, both of the Gentiles and also of the Jews, with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them;

6 They were aware of it, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about.

7 And there they preached the gospel.

Observe here, 1. How upon the preaching of the gospel, there follow great divisions; "the multitude was divided." Not that the gospel is the cause of division, but the occasion only, and that by accident too. The sacred institutions and ordinances of Christ, are not to be quarrelled with, or objected against, because, through man's corruption, they breed differences, distords and divisions. Observe, 2. How this division was the cause of persecution; "the city was divided; and an attempt was made to use the apostles despitefully, and to stone them." Lord! what ill usage have thine ambassadors met with from the first publication of the gospel! The unkind world has treated them as if they were not fit to live, driving them from place to place, and persecuting them from city to city. But observe, 3. The prudent care which the apostles use for their own preservation: "They were aware of it, and fled to Lystra and Derbe;" according to Christ's command, "When they persecute you in one city, flee unto another." Christ allows his ministers a liberty of flight in time of persecution, that they may preserve their lives for future service. We must not expect safety by a miracle, when we have it in the use of means: yet probably it might not be fear, or desire to save their lives, which made the apostles flee; but because they were unwilling to lose time there, when their ministry was obstructed, and when they saw the gospel was rejected. Accordingly they fled to Derbe and Lystra, and there preached the gospel. From whence note, How greatly persecution, by scattering, tends to the increasing of the gospel. Thousands had never heard of Jesus Christ, if persecution had not driven the ministers of the gospel unto them. The wisdom of God well knows how to order those things which are designed for the prejudice, to tend to the furtherance of the gospel, Phil. i. 12.

8 ¶ And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked :

9 The same heard Paul speak : who, steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed.

10 Said with a loud voice, Stand up-right on thy feet. And he leaped and walked, 11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying, in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter, and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

Here we have an account of the fifth journey which the apostles Barnabas and Paul undertook in their travels to plant and propagate the christian faith ; and that was at Lystra, and Derbe. Here their first work was to preach the gospel ; which done, God honored Paul to work a glorious miracle for the confirmation of what they had preached. Where note, 1. The subject whom this miraculous cure was wrought upon, a man that was a cripple, not by accident, but by nature, from his mother's womb, and consequently had never walked. They that are lame by casualty, may possibly be relieved by art and industry ; but to cure one that is born lame, nothing less is required than a divine power : such defects as are from nature, can only be relieved by the God of nature. Note, 2. What an extraordinary spirit of discerning was at some times, and upon certain occasions, found with the apostles : St. Paul perceived that this poor cripple had faith to be healed ; that is, by that extraordinary gift of discerning spirits, which at this time the apostles had. The like had St. Peter also upon a special occasion ; (for this gift of discerning spirits, was not at all times found with the apostles) he discerned the hypocrisy and falsehood of Ananias and Simon Magus. The gift of working miracles, and the gift of discerning of spirits, were for a time conferred upon the apostles, for confirming their testimony, but are long since ceased in the church ; the reason of them ceasing, the gospel being sufficiently established and confirmed. Note, 3. The reality of this miracle ; it was not a lying wonder, but a real miracle : the man not only walked, but leaped for joy, to show, that he was perfectly cured, and thoroughly recovered. All the works of God, especially his miraculous works, are perfect : whom God cures, he cures effectually. Note, 4. What influence the sight of this miracle had upon the minds of the people of Lystra ; they ascribe the honor of this glorious miracle to their dunghill-deities, not to the true God : they pay their rent to a wrong landlord. Such was the blind superstition of these poor Pagans, that believing their gods were come down to them in the likeness of men, they called Barnabas, Jupiter, who was their chief god : and Paul, Mercurius, whom they accounted the messenger and interpreter of the gods. Lord ! how blind are the principles of corrupt reason in fallen mankind ; and how forcible is an evil custom, and a vain conversation received by tradition from our forefathers ! and how hard a matter is it to rectify such mistakes in religion, as time and general consent have rooted and riveted in the minds of men !

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people ;

14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out.

15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things ? we also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you, that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein :

16 Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

17 Nevertheless, he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness, 18 And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

Observe, 1. How far Paganish superstition did transport and carry these men ; they come to the gates of the house where the apostles had lodged, and bring oxen with them trimmed with garlands of flowers, according to their heathenish rites, verily intending to offer sacrifice unto them. Learn, How forward the devil is to put honor, much honor, yea, over much honor, upon the ministers of Christ, when it is to contradict their doctrine, and gain advantage to himself by it. The devil laughed to see the blind superstitious Lystrians adore the apostles, and adorn them with the names of their heathen gods, hoping to make advantage thereby to himself. Observe, 2. With what indignation and disdain, detestation and abhorrence, the apostles reject this vile idolatry, telling them they were men of like passions, and in the same condition of mortality with themselves, and that their business was to turn them from their idols, which were mere vanities, and nothing compared with the living and true God, who made them and all the world. Learn thence, 1. That the worshipping of idols is the most senseless and irrational vanity that ever the devil put into the heart of man. 2. That all good men hate idolatry in others, and abhor to be idolized themselves. Observe, 3. The description which the holy apostle gives of the true God, to draw the people off from worshipping idols: he styles him the living God, that made the glorious fabric of heaven and earth, the sea and all things therein. A good God, that giveth rain, and fruitful seasons, filling his creatures' hearts with food and gladness. Intimating, 1. That whatever concerns the happiness and felicity of man in this life is wholly derived from God. 2. That there is no nation or person under heaven, to whom God exhibits not the evident tokens of his goodness. "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. Observe, 4. This character which the apostles give of the former times, in which the heathen world lived; "in times past they were suffered to walk in their own ways;" that is, of old, God suffered all nations (except the Jewish nation) to walk in their own ways. The meaning is, he did not check nor stop them in their sinful ways and courses, as he did his own people the Jews. Yet we must not understand the apostles absolutely, but comparatively only; there never was any man, much less any nation, whom God suffered to go on in a course of sin without any stop. Every person, and every nation, has had the stop of the light of nature at least: but every nation has not had the stop of the light of the gospel, the stop of ordinances, the preaching of the word, the Holy Spirit; these the Jews had; but the Gentiles had not. In this sense God suffered all nations to walk in their own ways, he did not give them his word, his statutes, or his judgments, to show them his ways, or to hinder them in walking in their own ways; and this was a sore judgment: to suffer either nation or person to walk without control or check from word or rod, from ordinances or providences, in the ways of sin and wickedness, is a very dreadful and tremendous judgment: "in times past he suffered all nations to walk in their own ways."

19 ¶ And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people; and having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

Note here, 1. The ill requital St. Paul had for his excellent discourse to these blasphemous idolaters: they stoned him to death, to their own apprehension. The sharpest and keenest edge of persecution is usually turned against the ministers of Christ, and fall heaviest on the prophets of God. The devil will do his utmost to take away their lives, who are continually endeavouring the destruction of him and his kingdom. Note, 2. The great inconstancy and incredible fickleness of the common people, who one day would sacrifice to the apostles as gods, and the next day stone them to death as malefactors. What wise man will value himself by the applause of the multitude, and live upon the breath of the people, (that contingent judge of good and evil) which rather attend the vain than the virtuous? But thus the common people dealt with Christ himself, crying one day, Hosannah! and the next day, Crucify! Note, 3. The miraculous recovery of the apostle, after his persecutors had stoned him, He rose up and came into the city: his recovery seems to be miraculous, else his stoning would have disabled him from walking. God had farther work for this great apostle to do; and therefore neither the wrath of men, nor the rage of the devil, could at that time cut him off.

21 ¶ And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, 22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must, through much tribulation, enter into the kingdom of God.

Observe here, The great and good use which the apostle makes of his miraculous recovery; he is no sooner upon his legs, but he travels to Derbe, to preach the gospel: nothing do the faithful ministers of Christ more fervently desire and more diligently endeavour, than to lay out their lives, their strength, their time, their all for God, in his service, and to his glory. Yet observe farther, that notwithstanding the apostles were persecuted at Lystra, and Iconium, yet they returned thither again; having planted churches there, they go back to water their own plantations. Persecutions did not, could not make them forsake the plantations which they had newly made. It is not enough that the seed of the word be sown, it must be watered also, otherwise it will fade and wither, languish and die: but what did the apostles do, when they returned to visit their new planted churches? Answer, 1. They confirmed and established them in the doctrine of the gospel; they exhorted them to steadfastness and perseverance in their holy religion, and armed them against the fears of affliction and persecution, for the sake of Christ and his holy religion; acquainting them, that they "must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of heaven." Afflictions, like the waters of Marah, must be met with in our way to the heavenly Canaan; there is no coming at the crown but by the cross; the head having been crowned with thorns, it is unsuitable that the feet should tread on roses. Christianity is the doctrine of the cross, which the ministers of Christ ought to let their people understand and know, that they may not "think strange of the fiery trial, as if some strange thing had befallen them; but rather rejoice, inasmuch as they are partakers of the sufferings of Christ; that when his glory shall be revealed, they may be glad also with exceeding joy." 1 Pet. iv. 12, 13.

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

Here we have two farther instances and evidences of the apostles' care of these now planted churches; and the first was to settle them in church order, ordaining elders in every church to be the guides and teachers of the rest, and this with fasting and prayer, in regard of the great solemnity and importance of the work. Hence learn, That ordination of ministers is a ministerial act; the officers of the church, and not the people, must separate and set apart, consecrate and ordain the persons who are to attend upon God and his church in holy things: when they, that is, Paul and Barnabas, had ordained them elders in every church. Learn, 2. That this solemn action ought to be very solemnly performed by fasting and prayer, "They ordained elders in every church, and prayed with fasting." The second instance of the apostolical care was, "their commending them to the Lord, on whom they had believed." That is, they committed them as young converts to the power of Christ, to strengthen and confirm them, and they committed them as their treasures to the care of Christ, to preserve and keep them. The greatest and best thing that the ministers of God can do, either present with, or absent from their people, is to commit and recommend them to the power and care of Christ, "who is able to keep them from falling, and to present them faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia;

26 And then sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

This last paragraph of the chapter acquaints us with the return of Paul and Barnabas to Antioch in Syria, from whence they set out two years before, and where they were, by the prayers of the church, most affectionately recommended to the grace and assistance of God, for carrying on of that great work, to wit, the conversion of the Gentiles; which God had abundantly succeeded them in. Learn thence, that the best provision and preparation for any business, especially any business of importance, wherein the glory of God is concerned, is fervent prayer: thus the apostles here, being sent out from Antioch with prayer, they return with praise: the Lord granted them both safety and success: safety as to their persons, and success as to their labors. Observe farther, being returned to Antioch, they call the church together, and declare the great things which God had done with them, and by them; to the intent, no doubt, that the church might join with them in their praises and thanksgivings, who had before assisted them with their prayers and supplications

"They rehearsed all that God had done with them," that he might have the entire praise and glory from them. Observe lastly, The subject matter of that report which they joyfully made to the church of Antioch; namely, how God had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles; that is, given them an opportunity to know, and ability to believe the gospel, which, like a door, was formerly shut to them, but now mercifully opened: and which was the far greater mercy yet. Almighty God did not only open the door of the gospel to them, by bringing his word amongst them, but he opened the door of their hearts to receive, and entertain it, when brought. The opening the heart and mind of sinners, effectually to receive the truths of the gospel, is the special work of the Holy Spirit of God. Lord! How insufficient are all external means, how excellent soever in themselves, to operate savingly upon men's minds, unless the Holy Spirit opens the understanding, as well as his ministers open the scriptures? He that opened the door of faith to the Gentiles, opened the Gentiles' hearts to receive the doctrine of faith, and inclined their wills to the obedience of faith. Eternally praised be God for the gracious illuminations, the sanctifying impressions, the powerful assistances, and the quickening influences of the Holy Ghost, which worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

CHAPTER XV.

This chapter relates the second journey of St. Paul and Barnabas from Antioch to Jerusalem, where the first and most famous general council was held for deciding of this question, whether the Gentiles converted to christianity, and living among the Jews, should be compelled to be circumcised, and observe the ceremonial law? which was determined in the negative, as the chapter informs us.

AND certain men, which came down from Judea, taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised, after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.

2 When, therefore, Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question.

Observe here, 1. How very forward satan and his instruments were to sow the seeds of discord and dissension among the converted christians at Antioch: he takes the first opportunity to break the church in pieces, before it was well settled. O the restless malice of an envious devil against the gospel and the kingdom of Christ: "certain men came down from Judea," no doubt of the devil's sending, to disquiet the brethren, and distress the church. Observe, 2. The bone of contention, thrown in by the false apostles, to disturb the disciples of Christ, and that was, the urging the necessity of circumcision, and imposing that part of the Mosaic yoke upon the neck of the converted Gentiles, excluding them from all hopes of salvation, unless they were circumcised; although circumcision was not commanded but only to the posterity of Abraham; and as to them also, had received its abolishment at the death of Christ. Observe, 3. With what warmth of zeal the meek apostle, St. Paul, opposes this antichristian design of introducing circumcision into the christian church; "Paul and Barnabas had no small disputation with them." He that could become all things to all men could not become sin to any man; he therefore enters the list with them, and earnestly contends for the faith of the gospel, urging, that by the death of Christ, we are freed from the whole ceremonial law; and that if circumcision were retained for the same reason, all the other ceremonies ought to be restored; for the circumcised person was obliged to observe the whole ceremonial law. Observe, 4. The prudent course which the disciples at Antioch took for the deciding of this controversy; they determined to send Paul and Barnabas up to Jerusalem, where, in a full and free synod of the apostles, the matter is debated, and finally decided. Learn hence, That the use of synods, or general assemblies of the bishops and pastors of the church, for deciding of controversies, for determining matters of faith, and directing to matters of practice, as it has been of ancient authority in the church of Christ, so it is of singular benefit and advantage both to ministers and people. Here Paul and Barnabas go up to the first synod, or general council at Jerusalem, to consult the apostles and elders about this question.

3 And, being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles; and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them.

Here note, 1. How that great but humble apostle, St. Paul, who had learned of his Master to be meek and lowly in spirit, was willing and content to be a servant and messenger of the church to the apostles, though he was nothing inferior to the chiefest apostles: "Paul and Barnabas went up to the apostles that were at Jerusalem." The more holiness a christian has, the more humility he has; humility is a great part of our holiness, it is an argument of our sincerity, and an ornament to our profession; it is the great design of the gospel to make us humble, and keep us humble. Note, 2. With what great pleasure and satisfaction Paul and Barnabas make report of the success of their ministry, both at Phenice, Samaria, and Jerusalem, in the conversion of the poor Gentiles, and with what joy the report was received and entertained; "They declared the conversion of the Gentiles, and it caused great joy unto all the brethren." Thence learn, That nothing more rejoices the hearts of believers, than the hearing of souls brought home to God by converting grace, and thereby of the increasing and enlarging of the kingdom of Jesus Christ: the Gentiles' conversion was joyful news to the saints at Jerusalem. Note, 3. With what great and due reverence and respect the church at Jerusalem received and entertained those laborious apostles, Paul and Barnabas, who were now sent unto them by the church at Antioch: "when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church:" that is, received with great veneration and regard for their indefatigable labors, in order to the Gentiles' conversion. Thence learn, That double honor and respect is certainly due and payable to such ministers of Christ as labor in the word and doctrine, and perform their duty to God and their people, with such zeal and application, as becomes persons of their holy character and profession. O how beautiful should the feet be of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things, even the joyful tidings of salvation, to the ears of a lost world?

5 But there arose up certain of the sect of the pharisees which believed, saying, that it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

6 ¶ And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.

That is, some Jews of the sect of the pharisees, converted to christianity; thought and taught, that circumcision, and keeping of the law of Moses, were necessary to salvation, both to Jew and Gentile christians. Where observe, 1. How early the sound doctrine of christianity, was corrupted by erring teachers. Observe, 2. That the spirit of infallibility, with which the apostles were at that time certainly endued, did not prevent the rise of controversies and disputes in the first ages of the church, nor yet silence and put an end to such disputes when risen; much less can a pretended infallible head of the church, and an unesring judge of controversies, now do it. Observe, 3. That errors and false opinions, creeping into a church, are not a sufficient warrant to forsake the communion of that church. We find here, that in the most primitive and purest churches, even whilst the apostles themselves were upon the spot, dangerous errors crept into the church, and proved of such fatal and pernicious consequences, that the apostle wishes "they were even cut off, that thus troubled them." Gal. iv. 12. Separation then from a church is not warrantable upon any other grounds, than that which makes a separation between God and that church, which is either the apostasy of that church into gross idolatry, or, in point of doctrine, into damnable heresy, Rev. 2. We read of Christ's walking among seven golden candlesticks; and although some of them were sufficiently besmeared, yet were they favored with Christ's gracious presence. Observe lastly, The regular and prudential means used by the apostles, for the suppressing of this error which endangered the church's purity, and for quenching of this spark of dissension, which threatened the church's peace; "they gathered together at Jerusalem to consider of the matter," that is, to consult about it, and debate upon it. Where note, 1. That though the apostles were inspired by the Holy Ghost, yet they made use of their own reason and judgment for the decision of this controversy; God's inspiration did not make the apostles' consolation needless, either for satisfying themselves, or silencing gain-sayers.

7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

8 And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us :

9 And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith.

10 Now, therefore, why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But we believe that through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved even as they.

Observe here, 1. The council assembled, the first and most famous council at Jerusalem, the council of councils : in other councils were holy bishops ; in this inspired apostles, who could not err in matters of faith. Observe, 2. The grand debate, or matter in controversy, namely, whether faith in Christ were not sufficient to justification, unless circumcision, and an observation of the ceremonial law, were joined with it. Observe, 3. The persons managing this debate : the three great apostles, St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. James. The first that speaks in the council is St. Peter : from whence the papists would infer, that he, as head of the church spake first ; and consequently that the pope, whom they will have to be St. Peter's successor, ought to have the first and chief voice in all general councils : but all this is but presumption ; for we shall find, at verse 13, St. James who was then bishop of Jerusalem, says Hearken unto me ; and, at verse 19, gives the definitive sentence, saying, My sentence is ; or thus I judge and determine. Had St. Peter said this, it had been a better proof of his pre-eminency, and made a louder noise than Pasce oves. Observe, 4. St. Peter's argument, to prove that the believing Gentiles might be justified and saved without circumcision, and the observation of the ceremonial law. The argument runs thus, "The way of justification for all men, both Jew and Gentile, is one and the same ; but Cornelius, a Gentile, with his whole family, by the blessing of God upon my ministry, was converted and justified without being circumcised, therefore circumcision, and the observation of the ceremonial law, ought not to be imposed as necessary to justification and salvation." Observe, 5. How St. Peter strengthens his argument, by declaring that what was done to Cornelius and his family, was by the special command of God ; that God gave testimony of his approbation of Cornelius, as the first-fruits of the Gentiles, by sending down the Holy Ghost upon him and his, as well as upon us and ours by purifying their hearts by faith. When note, 1. That purifying begins at the heart, not at the head, nor at the hands, but at the heart ; the head may be purified from false principles, the hands from false practices, and yet the heart remain unpurified, and continue a sink of pollution and uncleanness ; therefore we must purify our hearts as well as cleanse our hands ; yea, first begin with our hearts : "Having purified their hearts by faith." Note, 2. That as purifying begins at the heart, but must not end there ; so faith is the instrumental cause of our purification : the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin meritoriously, the spirit of Christ efficiently : but faith is the instrument in the hand of the Spirit, which apprehends and applies the merit of that blood for pardon and purification. Observe, 6. The character given by St. Peter of the ceremonial law ; he calls it a yoke, an intolerable yoke, too heavy to be borne by the Jews themselves, much more the Gentiles whose necks God never designed this yoke for, but for the seed of Abraham only. Now the law of-ceremonies imposed upon the Jews, might well be called a yoke, if we consider, 1. Their number and variety : they were a multitude of legal observances. 2. Their burden and difficulty ; the ceremonial law was a most laborious administration of a very painful service. 3. They were very costly and chargeable ; so many bullocks, rams, and lambs for sacrifice, that the misers of this age would think themselves undone with the expense. 4. Their insufficiency ; they were only shadows of good things to come, and could not make the observers of them perfect. Thus was the ceremonial law in itself a yoke and burden ; and the imposing of it upon the Gentiles is called a tempting of God ; that is, a dangerous provoking of him, because it never belonged to them, but to the Jews only, which yet were never able to bear it : that is, so to observe it, as to be justified and saved by it. Learn thence, That it was never the intent or design of God, that his people should be justified by their obedience to the ceremonial law ; but that being pressed with the weight, and pinched with the uneasiness of the yoke, they should seek unto Christ for righteousness and life, who alone was the fulfiller of it. There was this difference between the ceremonial and moral law : the ceremonial law was therefore good, because God commanded it ; the moral law was therefore commanded, because good : Christ, by his death, abrogated the former ; but by the obedience of his life, fulfilled the latter.

12 ¶ Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.

The second speech made in this council, was that of Barnabas and Paul, who declared what miracles God had enabled them to work among the Gentiles, which was an evidence of God's approbation of the Gentiles, though uncircumcised, and that he was pleased with their administration among them. Hence they conclude very well, that the miracles wrought among the Gentiles, and the Holy Ghost descending upon the Gentiles, was God's approving testimony in the case, that the believing Gentiles, without circumcision, should find no less acceptance with God than the believing Jews, who were of the circumcision.

13 ¶ And, after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me;

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophet; as it is written,

16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up;

17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.

Observe here, 1. The excellent order in which this grand debate was managed by the apostles; they do not break in upon one another, like proud magisterial talkers, so full of themselves, that they could not hear one another speak; but while one speaks, all the rest silently and attentively hear, no one stopping another by rude and uncivil interruption; "after they had held their peace, James answered." Observe, 2. The third and last speech uttered at this council at Jerusalem, was by St. James the bishop, and residuary apostle of the place: James said, "Hearken unto me." Where note, 1. He puts the council in mind of the special favor and grace of God in sending the gospel among the Gentiles, which he calls his visiting of them; and the design of God in that gracious visitation, namely, to take out of the Gentile world a people for his name. Hence learn, 1. That when God gives his gospel to a people, he gives that people a merciful and gracious visitation. 2. That God's design in visiting a nation with and by the gospel, is to take out of them, and from amongst them, a people for his name: that is, a people to call upon his name, a people to be called by his name, and a people to honor and glorify to advance and magnify his holy name. Note, 2. With what wisdom and caution St. James, the president of the council, proceeds in the final deciding of this controversy: he proposes a mean betwixt the two extremes, between those that would have all the Mosaic rites imposed, and those that would have none at all; designing by this medium, that neither the Jews should be too much offended, or the Gentiles too heavily burdened; but brotherly love between both be maintained and preserved. Note, 3. How St. James, in deciding of this controversy, appeals to scripture, ver. 15. "To this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written;" not to the authority of the council: the holy canon of the scriptures ought to overrule all debates; this is the infallible judge, which all the councils are to appeal to, and none must presume to appeal from. Note, lastly, that the sum of the council's determination came to this: that circumcision should not be imposed upon the Gentiles, that the Gentiles nevertheless should so far Judaize or comply with the Jews, as to abstain from meats offered to idols, from things strangled, and from blood, and from fornication: all which are called indifferent things, because the three first were made so by the death of Christ, (after which there was to be no more distinction, either of meats or nations) and the fourth, namely, fornication, is reckoned amongst the indifferent things, because the Gentiles, though falsely, did think and speak it to be so: non est flagitium adolescentem scortari. To prevent therefore giving offence to the Jews, the Gentiles are required to abstain from these things, till time and fuller acquaintance with the gospel did better inform them concerning their christian liberty. From this example, learn that whenever differences do arise in a church about tolerable matters, and indifferent things, the nearest course to unity, and a charitable compliance, is for both parties to step towards, and meet one another; and what may be left at liberty without apparent prejudice to purity, to be left for peace sake.

21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.

22 ¶ Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas, surnamed Barnabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23 And wrote letters by them after this manner, the apostles, and elders, and brethren, send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia;

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law; to whom we gave no such commandment:

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you, with our beloved Barnabas and Paul:

26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27 We have sent, therefore, Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth.

28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things :

29 That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication ; from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

Observe here, 1. That though the apostles were the infallible deciders, yet the elders, and the whole church, were unanimous consenters ; for no contradiction to this determination of this controversy did arise from any hand, but there was an happy acquiescency in this apostolical decision ; It pleased the elders, and the whole church. Observe, 2. The decrees of this synod, and the determinations of this council of Jerusalem, are committed to writing, and dispatched by unprejudiced messengers of their own to the church of the Gentiles, which was at Antioch. In which decretal epistle, 1. The false apostles, who started this controversy, are sharply reprov'd. 2. Paul and Barnabas, for their courage and constancy, are highly commended. 3. Judas and Silas are mentioned, to testify, that these decrees were not forged nor counterfeited. 4. That it would conduce much to their advantage to have these decrees duly observed. Observe, 3. The divine authority of these decrees, they were dictated and directed by the Holy Ghost ; "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us ;" That is, it seemed good unto us, being directed and assisted by the Holy Ghost, whose inspiration and conduct we have followed, not to impose unnecessary things upon you. Where note, That the Holy Ghost is against imposing unnecessary things as necessary, making them the terms of church-communion. Here are four things imposed ; namely, abstaining from meats offered to idols, from blood, from fornication, and from things strangled ; but they are called necessary things. Two of them, to wit, abstaining from fornication, and from things offered to idols, were of a simple and absolute necessity ; the other two, namely, abstaining from things strangled, and from blood, were of an accidental and temporary necessity for the present time, and to avoid giving scandal to the weak Jews, till they should be better informed, and better understand their liberty in Christ ; for afterwards, St. Paul showed that no creature of God is unclean, but that unto the pure all things are pure ; 1. Tim. iv. 4. Tit. i. 15.

30 So when they were dismissed they came to Antioch : and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle :

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation.

Observe here, 1. With what fidelity and care Paul and Barnabas, and Judas and Silas, delivered this decretal epistle to the church of Antioch : That is, to the whole body of christians, believing Jews and Gentiles, then and there assembled ; "When they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle ;" That is, they called the whole church together and presented the epistle to them. Observe, 2. How this decree was received, namely, with universal joy and satisfaction. When they had read, they rejoiced. Every one in this christian council was a star devoted by his office to lead men to Christ ; but now, being gathered together, and condensed into a council, they become a most bright and glorious constellation, every way prepared, by the emanations of heavenly light to guide the church, in this obscure affair ; and accordingly their authority being so illustrious and commanding, and the decree so pious and prudential, their determination was received with universal satisfaction. "They delivered the epistle, which when they had read, they rejoiced." Observe, 3. What was the subject matter of their joy, and the special occasion of their rejoicing ; They rejoiced for the consolation : That is, for the great consolation which they had, in being free from the burthen of the legal ceremonies, though originally of divine institution, and appointed by God himself. From whence we learn, that liberty from tedious ceremonies, though originally of divine institution, much more a freedom from superstitious ceremonies of human invention, is a matter of great joy to the church of Christ. Lord, what numerous and burdensome ceremonies has the church of Rome imposed upon her blind votaries ? When in their worship they would be thought truly zealous, they are really ridiculous. They please themselves, perhaps, but cannot please their Maker ; all the acceptance they will find with God will be signified to them in that chiding question, "Who hath required these things at your hands ?"

32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

34 Notwithstanding, it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35 Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

Judas and Silas being prophets ; that is, persons extraordinarily inspired, and endued with eminent gifts for teaching and interpreting the holy scriptures ; they employed themselves at Antioch, confirming and building up their brethren in the faith of Christ. And after they had stayed at Antioch some time, they were with all kindness dismissed of the church there ; and Judas returned to Jerusalem, to acquaint the apostles with the reception which their letter had met with, and what obedience was readily given to their decrees.

36 ¶ And, some days after, Paul said unto Barnabas, let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

Observe here, The pious and prudential care, which St. Paul, who had planted churches, takes to visit and inspect them; that he might see and understand how they did thrive and grow in the knowledge of Christ, and in their sincere obedience to him. This great apostle had been sowing the good seed of the word of God: his next care is, to examine and inquire, whether the envious ones had not sowed tares in his absence. A minister's work, and a husbandman's business are never at an end, but run round in a circle: redit labor actus in orbem; after ploughing and sowing, there must be weeding and watering, before reaping and ingathering. Accordingly, St. Paul resolves upon the visitation here mentioned; "let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do." Here note, 1. The visitors, Paul and Barnabas. 2. They visited our brethren, both the elders and members of the church. 3. The action performed, visiting: the word imports a strict view, a most diligent and solicitous scrutiny, lest some errors in their absence might be crept into the doctrine and conversation of these new-planted churches. 4. The place where the visitation is to be held, "in every city where they had preached the word of the Lord:" where they had planted, they were obliged to water: and where they had begotten any to the christian faith, they thought it their duty to nurture and nourish them; and therefore thought there were presbyters no doubt in every city, yet Paul and Barnabas challenged to themselves a power of visitation, where they had personally preached. The apostles who first converted them, had a peculiar right to inspect and govern them. Converted souls, and planted churches, must be farther visited, observed, and watered. 5. The end and design of the visitation, to see how they do, and what they do; to take an account of their faith and practice. From the whole, observe, 1. A disease which the churches of the apostles own planting were supposed to be liable and obnoxious to; the purest of churches, and best of men in this military and mortal state, are apt to fall into distempers, witness this chapter: where we find the converted Jews nauseating the bread of life, and making it their choice to pick and eat the rubbish of the partition-wall which Christ had demolished; I mean circumcision, and the legal ceremonies, which though expired at the death of Christ, and by this time had an honorable burial, yet they attempt to pull out of their graves, and give a resurrection to them. Such distempers will be in the purest churches, if we consider the hereditary corruption which is in all by nature; the remains of it in those who are renewed by grace, and the endeavours of satan, to solicit these remains, and invite them forth into act and exercise. Observe, 2. The remedy resolved upon for preventing and healing of this disease: namely, apostolical visitation, and episcopal inspection, as the word signifies: the constitution of the church is such, that it cannot continue long in repair, without inspection and government. For though the universal church is secure, being built upon a rock: yet particular churches are liable to dilapidations; and accordingly it is the duty of the governors of the church, frequently to inspect the authority of those who preach, to examine their doctrines, to inquire into their lives, to give rules for preserving order, and to censure those who neglect those rules, and disturb that order. In fine, we see the church of Christ must be governed; in that government there must be a superiority in some, and a subordination in others: superiors must frequently visit, and narrowly inspect the doctrine, the lives and manners, both of the ministers and members of the church, according to the practice and example of these two great apostles, Paul and Barnabas, who said, "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city, where we have preached the word, and see how they do."

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches.

St. Paul having made a motion to Barnabas, in the foregoing verses, to visit and inspect the new-planted churches, Barnabas very readily complied with the motion, but desired that he might take his nephew John Mark along with him: this St. Paul consented not unto; because he left them at Pamphylia, and did not accompany them constantly in preaching the gospel to the Gentiles. St. Paul was in the right; Mark's cowardice in leaving them when they undertook a tedious and hazardous journey to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, was a considerable objection against his present going with them, and weighed more than his consanguinity or nearness of blood to Barnabas. Accordingly, St. Paul insisted upon it, that he should not go now along with them; but this occasioned a very sharp and unhappy contention between them; insomuch, that those two great and good men parted asunder, Barnabas going to Cyprus, and St. Paul to Cilicia; but God overruled this evil for good, causing their separation to tend to the publication and farther spreading of the gospel. Hence learn, 1. How industrious, yea, ambitious the devil is to sow the seeds of discord and dissension amongst the members, but especially amongst the ministers of Jesus Christ; and how ready he is to take all occasions to divide them. These holy men of God, these great apostles, whose hearts were united in the work of God, and went hand in hand together, to plant and propagate the everlasting gospel, divide among themselves, and are parted by satan's policy and their own passions,

Learn, 2. That the holiest and wisest of men are but men; men of like passions with other men, and whilst on this side of heaven, not wholly free from passionate infirmities. These two great apostles verified here by their actions, what they affirmed before in their words, Acts xiv. 15. We are men of like passions with you. Learn, 3. That natural affections are apt to overweigh the wisest and best of men. Barnabas' great love to his kinsman here, prevailed contrary to his judgment. Learn, 4. That such is the wisdom, power, and goodness of God, that he knows how to bring good out of the greatest evil, and to overrule sin itself, and make it subservient to his own glory and the church's good. The Lord was pleased to overrule these divisions and dissensions betwixt Paul and Barnabas, for enlarging the kingdom of Christ, and for spreading the gospel farther into several nations. Observe lastly, How this reflection upon John Mark's faint-heartedness in declining the hardships and the hazards of the ministry, made him for the future more vigilant and valiant in the cause of the gospel, which occasioned that kind salutation which St Paul gives him, Col. iv. 10. Though sin be only evil, absolutely evil, and infinitely evil; yet the wisdom and goodness of God sanctifies the miscarriages of his saints, rendering them more humble for the time passed, and more watchful and vigilant for time to come. Thus it was with Mark here: he was humbled for his sin, and afterwards became profitable to St. Paul for the ministry, was his fellow-laborer; and the apostle gives a special charge to the Colossians to entertain him kindly whenever he should come unto them, Col. iv. 10. Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas; when he comes unto you, receive him.

CHAPTER XVI.

THEN came he to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2 Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him because of the Jews, which were in those quarters; for they all knew that his father was a Greek.

The latter end of the foregoing chapter gave us a sad account of a dissension and difference arising between Paul and Barnabas, upon which they parted; Barnabas sails for Cyprus; but what success he had there, the scripture says not. St. Paul goes through Syria, and Cilicia, confirming the churches, and doing good service for God in his peregrinations and travels. Here observe, That St. Paul and Silas, before they set forth to their work, were in a solemn manner (by prayer) recommended by the brethren to the grace of God, chap. xv. 40. And accordingly their labors are succeeded and blessed. Barnabas and Mark set forth for Cyprus; but we read not of any solemn recommendation of them by the brethren to the grace of God; not a word of any success they had in their work: teaching us the great necessity of fervent prayer to precede, accompany and follow the preaching of the gospel. Let ministers pray, and people pray, and engage all the prayers they can for the success of their ministry. Lord, let me steep that seed I sow amongst thy people in tears and prayers before I scatter it! Oh pour out thy Spirit with thy word, that it may be mighty through God for pulling down of strong-holds! Verily there is so little efficacy in ordinances, for want of fervent wrestlings with God in prayer. Observe next, The places which Paul and Silas in their travels first came unto; namely, Derbe and Lystra, where he finds young Timothy, whom he takes along with him, and breeds him up for a gospel minister, calls him his fellow worker, and companion in his travels. Note farther, The account here given of Timothy's birth and parentage; his mother Eunice was a believing Jewess; his father was a Greek, a Gentile; for which reason Timothy was not circumcised, because it was not lawful for the mother to have her child circumcised against her husband's consent. Now St. Paul intending to take Timothy along with him as his companion in preaching the gospel, that his ministry might be the more acceptable to the Jews, who knew him to be circumcised, because the son of an uncircumcised father, he takes him and circumcises him; but at the same time, Titus, who was a Gentile, both by father and mother, him he would not circumcise, neither suffering the yoke of circumcision to be laid upon the Gentiles, which God had never imposed, nor would he seem to countenance those who held circumcision necessary to salvation. Oh what an admirable pattern has this great and humble apostle left to posterity! he became all things to all men, and either used or refused indifferent things according as the use or disuse of them tended to the church's edification, and men's salvation. From whence learn, That in things not absolutely necessary to salvation, christians ought to act prudentially, and either do, or not do, some things of lesser moment, according as it may promote, and best conduce to, the church's peace and edification.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders, which were at Jerusalem.

5 And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

The sense is this, That as Paul and Silas passed through the cities in Syria and Cilicia, they delivered to the several churches, as they passed along, the decrees to observe, which were ordained by the apostles and elders met in council at Jerusalem, whereby those churches were established in the faith, and many more every day converted unto Christ. Here note, 1. The messengers which delivered these decrees, Paul and Silas, with a special regard unto the church's unity and peace. Behold here an excellent pattern for christians in general and the ministers of the gospel in particular; as to maintain truth, so to procure, promote, and preserve the church's peace. Truth and peace which God has joined together, Zech. viii. 19. let none dare to put asunder. Note, 2. What it was that St. Paul here made the delivery of, the decrees made by the apostles and elders at Jerusalem: not the decrees made by the whole church, but by the ministers of the church only. None so fit to determine church differences, as church officers. Note, 3. To whom these decrees were delivered; namely to the churches as they passed along through the several cities; so many cities, so many churches: the whole company of christians within a city, and adjacent territory, were wont to be framed into a christian society or church, and several congregations made but one church. To set up churches against churches, to set up churches in churches, and to gather churches out of churches, has no precedent, no warrant, no countenance from any phrase of scripture, or practice of the apostles' times. Note, 4. The end for which these decrees were delivered; namely, to bring all the churches to unity and uniformity; to unity in judgment, and uniformity in practice, that they might all be of one heart, and one way. Learn thence, That unity and uniformity among the churches of Christ, is a thing to be earnestly desired and endeavoured: their unity is their strength and beauty both. Note, lastly, The success and fruit of the delivery of these decrees to the churches, ver. 4. So were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily. Where observe, A double blessing accruing to the churches, the one of confirmation, So were the churches established; the other of augmentation, They increased in number daily. Learn, 1. That as divisions do shake and unsettle, so unity and uniformity do establish and confirm the church of Christ: So were the churches established. 2. That it is a blessed thing to hear of the church's increasing, provided it be a way of addition, not division: to hear of the churches multiplying, by the number of converts increasing, is happy; but to multiply churches by breaking churches in pieces, is a sad multiplication. The Lord keep his church from such increases! and the Lord pardon those, who, for private interest, have so increased churches by gathering churches out of churches, pretendingly for greater purity sake, but really for worldly advantage sake! Doctrines crying up purity to the ruin of unity, reject; for the gospel calls for unity as well as for purity.

6 Now, when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, 7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not.

Observe here, How the apostle and his companions had a desire and design to propagate the gospel in several provinces, but were forbidden by a secret impulse of the Holy Spirit. Learn thence, That the frustrating our attempts and disappointing our designs to preach the gospel to particular places, which we were purposed to go unto, doth sometimes arise from the Holy Ghost: the apostle intended to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered him not. The very journeyings of the apostles, and first preachers of the gospel, as well as their divine exercises, were all ordered by the wisdom and will of God; they might neither speak, nor act, nor walk, but according to divine directions: They were forbidden by the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia. Thus Almighty God at pleasure orders the candle of the gospel to be removed out of one room into another, sends it from one place and people to another, and accordingly ought all places and persons to prize it highly, and improve it faithfully.

8 And they, passing by Mysia, came down to Troas.

9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And, after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

These words are a relation of a message from heaven unto St. Paul, to direct him in his preaching and publishing of the gospel, both as to the place where, and as to the persons to whom he was to deliver it. Where note, The manner of it; it was by a vision, A vision appeared. The time of it, it was in the night; the bringer of it, a man of Macedonia; the matter of it, help for the Macedonians, interpreted ver. 10, to be by the preaching of the gospel. Learn hence, 1. That no men in the world want help like them that want the gospel: of all distresses, want of the gospel cries loudest for relief and help; for by want of the gospel they want every thing that is worth having; they want Jesus Christ, who is revealed only by the gospel. They want communion with God; they want the comforts and refreshments of ordinances; and they will at last want heaven and salvation. But that which is most deplorable is this, those that want the gospel, though they want all these things, yet are they not sensible that they want any thing. Learn, 2. That the sending of the gospel to one nation, place or people, and not to another, proceeds from the determinate will and pleasure of Almighty God, and is the effect of his own free grace and good pleasure: stay not in Asia, go not into Bithynia, but come over into Macedonia; Even so, Father, for thus it seemeth good in thy sight.

11 Therefore, loosing from Troas, we came with a straight coast to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis:

12 And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And, on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river-side, where prayer was wont to be made: and we sat down; and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

14 ¶ And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house and abide there. And she constrained us.

A farther account is here given of St. Paul's travels to preach the gospel; he departs from Troas to Samothracia, from hence to Neapolis, and thence to Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia. Here on the sabbath day he went out of the city to the river's side, where a meeting-place for prayer say some, was built, and made use of as being remote from the noise and observation of the multitude. In this oratory St. Paul preaches to the women, they being both most numerous and most zealous, and God gives him the seal of his ministry in the conversion of Lydia. In which famous conversion, observe how particular the Holy Ghost is in relating the several circumstances belonging to it: she is described by her person and sex, a certain woman; by her name, Lydia; by her calling and employment, a seller of purple; by her city, Thyatira; by her pious disposition, she worshipped God. Her conversion is described, 1. By the efficient cause of it; the Lord opened her heart. By the instrumental cause of it; her attending to the things that were spoken of Paul. Learn, 1. That the hearts of persons are naturally shut up, and fast barred against Jesus Christ. 2. That the opening of the heart to receive Jesus Christ, is the peculiar effect of the sovereign power, and omnipotent grace of God. 3. That till God opens the heart of a sinner, the preaching of the gospel little affecteth, though never so plainly and persuasively preached. That when once the heart is opened, the ear will not be shut, the person is truly attentive to the preaching of the gospel; The Lord opened Lydia's heart and she attended. Observe next, The seal of her conversion and salvation received by her, she was baptized, and her whole house. It was the ordinary way of the apostles to baptize householders; not that they were sure that they were all believers, or that the family-governors could make them so; but it was their duty to devote all in their power to God, and to do their utmost to persuade: and God usually succeeded their endeavours. Note here, That the church of God, for near seventeen hundred years, never refused the baptizing of infants of believing parents, as being taken into covenant with themselves. Having then for so many ages been in the possession of this privilege, we may more reasonably require the anabaptists to prove by express scripture, that children were not baptized by the apostles, (when they baptized who's families, yea, whole nations, according to their commission, Mat. xxviii. 19.) than they can require us to prove that they were. Lydia and her house were baptized, says the text, that is, says the Syriac, Lydia and her children. Lydia, by reason of her faith in Christ, having a right to baptism, all her family, upon her undertaking to bring them up in the knowledge of Christ, were admitted to the ordinance with her. Observe lastly, A special fruit and evidence of Lydia's conversion, she constrained the apostles with an amicable violence: by fervent entreaties and passionate importunities, to receive the civilities of her house. Converted persons have so much love to Christ's ministers, who were the instruments of their conversion, that they greatly desire to express it by all acts of possible kindness; If ye have judged me faithful, come into my house, and abide there; and she constrained us

16 ¶ And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by sooth-saying:

17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned, and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

19 ¶ And, when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers, 20 And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city.

21 And teach customs which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

22 And the multitude rose up together against them; and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And, when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely:

24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

As we went to prayer, a damsel possessed met us. That is, as the apostles went towards the forementioned place of prayer, a damsel possessed with a devil, by whose inspiration she foretold future things, and revealed many secrets to them that consulted her, followed them, crying out, These are the servants of the most high God, who declare unto us the way of salvation. Where observe, 1. That the father of lies sometimes speaks the truth, though never for truth's sake, but for his own advantage: here what the devil said was truth, but it was for devilish ends; he transforms himself now into an angel of light, to draw men on to believe him, the prince of darkness. Observe, 2. How St. Paul refuses the devil's testimony concerning himself, even when he spake the truth. The testimony of truth from the father of lies, is enough to render truth itself suspected. Observe, 3. The authority which St. Paul takes upon him in the name of Christ to dispossess the devil, and cast him out of the damsel: Paul said, I command thee in the name of Jesus to come out of her: and he came out the same hour. These words St. Paul uttered by the motion of the Holy Spirit, and relying by faith on the promise of Christ made by himself to his apostles, Mark xvi. 17. That in his name they should cast out devils; accordingly he received power from on high to cast out this darling devil. Observe, 4. How satan seeks to be revenged on Paul for dispossessing of him; he raises up an hot persecution, and soon casts him into prison, who had cast the devil out of the damsel. If we disturb and trouble satan, he will be sure to trouble and disturb us. Such ministers as make the greatest opposition against satan, must expect to meet with the greatest opposition from him. Observe, 5. Who were the instruments which satan stirs up to raise up this persecution against the apostles; they were the rulers and the rabble; The multitude rose up, and the magistrates rent their clothes, cast them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks. Thus were the holy apostles, and innocent servants of Jesus Christ imprisoned, and treated as the vilest malefactors, only for opposing satan, and seeking the welfare of mankind. Observe lastly, That love of money was the root of all this persecution. The damsel's masters perceiving that their gain was gone, and that she could help them to no more money by telling people their fortunes, the devil of discontent possessed them. They stir up persecution against the apostles, they cast them into prison, into the inward prison, and to make all sure, set them in the stocks.

25 ¶ And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God; and the prisoners heard them.

26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison-doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

The apostles are here, by satan and his instruments, cast into prison; but observe, they have their prison comforts:

1. The joy of their hearts run out of their lips, they sang praises unto God, when their bodies were in prison, and their feet were in the stocks; these holy servants of God were not only meek and patient, but joyous and cheerful under persecution, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for him who had undergone so much indignity and shame for them. 2. They enjoy sweet communion with God in prayer; At midnight they prayed, and the prisoners heard them: no place can be improper, no time unseasonable for prayer. No prison can bolt out God, nor deprive us of our communion with him; prayer will get up to heaven in spite of all the opposition, either of hell or earth. Observe, 3. How sudden the answer, and how sensible the return of prayer was which the Lord graciously gave his suffering servants: Suddenly there was a great earthquake. This earthquake was an infallible sign of God's audience; that he heard them, and would stand by them. Observe, 4. The powerful efficacy of St. Paul's prayer; his prayer shook the heavens, the heavens shook the earth, the earth shook the prison, even to the very foundations of it. Prayer has a divine kind of omnipotency in it: Vincit invincibilem et ligat omnipotentem; "It overcomes God with his own strength." Observe, 5. What influence this earthquake had upon the jailor, it occasioned such a heart-quake in him, that to give himself ease, silly soul, he resolves to murder himself. Lord! how miserable are the consolations which the carnal and unregenerate world have recourse and fly unto, when trouble and distress take hold upon them? They run to an halter, to rid them of their trouble, having no God to go unto, and thereby plunge themselves into endless troubles, yea, eternal torments. Observe lastly, How kind the apostle was to his cruel keeper; he that hurt the apostle's feet in the stocks, hears the apostle crying to him in the midst of the earthquake, Do thyself no harm. Good men ever have been, and are men of tender and compassionate dispositions; not so solicitous for their own liberties, as for others lives. The apostles might have held their peace, and suffered the jailor to have slain himself, and thereby made their own escape: but they preferred the jailor's eternal salvation, before their own temporal liberty and happiness. Paul cried out with a loud voice, saying, do thyself no harm.

29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas;

30 And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

31 And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved: and thy house.

32 And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

As if the jailor had said, "Sirs, now I see and acknowledge that the doctrine taught by you, is the truth of the eternal God; and he hath by this miraculous earthquake testified to me, that you are his true and faithful servants; tell me therefore, I beseech you, what I must do to attain salvation?" They answer, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, &c. That is, "if you and your family receive the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and regulate your lives according to it, you shall be saved." Here note, 1. That scorners and persecutors will become tremblers, when once God hath touched their hearts, and wounded their consciences with remorse for sin. The jailor here came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas; trembling under a sense of his guiltiness, and falling down upon his knees to ask them forgiveness. Note, 2. That trembling sinners are always inquisitive, yea, very inquisitive persons: an awakened conscience will put a man upon inquiry, upon great and much inquiry, what he should do. Note, 3. That the chief thing which the trembling soul inquires after, is the business of salvation. What shall I do to be saved? Note, 4. That trembling sinners, and troubled souls, must be directed to Jesus Christ, and to faith in him, as the only way to obtain salvation by him; believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway.

Behold how sudden and strange a change was wrought in this jailor! Before his conversion he was cruel, barbarous, and hard-hearted: now he is meek, merciful, and compassionate. He that before had beaten, imprisoned, and hurt the holy apostles' feet in the stocks, now pities them, mourns over them, and washes their stripes. Learn thence, that religion, and the grace of God, softens and mollifies the hardest hearts, sweetens the sourest natures, and changes the most barbarous and bloody dispositions. Behold this jailor, before his conversion, a savage persecutor, a tiger, and a vulture, like the den-niac in the gospel, exceeding fierce, but now dispossessed of his fury, and by grace turned into a lamb for meekness, and a dove for innocency. Observe, 2. How the jailor believing, he and all his house were baptized. The apostle denied not baptism, to the jailor's household, upon the jailor's sincere profession of the christian faith; yet no doubt he promised to use his utmost endeavours to bring them to the knowledge and obedience of Jesus Christ. Observe, lastly, How improbable it is that the jailor and his household were baptized by dipping: we do not deny the lawfulness of baptizing by immersion, but we cannot assert the absolute and indispensable necessity of it. St. Paul, who was newly washed, and his sores dressed, occasioned by stripes, cannot be supposed either to go out himself, or to carry the jailor and his family in the dead of the night, to the river or a pond to baptize them; neither is it in the least probable, that St. Paul himself was baptized by dipping: See Acts ix. 18, 19. "He arose and was baptized, and when he had received meat, he was strengthened." The contest may convince us, that he was baptized in his lodgings, being sick and weak, having fasted three days, and being in a very low condition, partly by his miraculous vision, and partly by his extraordinary fasting; it was no ways probable that Ananias should carry him out to a river in that condition, to plunge him in cold water. Dipping then, surely, cannot be so essential unto baptism, as for want of it to pronounce the baptism of all the reformed churches throughout the world, to be null and void, as some amongst us do.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

No. 35.

See here, a special evidence, and sweet fruit of the jailor's conversion; he brings the apostles, who were the instruments of his conversion, into his house; and having washed their stripes, refreshes their bowels: he sets meat before them. The truth of conversion will manifest itself in all thankfulness, and other tokens of respect towards those whom God has made the instruments of our conversion. True conversion changes men's thoughts of God's ministers, and causes men to love and honour those whom before they did disdain and scorn, persecute and hate. Observe, 2. How full of joy and spiritual rejoicing this new convert was, he rejoiced. Oh the sweet fruit of faith in Christ! namely, peace with God, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Conversion always puts men into a joyful state: rejoicing, spiritual rejoicing is the portion, the proper portion and the peculiar portion of converted persons, as it is sometimes their present portion: the jailor, upon his believing in God, instantly rejoiced.

35 And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, the magistrates have sent to let you go; now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them, they have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay, verily; but let them come themselves, and fetch us out.

Observe here, 1. The willingness of the magistrate to release those innocent prisoners, the holy apostles, and what might be the probable occasion of it; namely, 1. The terror of the earthquake which affected them with fear. 2. The consciousness of their own guilt from the injurious dealing with the apostles, scourging them, and casting them into prison, only for casting a devil out of a possessed servant. The consciences of the vilest and worst of men, at one time or other, do make serious reflections upon them for their cruelty and injustice towards the ministers and members of Jesus Christ. Observe, 3. How the innocent apostles refused to be thus clandestinely released, and privately brought out of prison: they were unjustly laid in prison, and without any legal trial scourged and bound, contrary to the law and privileges of the Romans; and therefore the apostles insist upon their privilege, and would not be content with a sneaking clandestine dismissal, after such a public ignominious punishment, injuriously inflicted on them. Learn thence, that it is lawful to plead our right by law against unjust magistrates; and though we must not return evil for evil, yet we may use all lawful means for redressing and removing our own grievances. Thus did St. Paul here; yet more for the gospel's sake than his own, lest the word of God should be despised with their persons.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them and departed.

Observe here, 1. What an awe God has over the consciences of men in general, and of magistrates in particular: they stoop to their prisoners, and beseech them to come out of prison, and depart from the city. The same can God do for all his servants who have been disgracefully and spitefully used. He can make their enemies become their benefactors at his pleasure, and their very persecutors shall be their deliverers. Observe, 2. That, as desirable as liberty was, those honest hearts chose rather to go without it, than to accept it upon dishonorable terms, either to the blemishing of their innocency, or to the aspersion of the gospel. Had they been privately released, they might have been publicly slandered, for making their escape by compact with the jailor, whom they had now made their own; therefore they stay in prison, till publicly discharged, and then they go forth; the magistrates besought them, and brought them forth. Observe, 3. The holy use which these good men made of their restored liberty: they visit the brethren, and comfort them, and confirm them, and strengthen them in the faith of Christ. Thus this chapter concludes with an account of what St. Paul did and suffered at Philippi; where he laid the foundation of that eminent church, to which he wrote his epistle, which bears the title of his epistle to the Philippians: wherein he mentions many fellow-laborers that he had there, in the work of the gospel, Phil. iv. 3. "Help those which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement, and other my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life." It is an happy encouragement to the ministers of Christ, when they are all found helping and not hindering one another, strengthening each other's hands, and not saddening one another's hearts; but by united endeavours, in public preaching, and private inspection, promoting the grand design of the gospel; namely, to fear God, honor their superiors, love one another. So be it.

CHAP. XVII.

This foregoing chapter acquaints us with the travels of St. Paul to Lystra and Philippi, and also with the hard usage which he met with at both places: at Lystra he cured a cripple, and was stoned for it; at Philippi he cast out a devil, and was scourged and imprisoned for it. Thus bonds and afflictions did abide him wherever he went. To do good, and to suffer evil, is the portion of the ministers and members of Christ.

NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews.

2 And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the scriptures.

3 Opening and alledging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ.

This chapter begins with St. Paul's travels to Thessalonica, the chief city of Macedonia, where this apostle gathered a famous church, unto which he wrote two excellent epistles. Coming to Thessalonica at this time, he went, (as his manner was) into the synagogue, not into a private house. As Christ taught daily in the temple, so did his apostles teach in the synagogues; it was the false apostles that crept into houses, and led captive silly women, as St. Paul complains, 2 Tim. iii. 6: Truth seeks no corners, but rejoices to be publicly seen: besides, the gospel was first to be preached to the Jews, and upon their rejection, to the Gentiles. Accordingly the apostle takes the advantage of the synagogue, where all the Jews were gathered together, and preaches to them Jesus and the resurrection. Where observe, the first grand point which the apostle insisted upon, was to demonstrate that this Jesus whom he preached, was the long expected Messiah. Now to prove this, he produces the prophecies of the Old Testament, and compares them with what was both done and suffered by Christ, making all things as plain and obvious to the eye of their understanding, as if they had been seen with their bodily eyes, satisfactorily demonstrating to their judgments, that Jesus is the Christ. Observe, lastly, how the gospel is like the sea, what is lost in one place is gained in another; St. Paul is sent away from Philippi, but by that means the gospel was preached at Thessalonica. God overrules the motions of his ministers, and the madness and malice of their persecutors for the furtherance and spreading of the gospel.

4 And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas: and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few,

5 But the Jews, which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city in an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people.

9 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, these that have turned the world upside down, are come hither also :

7 Whom Jason hath received : and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cesar, saying, That here is another king, one Jesus.

8 And they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go.

The foregoing verses acquaint us with St. Paul's preaching at Thessalonica in the Jewish synagogue, as also with the argument he insisted upon ; namely, that the Messiah, according to the scriptures was to die, and rise again from the dead ; and that Jesus, whom he preached, was that Messiah. Now these verses before us acquaint us with the different success which this sermon had upon the hearers : some believed, others were blinded ; some were converted, others enraged. Oh the different and contrary effects which the word has upon its hearers ! opening the eyes of some, closing the eyes of others ; to some it is a savor of life unto life, to others the savor of death. First, to whom the clearest light is afforded, who boldly shut their eyes against it, and say they will not see, how just is it with God to close their eyes judicially, and say they shall not see ! Observe, 2. How the apostle specifies, and particularly declares the success which the preaching of the gospel had upon the people at Thessalonica, both good and bad. The good success in the fourth verse ; some (though few) of the Jews were converted, but many proselytes, and not a few of the Gentiles, and a considerable number of the devout women and honorable matrons of the city. The bad event and success is recorded, ver. 5. The unbelieving Jews called the lewd fellows of the city together into a confederacy with them, and raised a persecution against the apostles. Thence note, 1. That the progress and prosperous success of the gospel ever was, is, and will be a grievous eye sore to the devil and his instruments. Note, 2. That the worst enemies which the gospel ever met with in the world, are the unbelieving Jews. Here, the Jews which believed not, engaged the rabble on their side, who are the fittest tools to raise persecution against the ministers of Christ ; "the Jews which believed not, took certain lewd fellows of the baser sort and assaulted, &c." Note, 3. That the devil's old method for raising persecution against the ministers and members of Jesus Christ, has been, and still is, to lay the most grievous crimes falsely, to the christians' charge. Here the apostles are charged with innovation and sedition, with turning the world upside down. Thus afterwards, in the primitive times, whatever calamities came upon the state and kingdom, whatever commotions or tumults did arise in nations, presently christianity was blamed, and instantly the christians were cast to the lions ; whereas it is not the gospel but men's corruptions, which breed disturbance ; as it is not the sea, but the foulness of the stomach, that makes the men sea sick. Note, how mercifully and marvellously the Lord delivered the apostles, Paul and Silas, at that time, out of the hands of their persecutors : "They sought them in the house of Jason, but found them not." The devil now missed of his prey, for the Lord hid the apostles here as he did the prophets before, Jeremiah and Baruch, Jer. xxxvi. 26, having more work and farther service for them to do. The wise husbandman doth not commit all his corn to the oven, but reserves some for seed. Note, lastly, that as the panther, when it cannot come at the person, will fly upon and tear the picture in pieces ; so these enraged persecutors, finding that the apostles were escaped their hands, fall foul upon Jason, who had entertained them, and drag him before the rulers and magistrates, charging him as an abettor of treason. Yet observe, how God overruled the hearts of these rulers, that they did offer no violence to Jason, but only took security of him, for his own and others appearance before them, when called for. "Thus the Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of tribulation, and to make a way for escape."

10 ¶ And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea ; who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews.

11 These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

12 Therefore many of them believed ; also of honorable women which were Greeks, and of men not a few.

13 But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people.

Observe here, 1. The pious and prudential care which the brethren took of the holy apostles, and the means which they used for their preservation : "they presently sent them away into Berea." The devil seeks nothing so industriously, as the lives of the ministers of the gospel (they making the greatest opposition to him and his kingdom ;) but God finds out ways and means for their preservation, to reserve them for farther works and future service : "the apostles came by night unto Berea." Observe, 2. St. Paul makes again the Jews' synagogue his preaching-place, here at Berea, as he had done before at Thessalonica, ver. 2. and did afterwards at Athens, v. 17. Oh how close did the apostle keep to his commission, to preach Jesus Christ ! first to the Jews, and to wait upon them with the repeated tender of the gospel, till they put it farther from them, and judged themselves unworthy of eternal life, before he turned to the Gentiles. Observe, 3. The honorable character which the Holy Ghost here gives of these Bereans : They were more noble than those of Thessalonica; that is of a more ingenious, mild, and pliable temper of mind; they were not so possessed with prejudice and obstinacy against the gospel; they did not meet it with rage, but thought it worthy their search and serious inquiry; for which they are styled more noble. Thence learn, that to be of a teachable temper, and attractable towards the gospel of Jesus Christ, is the best sort of gentility and nobleness. The Bereans were better bred, and better descended than the Thessalonians, yet not by civil human dignity, but by spiritual and divine dignation; God gave them this preparation of their heart, and made them to differ from their neighbours: "these were more noble than those of Thessalonica." Observe, 4. What it is these Bereans are so highly commended for; namely, for searching the scriptures. Where note, 1. That the scriptures were then in the vulgar tongue. 2. That, as they were in their own tongue, so the laity had them in their own hands. 3. That the common people did read them, and heard them read, searched, and examined them; and yet were so far from censure and blame, that they met with commendation for it from God himself. From the whole, note, that a diligent reading of, and daily searching into the holy scriptures, is a duty incumbent on all those in whose hands the scriptures are, or may be found. These christians at Berea searching the scriptures, were a noble pattern for all succeeding christians to imitate and follow. Observe, lastly, how the inveterate malice of the unbelieving Jews at Thessalonica pursues the apostles as far as Berea, ver. 13. "When the Jews at Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people." As Christ sends his ministers, so the devil sends his messengers from place to place: and as the ministers of Christ are never weary of his service for the good of souls; so persecutors are restless, they will compass sea and land to harass and drive the faithful ambassadors of Christ from city to city, and, if it were in their power, to banish them out of the world. Lord help all thy faithful ministers so execute this piece of holy revenge upon satan, that we may be even with him for all his malice and spite against us. Oh let us endeavour to do all the possible service, and the uttermost good we can, wherever we come.

14 And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul, to go as it were to the sea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

15 And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

16 ¶ Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry.

17 Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18 Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoics, encountered him. And some said, what will this babbler say? other some, he seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection.

19 And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, may we know what this new doctrine whereof thou speakest is?

20 For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

21 For all the Athenians and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or hear some new thing.

The prudential care which the believing brethren took of the holy apostle, was observed before, ver. 10. His life being in danger at Thessalonica, they sent him to Berea; being pursued to Berea, they send him to Athens, and detain Silas and Timotheus: not that St. Paul was more fearful than the other two, but more useful, and consequently more hateful to the unbelieving Jews, and his life more sought after. To preserve which, his friends use an innocent policy; they make as if they sent him away to sea; but really he goes on foot to Athens: "Immediately the brethren sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea." Hence learn, that human policy and prudence may lawfully be made use of, in subserviency to divine providence. It was good policy and great providence in the apostle and his friends, to look one way and go another; to look towards the sea, and go to Athens by land. There is a wise and holy subtlety in foreseeing the evil, and hiding ourselves: a serpent's eye is a singular ornament in a dove's head; piety without policy is too simple to be safe, and policy without piety is too subtle to be good: the sagacity of the serpent, and the innocence of the dove, both may and ought to go together. Observe, 2. The place which the apostle comes to, Athens, a sovereign city, a famous university; the eye of Greece, as Greece was reputed the eye of the world: yet, notwithstanding all their scholarship, they were ignorant of God in Christ; all their learning could not teach them to attain any saving knowledge, but both city and university are wholly given to idolatry. Learn hence, that human learning alone can never teach any place or people the divine truths of Christ and his gospel. 'Tis a good handmaid, but a bad mistress; 'tis good in itself, but when corrupted by a busy devil, and a base heart, it degenerates into the worst instrument in the world: for corruptio optimi est pessima: "The sweetest wine makes the sourest vinegar." Observe, 3. The temper of the men of Athens described to us; They were great and greedy news-mongers, they spent their time in telling and hearing news of any sort. All which was the effect of an itching curiosity; a disease which has descended from age to age, from place to place, from person to person, occasioning a sinful expence of time, which can never be recalled; the neglect of our necessary affairs, which can never be redeemed; spreading false stories of others, and provoking displeasure against ourselves. O how wise and happy were it, if we inquired after news, not as Athenians; but as christians, that we might know the better how to manage our prayers and praises for the church and nation. Observe, 4. How the wickedness and idolatry of this place did vehemently affect this great apostle: his spirit was stirred, when he saw the city full of idols, and wholly given to idolatry. Their idolatry put him into a paroxysm, as the word signifies; his mind was in a concussion by contrary passions: he was affected first with sorrow and grief, that a city should be so learned, and yet so blind; next with indignation and anger, at the superabounding idolatry of that knowing people; and lastly, with fervent zeal, and an ardent desire to undeceive them, and better inform them. In order to which he takes all opportunities, both in the city, in the synagogue, and in the market-place, to preach to the people, to dispute with the philosophers, particularly the Epicureans, who denied the providence of God, and the immortality of the soul; who placed all their happiness in pleasure, and held nothing to be desirable but what delighted their senses. A doctrine which made them rather swine than men. And also with the Stoics, who placed all happiness in want of passion, denied all freedom of will, and ascribed all events to an absolute and irrevocable faith; and having disputed with them, he preaches Christ crucified, risen, and glorified, to them; but he seemed a babler to them, and a setter forth of strange gods. Whence learn, That Christ and his doctrine, the gospel, was the grand stumblingblock both to Jew and Gentile, learned and unlearned. St. Paul took most pains to convert Athens, yet here his success was least, though it was a learned university, where, no doubt, were many men of excellent natural accomplishments. From whence we may infer, that, if moral dispositions, and improvements of natural abilities, had fitted men for grace, we might have expected the greatest number of converts at Athens, where many were mocking but very few believing. Surely the apostles' plantations there were different, not so much from the nature of the soil, as from the different influences of the spirit. Observe, 4. How wonderfully the overruling providence of God concerned itself for the apostles' preservation here at Athens; they hauled him away to their high court of judicature, which sat upon Mars-hill (so called, because the temple of Mars stood upon it) where the most learned men assembled, to hear and determine what new god was to be worshipped. Here note, 1. How the providence of God brought St. Paul to a public place to preach in, Mars-hill, where was a confluence of all the people, and a congregation of the most learned Gentile philosophers: this gave the apostle a mighty opportunity for the service of preaching. And, 2. note, how tenderly the apostle was treated in this cruel court; although this court had condemned Diagoras, Protagoras, and Socrates himself, for undervaluing their gods, and bringing in new deities; yet the apostle's life is not only spared by these judges, but they speak candidly and kindly to the apostle, and court him to gratify their curiosity, by informing them of this novelty, which they were so inquisitive after, and desired to hear more of his divine discourse. Thus the Lord eminently shows how the hearts of men are in his hand, and that without his permission all the bitter enemies of his church shall not move a tongue, nor lift a finger against any of his ministers and members.

22 Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars-hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious.

23 For as I passed by and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom, therefore, ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

As if the apostle had said, "Ye men of Athens have a great number of gods, whom ye ignorantly worship: the God therefore whom ye acknowledge not to know, and yet profess to worship, is he that I preach unto you: for as I passed up and down in your city, beholding your altars and images, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD." Here observe, 1. The light of nature discovered: the altar is inscribed TO A GOD. The true God of the Jews was an unknown and uncertain God to the wisest of the Gentiles. Learn, that some discoveries of God may be made, even by the light of nature: these Heathens, who had nothing but the dim light of nature to guide and direct them, do yet own a God and acknowledge a worship due unto him, by the erection of an altar. Observe, 2. The darkness of nature declared; the altar though erected to a God, yet it is a God unknown. Thence learn, that natural light, in its most elevated and raised improvements, can make no full and saving discoveries of God: the true God was but an unknown God, even to the wisest of the Heathens, to the men of Athens, who were the most famous, in their day, for the severest wisdom and gravity.

24 God, that made the world, and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands;

25 Neither is worshipped, with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life and breath, and all things;

26 And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation;

27 That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us :

28 For in him we live, and move, and have our being ; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

Here begins St. Paul's famous sermon to the men of Athens ; in which the first thing that occurs to our observation is, how the preacher doth adapt and accommodate his discourse to the capacity of his hearers, as also to their sentiments and opinions, his auditory consisted of philosophers, particularly of Epicureans and Stoics : the former, instead of a God and a wise providence to make and govern the world, brought in fortune or blind chance, to bear all the sway. The latter, though they acknowledged a God, yet introduced a rigid fatality, as superior to the Deity, denying to man all freedom and liberty of choice. Accordingly, St. Paul addresses himself, first, to prove a God and a providence, to the exclusion both of faith and fortune : and then, Secondly, from the very nature and notion of God, he infers the folly and absurdity of their Pagan superstition. Observe, next, the apostle's arguments to prove the being of a God, and a providence : 1. From the works of creation : " he made the world and all things therein, he giveth life and breath and all things." The whole universe is his work, and he planted the earth, and replenished it with inhabitants. The invisible God is made visible in his creatures, and the being of God demonstrated from the formation of a world of creatures ; from the formation of man in particular, " In him we live and move, &c." Here are three great benefits enjoyed by human nature ; life, motion and being, all derived from God, and demonstrating the being of God. 1. Life : this is valuable above all blessings, because it renders us capable of enjoying all blessings. 2. Motion : A great mercy, but little considered : how uncomfortable would life be without it ? Were we staked down to the earth, as trees ; or did we move by the constant law of nature, as the sun and moon do move, it had been a favor beyond our desert : but to move as we do at pleasure, with choice and ease, to help ourselves and to assist others, is at once a demonstration of God's being, and an evidence of his bounty. 3. Being : this is essential and necessary to none but God. To us it is an act of divine favor ; and this being is a mercy : then being what we are, is a double mercy, that we do not creep and crawl upon the earth as worms and toads, but are built high upon the earth, with wonderful wisdom and care ; and that a soul which is an immortal and an eternal being, inhabits within us ; a being which shall continue when heaven and earth shall be consumed. Observe, next, the apostle having proved the being of a God, next demonstrates the certainty of a divine providence ; " He hath determined the times that are fore-appointed, and the bounds of their habitation. That is, God has, as it were, chalked out, and drawn a line, where the bounds and habitations, whither the dominions or possessions of men should be extended, and where they shall be confined. The common blessings of God are not dispensed without a special providence ; and the special providence of God, in upholding, disposing, and governing of the world, doth as much prove the being of a God, as a general creation of it : every hour's preservation is virtually a new creation, and both of them sufficient demonstrations of the divine being and bounty. Observe, lastly, The duty which the apostle infers on man's part, from all this goodness and bounty demonstrated on God's part : " That they shall seek the Lord, and find him who is not far from every one of us." It is the duty of all men to follow after God ; that God hath made man should draw man after God : inasmuch as we are his offspring, (ver. 29.) our hearts should spring and rise up to him in love and thankfulness : as the rivers, because they come from the sea, go back thither ; so we, being the offspring of God, and derived from him, should be always returning to him. And if it be the duty of all men to follow after God, because they have natural life, breath, and motion from him ; how much more should the new creature, who has a spiritual life breathed into him, and bestowed upon him, follow hard after God, in the enjoyment of whom his present happiness and future felicity doth consist : to follow God in his way, and to propose God as our end, contains the sum of all duty.

29 Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not think that the God-head is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by heart and man's device.

Observe here, 1. How our apostle quotes one of the Heathen poets in this his divine discourse. This poet was Aratus ; what he attributes to Jupiter, St. Paul applies to the true God ; we are his offspring. Where note, For the honor of human learning, and the lawfulness of making use of it in our sermons, the Holy Ghost is pleased three several times in the New Testament, to make mention of the Heathen poets ; of Aratus here, Acts xvii. 28. of Menander, 1. Cor. xv. 33. of Epimenides, Tit. i. 12. Truth is God's wherever it is found : as a mine of gold is the king's, in whose ground soever it is discovered. Observe, 2. The force of the apostle's argument, seeing we are God's offspring, that is, seeing God is our Creator, we cannot suppose him to be the workmanship of our hands, as an image of gold, silver, or stone is ; and consequently, how irrational it is for a man to adore an image made by his own hands, for, and instead of God. Learn, that there is a strong propensity and inclination in the heart of a man to the sin of idolatry. Secondly, that the sin of idolatry is not only a very great sin, but a very unreasonable and absurd sin ; it is not only sacrilegious, but silly, for a man to worship his own workmanship, and to fall down upon his knees to the work of his own hands.

30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at ; but now commandeth all men every where to repent.

That is, " though God of his infinite patience hath long borne with the world lying in darkness and ignorance ; yet now by causing his gospel to be preached to all nations, he calls and invites them to repentance, to forsake their idols, and serve the true God." Here observe, 1. The censure of the past times, they were times of ignorance, and God winked at them, or overlooked them ; not that God did allow or approve of their idolatry, but did not destroy and cut them off for the same ; nor afford them such helps and means as now he did, having brought his gospel among them. Observe, 2. The duty of the present time declared, to repent. This is a commanded duty, and an universally commanded duty; now he commands all men, every where to repent. From the whole, note, 1. That times of Paganism were times of ignorance. 2. That it is an unspeakable misery to be born and brought up in such times. 3. That to live impenitently in times of knowledge, is a sin that God will by no means wink at. 4. That the great purpose and design of the gospel, wheresoever it is sent and preached, is to invite men to repentance; now he commandeth all men every where to repent.

31 Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

These words are an argument or motive to enforce the foregoing duty of repentance; God requires every man, every where, and that now immediately, to forsake their idols and sinful ways; because he hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the world in righteousness by his Son Christ Jesus, of which he hath already given assurance, by raising him from the dead. Where note, 1. A judgment to come asserted: he (that is, God) will judge the world; he that hath now an observing eye, will hereafter have a rewarding hand. Note, 2, That there not only is a judgment to come, but the day or time of it is determined and fixed; He hath appointed a day. As the precise time of Christ's first coming was fixed by an unalterable, though unknown decree, so is also the time of his second coming; that not knowing the hour, we may be upon our watch every hour. Note, 3, That as the day of judgment is determined, so the person of the judge is also constituted and ordained. He will judge the world by that man whom he hath ordained. This is an act of justice to our Saviour, that he, having humbled himself to take our nature, should, as the reward of his humiliation, judge that world which he died to save. And an act of kindness towards us, that he should be our Judge, who took upon him our nature, and had so much love to us as to die for us. Had we leave to choose our own judge, what choice could we make better for ourselves, than that man whom God hath ordained? Observe, 4. The assurance which God has given us of having Christ for our Judge; namely, his raising him from the dead: but how doth that assure us of Christ being our judge? Answer, our blessed Saviour, when he was in the world, often declared that he was appointed by God to judge the quick and the dead, and appealed to his resurrection as the great proof of what he said. Now when Almighty God did accordingly raise him in such a wonderful manner, (as we know he did) what is it less than God setting his seal to his commission, and openly proclaiming him to be the Judge of all the world? Observe, 5. The manner of this judgment, or the measures which this Judge will proceed by at the great day; and that is, according to righteousness. He will judge the world in righteousness: not in rigor and severity, taking all the advantages that power can give him; nor yet arbitrarily and upon prerogative, but according to known laws: nor yet partially with respect of persons, but every man's doom shall depend upon the holiness or unholiness of his heart and life. Farther, our Judge will candidly interpret men's actions, and make the very best of things that the case will bear; principally looking at the sincerity of men's intentions, and making all favorable allowances for their failings and infirmities that can consist with justice; and will distribute his rewards of happiness and glory to good men in the other world, in proportion to the measures of their difficulties and sufferings, which they met with here in this world. Now, having this high and full assurance of a judgment to come, let us seriously believe it, daily expect it, and duly prepare for it; let neither profit tempt us, nor pleasure allure us, nor power embolden us, nor privacy encourage us to do that thing which we cannot answer at the great tribunal. When St. Paul preached of judgment, Felix, though a Pagan, trembled at the sermon: Lord! what shall we say to those worse than Pagan infidels amongst ourselves, who ridicule a judgment to come, and cry beforehand, God will judge me! yea, God will damn me! Also! unhappy men! he will judge you sure enough, and damn you soon enough, if a serious repentance prevent it not.

32 And, when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked: and others said, we will hear thee again of this matter.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

34 ¶ Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

Here we have the success of St. Paul's sermon declared; it was various and different, some of his hearers derided, others doubted, and a few believed; those that derided and mocked, it was very probable, were the Epicureans, who denied that the world was either created or governed by God: as also that there were any rewards or punishments for men after death; therefore they ridiculed St. Paul's doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. The sublimest doctrines, and most comfortable truths of the gospel, are matter of derision and mockery to sensual minds. Those that doubted, probably were Stoicks, who did own the resurrection and a state of rewards and punishments in another world; and therefore for obtaining better satisfaction to their doubts, desired to hear the apostle again discoursing farther of that matter. Those that believed are few indeed, if no more than are here mentioned, which are Dionysius and Damaris, with some others; Dionysius was a famous person, one of the great council, mentioned ver. 19. whose conversion probably might afterwards have a great influence upon many others; and it was no small honor and advantage to the gospel, to be owned by such an honorable person as this Dionysius was; not many wise, not many noble were called: blessed be God that any were, that any are, that any of the great ones of the world stoop to the sceptre of Jesus Christ, and pay their homage and subjection to him. Thus ends the apostle's divine sermon at the famous university of Athens, which yielded few, very few converts to St. Paul: for we read of no church founded here, as we did before at Philippi, and in the next chapter at Corinth; what reason can be assigned but this, that these grave philosophers, profound scholars, venerable senators and citizens, who had a name for wisdom throughout the world, were too wise to be saved by the foolishness of preaching? As the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God, so the wisdom of God in the gospel is accounted foolishness by the wise men of the world; according to that of the apostle, 1. Cor. i. 21. "When the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe. We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God; because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men."

CHAP XVIII.

AFTER these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

The foregoing chapter acquainted us with the small success which St. Paul found of his ministry at Athens; upon his preaching Jesus and the resurrection there, the philosophers and wise men mocked and derided him. If natural dispositions and abilities had fitted men for grace, we might have expected the greatest number of converts at Athens, where many were mockers, but very few believers: hereupon St. Paul leaves Athens, and goes to Corinth, a famous city in Achaia; where he meets with more encouragement and better success; for here he gathers a famous church unto which he wrote two epistles, under the title of the first and second epistles to the Corinthians.

2 And found a certain Jew, named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy with his wife Priscilla, (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome,) and came unto them.

3 And, because he was of the same craft, he abode with them; and wrought: (for by their occupation they were tent-makers.)

The apostle being now come to Corinth, where he was altogether a stranger, and wanting money for his subsistence, the providence of God directed him to the house of Aquila, and Priscilla; who being of the same trade with himself (tent makers) he works with his own hands to maintain himself, that he might not be burdensome to others. Here observe, 1. The occasions of Aquila's and Priscilla's coming to Corinth, with whom St. Paul lodged. The Roman emperor Claudius had banished them from Italy and Rome, ver. 2. Claudius commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome. Thence note, that a wicked world is soon weary of the saints of God, and longs to worm them out of their cities and societies, never considering that their own preservation from ruin is for the saints' sake: as the alleys in a garden are watered for the sake of the flowers, which otherwise would lie dry. Observe, 2. That the apostle had learned a trade, tent-making, before he was called to the ministry, and he wrought upon it occasionally after he was a minister. The most learned among the Jews did always learn some handicraft trade, it being a tradition amongst them, "that he that doth not learn his child to be a trade, teaches him to be a thief." So that although their children were designed for students, yet they learned some trade. Accordingly St. Paul having learned to make tents, (much used in those hot countries, by soldiers and others to keep off the violence of the weather) he works at Corinth upon his trade for his own subsistence. Men separated to the ministry of the gospel, may, upon an exigency, labor for their living; not but that the apostle had power and sufficient warrant to challenge maintenance for his preaching, as he often intimates in his epistles, but there was not yet any church in Corinth to maintain him; and when there was, they were mostly of the poorer and meaner sort of people, and he would give them a convincing demonstration, that he sought not theirs, but them; he demands therefore no maintenance, lest it should hinder the success of his ministry; but being of the same trade with Aquila and Priscilla, he takes up his lodging with them at Corinth, and works at their trade.

4 And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

5 And, when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ.

6 And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

Observe here, how vehemently desirous the holy apostle was to plant a christian church at Corinth, and to bring the Jews of Corinth to embrace the gospel; he was pressed in spirit, and testified; that is, reasoned with them, with great vehemency and earnestness of affection, as well as with great judgment, concerning the Messias. Observe, 2. That the Jewish synagogue at Corinth was the preaching-place that St. Paul made choice of, hoping to gather the beginnings of his christian church out of the converted Jews; He reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath-day. Still the apostle kept to his commission, to preach the gospel, first to the Jews, and afterwards, upon their rejection, to the Gentiles. Observe, 3. The blasphemous opposition which the Jews made to the doctrine of the gospel; they opposed themselves, and blasphemed; that is, they opposed his doctrine, reviled his person, and blasphemed Christ, whom that apostle preached. Observe, 4. How the holy apostle clears himself of the blood of those Jews, whom he had now preached the gospel unto; he said, your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean. The faithful ministers of Christ shall never have the blood of a perishing people laid to their charge; they having warned them of their damnable state, discovered the way of life and salvation to them, deliver and clear their own soul: whilst the people which they preach to, die in their sins, and for their sins.

7 And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8 And Crispus the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord, with all his house: and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized.

9 ¶ Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

11 And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

Observe here, 1. That the opposition which St. Paul met with, while he lodged in the house of Aquila and Priscilla, moved him to change his quarters, and betake himself to a new lodging; he goes into the house of Justus, by birth a Gentile but a Jewish proselyte, whose house joined nigh to the synagogue where St. Paul's preaching-work lay, to such as would be willing to hear him. Observe, 2. The good success which the apostle had in his preaching at Corinth; Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and his household were brought to believe, and were baptized: after whose example, many of the people in Corinth believed also. Rulers and great men are like looking-glasses in the places where they live, by which many dress themselves. Observe, 3. That notwithstanding this good success which St. Paul had at Corinth, he seems through human frailty, to be possessed with fear, and under an apprehension of danger from the Jews, and accordingly had thoughts of leaving the city; against which fears God antidotes him with a gracious promise of his presence with him: "be not afraid, for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee." Hence learn, 1. That the best and holiest of God's saints and servants are sometimes under sad and slavish fears, and prone to be discouraged; when they meet with difficulties in the way of their duty. 2. That the promise and assurance of God's gracious presence with them, will raise them up above all their fears, and be a sufficient encouragement to them, for their abiding in any place, and amongst any people, let the difficulty or danger be what it will: "be not afraid, for I am with thee, and none shall hurt thee." Observe, 4. A farther encouragement given by God to the apostle to continue his ministry still at Corinth; I have much people in this city; that is here are many souls, whom I design effectually to call and bring home by thy ministry; accordingly the apostle continued his ministry among them a year and six months. Learn hence, That although the ingratitude and perverseness of a people do sadly discourage their ministers, and tempt them to remove from them, yet God encourages them to their duty; that for the malice of some, the salvation of others may not be neglected. 2. That no opposition may discourage the ministers of God in the way of their duty; God's servants must not suffer themselves to be outdone by the devil's slaves, but bear down all opposition made against them with patience and joyfulness: and notwithstanding all the malicious opposition made by the Jews against the apostle, yet did he continue a year and six months to preach at Corinth: Christ had a great harvest a ripening in that city, to be reaped by the apostle's ministry; and being encouraged with the promise of his protecting presence, he committed himself to the divine care, and the Lord both preserved and succeeded him.

12 ¶ And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection, with one accord, against Paul, and brought him to the judgment-seat.

13 Saying, this fellow persuaded men to worship God contrary to the law.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, if it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you:

15 But if it be a question of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it: for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And he drave them to the judgment-seat.

17 Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment-seat: and Gallio cared for none of those things.

Observe here, 1. How St. Paul taking heart from the foregoing promise made by God unto him, goes on courageously in the work of his ministry at Corinth; but the unbelieving Jews were so enraged against him, that they combined together as one man, and with one accord, made insurrection against Paul. Where note, What great unity and unanimity there is amongst wicked men, the devil's friends; he well knows that his kingdom could not long stand if it were divided. The unity of all societies is their strength. Observe, 2. They accuse the apostle before Gallio the deputy, for persuading men to worship God contrary to the law of Moses. Who would not think but that these men were truly pious, virtuous and good, who were so zealous for the worship of God according to the law? And yet were they wicked men, and fiery persecutors. There is a noisy religion in the world; some men think, by crying, The church, The church, and by pleading loud for the worship of God, as established by law, to atone for all their immoralities; praying is good, hearing and receiving the sacrament is good, if they be joined with holy walking; but if otherwise, the howling of wolves is, as acceptable to Almighty God, as the prayers of those men who call Christ Master, and the church mother, but do not the things which they have commanded; yea, the very dogs which follow them to the public assemblies, shall as soon find acceptance as themselves, if they do not obey him whom they pretend to adore. It is no matter what church a wicked man is of, for it is certain he can be saved in none. Observe, 3. What low and mean thoughts Gallio had, and all persons prejudiced against religion and the power of godliness have, of sincere christianity: if it be a question of words and names, says Gallio. As if he had said, "do not trouble me about the niceties of your religion, decide such questions among yourselves; for I will be no judge in such matters." The great men of the world little care to trouble their heads about the matters of religion; they look upon it only as a matter of notion and speculation: whereas it is not a speculative science, but a practical art of holy living. And accordingly, like Gallio, they care for none of these things. Observe lastly, That although this Gallio had no kindness for christianity; yet God made use of him as an instrument, at this time, to preserve and screen St. Paul from the rage of his enemies, inasmuch, that he drove his accusers from the judgment-seat: thus God performed his promise to Paul, suffering no man to hurt him; but causing Gallio the governor to defend him, who his enemies were in hopes would have destroyed him. Lord, how happy and wise is it for thy servants to commit the care of themselves to thee in well doing! If we with the purity of intention, concern ourselves for thy glory, thou wilt certainly take care of our safety; or if any danger should come, danger itself shall do us no harm.

18 And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria: and with him Priscilla and Aquila; having shorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow.

19 And he came to Ephesus, and left them there; but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews.

20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not:

21 But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem: but I will return again unto you, if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

22 And when he had landed at Cesarea, and gone up and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia, and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

A farther account is here given of the laborious travels of the great apostle St. Paul; namely, from Corinth to Ephesus, from Ephesus to Cesarea, from Cesarea to Antioch, &c. Where observe, 1. That St Paul having continued a year and a half at Corinth, and planted a church there, which yet soon after sadly degenerated; he determines now to sail to Ephesus; and accordingly at Cenchrea, a haven near to that city, he shaved his head for he had a vow, that is, the vow of a Nazarite, which he, (that is, Aquila say some, St. Paul say others) had before taken upon him for a time, whereby he was obliged to abstain from wine, and shaving his head, and touching of the dead. But having now accomplished his vow, he shorn his head, and returned to the common way of living; where the wisdom and moderation of this great apostle, in complying in different things, is to be noted and imitated. "To the Jews he became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jews:" He willingly complied with their weakness, to show that he was no contemner of their law; for which reason he caused Timothy to be circumcised, and purified himself in the temple at Jerusalem. And behold the success of this his compliance; for by gratifying the Jews in this condescension to the prescription of the law, he brought over very many of them to the faith of Christ. Let not any suspect this for a sinful compliance with the Jews, in observing a ceremony which the gospel had abolished, nor censure it for a low and mean stoop in so great a man to the humor of the people; for though the ceremonial rites died with Christ, yet they were a long time in burying, and the Jews were indulged in the observation of them till they came to a clearer sight of the christian liberty: accordingly, the apostle yielded to them for the present in indifferent things, without dissimulation or blame. Observe, 2. The apostle being now come to Ephesus, he taught in the synagogue of the Jews, and reasoned with them: where we may note, both how close the apostle kept to his commission, in first preaching the word of life to the Jews, and also the fervent love which he bore to his own countrymen, whom, though he had suffered all manner of indignities from, yet doth he give them precept upon precept, line upon line; and, with an unwearied diligence, dispenses the word of life and salvation to them. Observe, 3. Our apostle stays not long at Ephesus, but hastens to Jerusalem to keep the feast there: namely, the feast of the passover; not that he thought himself obliged to observe the feast, or any of the antiquated ceremonies; but because of the vast concourse which he knew would be at Jerusalem at the time of the feast from all quarters, and which would give him an opportunity to make Christ known to a great multitude. The ministers of the gospel, without the imputation of vain glory, or seeking popular applause, may warrantably desire, and occasionally lay hold upon an opportunity of dispensing the word to a numerous auditority, in hope that casting the net among many, they may inclose some. Observe lastly, the incessant care, indefatigable diligence, and unwearied pains of this great apostle, in travelling from place to place, and at such great distance, to preach the everlasting gospel to lost sinners: from Ephesus he sails to Cesarea, from Cesarea to Jerusalem, from Jerusalem to Antioch, from Antioch to Galatia and Phrygia,

See how the care of all the churches was upon him, and how he labored more abundantly than they all. Lord, what a pattern is here of ministerial diligence and faithfulness! What pains did St. Paul take, what hazards did he run, in planting and propagating the gospel of Christ! In labors more abundant, in sufferings above measure! Well might he say, I am able to do all things through Christ that strengthens me. And blessed be God, the same power that assisted him, stands ready to succour us; and if ever he calls us to extraordinary service, he will come in with more than ordinary strength.

24 ¶ And a certain Jew, named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25 This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the Spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John.

26 And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue: whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

27 And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him; who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace.

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that, publicly, showing by the scriptures that Jesus was Christ.

The first thing here observable, is, how the wisdom of God provided for the several churches, that in the absence of one powerful preacher, they were supplied with another; when the providence of God called St. Paul from Ephesus and Corinth, it brought Apollos thither; so that what Paul planted, Apollos watered. The judicious Calvin, upon the place, piously admires the providence of God over his church, in not suffering it to be without a settled minister; but upon the removal of one to raise up another. Observe, 2. How admirably qualified Apollos was for the work of the gospel, and excellently fitted and furnished for the places he was called to, Ephesus and Corinth, famous for philosophers and orators; accordingly he is a man of ravishing eloquence, who, by his profound knowledge in the sacred scriptures, was both apt to teach the truth, and able to maintain it. Hence learn, That scripture knowledge is the choicest qualification, and highest commendation of a gospel minister; Apollos, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures: without this, he can never truly and savingly make known and discover Jesus Christ; without this he can never rightly divide the word of truth; without this, he can never convince gainsayers, either gainsayers in opinion, or gainsayers in practice; without this, he can never instruct the people fully in their duty, nor declare to them the whole counsel of God. Observe, 3. The great humility of Apollos: although he was an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, yet he did not disdain farther instruction. Those that are most knowing, if humble, are most sensible of their ignorance. The knowledge of the best, while they are on this side of heaven, is capable of improvements. Apollos knew much, yet Aquila and Priscilla farther enlightened him, so that he knew more. An humble man will be content to learn of the meanest woman. These poor tent-makers, Aquila and his wife Priscilla, catechize the great Apollos, and add something to the treasure of his knowledge. Observe, 4. The place where Apollos preached; in the Jewish synagogue, ver. 26. He began to speak boldly in the synagogue. It was a custom among the Jews to allow a liberty for learned men, though no priests, to teach in their synagogues. Thus Paul, though of the tribe of Benjamin, and not of the tribe of Levi, was permitted to preach in their synagogues; as we read throughout this book of the Acts. In like manner we find Apollos here preaching in the synagogue; Non ut abens auctoritatem, sed scientiam says Estius: taking the advantage of that indulgence which the Jews gave him in their synagogues, to preach and spread the doctrine of Christ. Observe lastly, That this Apollos afterwards became an eminent authorised preacher in the church of Corinth, and is called St. Paul's helper and brother; and when he came to Corinth, was so eminent, that he proved the head of a sect and faction; One saith I am of Paul, and I am of Apollos; and here at Ephesus he mightily convinced the Jews, showing by the scriptures, that Jesus was the Christ.

CHAPTER XIX.

AND it came to pass that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples.

2 He said unto them, have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism.

4 Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them, and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

The latter end of the foregoing chapter informed us how Apollos was employed at Corinth: the beginning of this acquaints us how St Paul spent his time at Ephesus. He finds there twelve disciples, he catechizes them, lays his hands upon them, and God confers the gifts of the Holy Ghost. Here observe, 1. The question put by St Paul to the twelve disciples: have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? He doth not mean in its sanctifying operations, but in its miraculous gifts; as speaking with tongues, the gift of prophecy, and the gift of healing. Observe, 2. The disciples answer, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost; not that they were ignorant of the essence or person of the Holy Ghost, but had not heard of the effusion of the extraordinary and miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost; for it was a received opinion among the Jews, that after the death of Haggai, Zachary, and Malachi, the Holy Ghost, or the Spirit of prophecy, departed from Israel, and they never heard that he was returned, or of his being given anew with his miraculous gifts. Observe, 3. How the apostle sets them right: they tell him they were baptized into John's baptism: the apostle tells them, that John's baptism and Christ's were the same for substance, and had both the same end, though they differed in some circumstances. The disciples of John believed in Christ to come, the disciples of Jesus believed in Christ as already come, and were baptized in that faith; and the ordinance sealed unto both the remission of sins: yet it being essential to christian baptism, to baptize in the name of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, thereby professing ourselves to be buried and risen with Christ; and John's baptism having not this, when the disciples heard that, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus; that is, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; which is the essence of christian baptism. Observe, 4. How the apostle lay his hands upon these disciples, to confirm them in the faith they were baptized into; whereupon the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost were immediately conferred on them, and they spake divers tongues, which before they understood not, and were endued with the gift of prophesying; that is, of declaring things to come, and interpreting the writings of the prophets that they might be fit to teach and instruct others. Hence learn, that at the first planting and propagating of the gospel, the wisdom of God thought fit to furnish the preachers and dispensers of it with extraordinary gifts and miraculous powers, to qualify them for, and to give them assurance of the success of their ministry; and also to assure those, whom they preached unto, that their doctrine was from heaven, Almighty God never setting the seal of his omnipotency to a lie. Such miraculous gifts are long since ceased in the church, the cause of them, and occasion for them, being long since ceased.

8 And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

10 And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia, heard the word of the Lord Jesus both Jews and Greeks.

11 And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul;

12 So, that from his body were brought unto the sick, handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

St. Paul being now come to Ephesus with a design to stay there for some considerable time, as his manner was, he enters into the synagogue, and preaches the gospel first to the Jews, and this for the space of three months; but when, instead of embracing the gospel, they opposed it, blaspheming Christ the author, and the apostle the dispenser of it, and vehemently contending with him for preaching the gospel, (which some conceive he calls his fighting with beasts at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xv. 32,) he left the Jews and their synagogue, separating the christians that were in Ephesus from them whom he daily instructed in a certain place, called the school of Tyrannus. Here note, 1. The vehemency of St. Paul's affection to his own countrymen, the people of the Jews, notwithstanding all the opposition they made against his doctrine, and the virulent reproaches which they cast upon his person; he continues to preach in their synagogue at Ephesus, for three months, without ceasing, thereby keeping close to his commission, which was to preach the gospel first to the Jews, and upon their rejection of it, to tender the word of life unto the Gentiles. Note, 2. As great an apostle, and as faithful a minister as St. Paul was, yet he wanted to see the success of his labors: many of his hearers at Ephesus believed not his word, but were hardened under it. The same sun that softens the wax, hardens the clay: the same doctrine of the gospel becomes the savor of death unto some, which is the savor of life unto others. Woe be unto that people, who, by their habitual hardness, through their actual resisting the impressions of God's word, to provoke the Almighty do superadd judicial hardness of heart unto them, making their sin to become their punishment. Note, 3. How upon this opposition which St. Paul met with in the Jewish synagogue, he leaves it, and retires to a more private place, the school of Tyrannus, where he had more freedom and less opposition. Learn hence, That such places of public worship, where nothing but contradiction to the pure christian doctrine can be met with, may be lawfully withdrawn from. The apostle separates himself and the disciples from the Jews' synagogue, where he had preached three months, meeting only with contradiction to his doctrine, and blasphemy against his dear Redeemer. Note, 4. How it pleased God to confirm St. Paul's ministry at Ephesus by his working miracles; and the miracles he wrought were special, that is, very extraordinary, insomuch that even handkerchiefs or aprons having but touched St. Paul's body, and being brought unto the diseased, became a miraculous means both to cure diseases, and cast out devils. Thus according to our Saviour's promise, his apostles did greater miracles than himself, John xiv. 12. not greater in regard of the manner, but in regard of the matter of them: Christ wrought his miracles in his own name, and by his own power; but the apostles wrought theirs in the name, and by the power of Christ; yet it ought to be observed and considered, that although it pleased God, at the first plantation of the gospel by the apostles to confirm christianity by many special miracles, (as new set plants are well watered, till they have taken fast rooting) yet that church which wants miracles may be a true church: because, 1. There is no promise made in the scriptures to the church for her perpetual enjoying the gift of miracles. That promise, Mark xvi. 17. These signs shall follow them that believe, &c. was only a temporary promise. 2. We are forbidden to expect miracles, John iv. 48. and forbidden to trust to miracles without scripture, or to regard such miracles as are wrought to confirm any doctrine that is contrary to scripture, Deut. xiii. 3. because the miracles of the last times are declared to be the signs of Antichrist. 2. Thess. ii. 2. 13. From all which it follows, that miracles are no infallible note of the true church, as the papists would make it; who also produce St. Paul's handkerchiefs here, and St. Peter's shadow, Acts v. 15, as a warrant for their superstitious relics; but the text assures us, it was God that wrought the special miracle, not St. Paul, nor his handkerchiefs, but God by his hand. The miracles in the church of Rome, pretended to be wrought by the relics of saints and martyrs, are no better than lying wonders.

13 Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits, the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, we adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leapt on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

18 And many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds.

19 Many also of them which used curious arts, brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

20 So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.

Here observe 1. That we read not of any in the Old Testament, that were bodily possessed with devils and evil spirits; but in the New Testament, we meet with many, both in our Saviour's time, and also in the apostles; to the intent that the power of Christ might more signally appear in their ejection and casting out. Observe, 2. How some of the Jewish exorcists (like our jugglers) who made it their trade to wander up and down, to get a livelihood by pretending to cure diseases, and cast out devils, seeing what great miracles Paul had wrought in the name of Jesus, attempt to cast a devil out of a possessed man, by using the same name, though in Jesus they believed not: but satan was so far from obeying them, that he made the possessed man fall violently upon them, and wound them. Thence learn, 1. That satan scorns all human attempts, as weak and impotent, and is conquered only by a divine power. Jesus I know, but who are ye? Learn, 2. That the devil would gladly be God's ape: the Jewish jugglers would by all means imitate the apostles in casting out devils; accordingly they use the name of Jesus as a charm; but saying the same words with the apostles, signified nothing without exercising the same faith and grace. These exorcists soon found that words without faith would not work to cast out devils, and that Christ would not give power to his name, when used as a charm. Learn, 3. That the devil, by God's permission, has power over those, who profane the name of Christ: satan here was too hard for these conjurers, he rushes upon them and masters them, tears their clothes, wounds their bodies, and had not God restrained him, had unavoidably destroyed them. Satan's malice is infinite, but his power is limited and bounded. Lord, abate his power, since his malice cannot be abated! Observe, lastly, how this execution of divine vengeance wrought wonderfully for the conviction and conversion both of Jews and Greeks, ver. 18. Many believed, and came and confessed their sinful deeds. And as an evidence of their detestation of their former faults and follies, they make a bonfire of all their magical books; burning so many of them; as the learned say, the price amounted to eight hundred pounds. Thus these conjurers evinced themselves to be real converts, by plucking out their right eye, and cutting off their right hand; that is, sacrificing their bosom and best beloved lust and corruption. Thence learn, that there is no better evidence of the truth of a person's conversion, than cheerfully to part with a very profitable and pleasing lust.

21 After these things were ended, Paul purposed in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, after I have been there, I must also see Rome.

22 So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season.

23 And the same time there arose no small stir about that way.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a silver-smith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen;

25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth:

26 Moreover, ye see and hear that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying, that they be no gods which are made with hands:

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth.

28 And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

29 And the whole city was filled with confusion: and having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

Observe here, 1. How angry the devil grows at the success of the gospel, mentioned in the foregoing verses; there we read how the whole college of diabolical conjurers were brought over, by the apostles' preaching at Ephesus, to burn their books, and leave their wicked course of life. Hereupon the devil bestirs him, and raises a persecution against the apostle. Those that will disturb satan in the quiet and peaceable possession of his kingdom, shall be sure to meet with trouble and disquiet from him. Let not any of the saints of God in general, nor any of the faithful and zealous ministers of Christ in particular, expect any long continuance of their outward tranquillity, and peace in this world, where they are every day up in arms against satan, and meditating the ruin of him and his kingdom; for which he will certainly seek revenge. Observe, 2. The instruments which the devil employs to raise the storm and persecution against the apostle, namely, Demetrius, the silversmith, and his craftsmen; they looking upon St. Paul as one that impaired their profit, and spoiled their trade of making silver shrines for Diana's temple, by his crying down the worship of idols. "But what were these silver shrines made for Diana's temple?" Ans. The temple of Diana was at that time one of the seven famous structures of the world; and the silver shrines made by these silversmiths, were certain models or images of this temple, wherein their idol goddess Diana was set forth; which shrines or portable temples, all the people of Asia carried about with them, to stir up the more their own devotions towards this idol: so that this shrine making must needs be a very gainful trade, when all Asia was addicted to this superstition. No wonder then that Demetrius, upon the sight of the loss of his gain, made an horrible outcry, and sets the city in an uproar: for carnal men, whose gain is their god and their godliness, account themselves undone when their god Mammon is in danger; if you take away their gods, what have they more? Learn hence, That gaining and maintaining of men's livelihood, are mighty temptations to carnal men, to use impious means for supporting superstition and idolatry. Observe, 3. The arguments which Demetrius used to stir up the people against the apostle; and they are three: 1. The plea of profit, By this craft we get our gain; if this man's doctrine obtain, our trade will quickly fall under disgrace, and die. This was the most cogent, the most pungent argument, that could be used; for although an argument drawn from our own interest is not the most weighty, yet usually it is the most persuasive. 2. The pretence of piety; not only are we like to lose our livelihood, but our religion too: our Goddess Diana will be despised, her temple profaned, and her worshippers scorned. This easily heated the rabble's blood, put the multitude into a ferment, and caused an hideous outcry for two hours together, Great is Diana of the Ephesians. 3. The plea of the antiquity and universality, and the common consent of all worshippers; Diana whom all Asia and the world worshipped. As if Demetrius had said, "What! Shall we suffer the temple of Diana to be set at nought by the preachments of this babbling Paul; a place so magnificent for structure, being, some say one hundred, others two hundred and twenty years a building; so renowned for the oracles of the gods, so magnified for the image that fell down from Jupiter, so honored by the oblations of the Asiatic potentates, and crowded with the devotions of the Ephesians, and admired throughout the whole world? Lord! what danger was the life of the great apostle now in! How did this popular tumult threaten the present destruction of him and his companions, Gaius and Aristarchus! Now is supposed to be the time when the apostle says, That after the manner of men he had fought with beasts at Ephesus; and this probably the deliverance which he gratefully commemorates in 2 Cor. i. 10. Who hath delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust, that he will yet deliver us.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not.

31 And certain of the chief of Asia, which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and some another; for the assembly was confused, and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana, of the Ephesians.

Observe here, 1. The undaunted courage of St. Paul in the cause of Christ; he resolves to venture his life, by going into the theatre, there to make an apology for himself and his companions, and in defence of the christian religion: he did not account his life dear unto him, but was willing not only to be bound, but to die for the name of Jesus. Observe, 2. How the divine providence is to be admired, and awfully adored in directing to ways and means for the apostle's preservation in this time of imminent danger. God now made use of the advice, not only of the apostle's fast friends, the disciples, but of his foes, that is, certain of the people of Asia, who were now become his friends to dissuade him from going into the theatre, lest he should have been torn in pieces by an outrageous rabble of insolent idolaters, in this unaccountable uproar. It is all one with God to save by many or by few, by friends or by foes; for he can make enemies become benefactors at his pleasure, and command deliverance for his people, sometimes without means, sometimes by weak and contemptible means, sometimes by improbable and unlikely means, sometimes by opposite and contrary means: Lord, who would not trust thee in a time of imminent or impendent danger, who hast all created nature at thy beck, the hearts of all in thy hands, the tongues and hands of the most unruly and outrageous in thy power; and wilt deliver thine in six troubles, and in seven, and there shall no evil touch them? thou canst and wilt deliver as often as thy children need deliverance, and save them from evil, even when they are in the midst of trouble. Observe, 3. How the rabble at Ephesus treated Alexander, being in the theatre; the place where they judged offenders, and cast them to the wild beasts; they would not suffer him to make any defence for himself, or the people of the Jews. This Alexander is supposed by many to be that Alexander, who St. Paul afterwards told Timothy did him much evil; if so we find here, he was first a proselyte, then a professor, next a confessor, almost a martyr; yet, after all, an apostate, making shipwreck of the faith for which he was excommunicated by the apostle, 1 Tim. i. 19, 20. Of whom Hymeneus and Alexander, whom I have delivered unto satan. This excommunication of the apostles probably was the provocation that occasioned him to do so much mischief to the apostle, of which he complains, 2 Tim. iv. 14 Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil; of whom be thou aware also. Learn thence, 1. That it was possible for a glorious professor to turn a furious persecutor. This Alexander did not only withstand the apostle's person, but his doctrine also; for which being excommunicated, he sought revenge. Learn, 2. That excommunication not only angers, but enrages impenitent men; so that instead of being reformed, they seek revenge: yet must the censures of the church be executed and inflicted, without either fear or favor.

35 And when the town-clerk had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly.

27 For ye have brought hither these which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, the law is open; and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

39 But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a lawful assembly.

4 For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41 And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

Observe here, 1. The instrument which God stirs up to stem the tide, and to stop the stream of this hair-brained assembly; and that is, the town-clerk; who was always present at their public meetings, and registered all their city-acts. His presence and eloquence God made use of to appease this tumult, to preserve the apostle, and to dismiss the assembly. Observe, 2. The town-clerk's oration was full of craft, and policy, of fraud and fallacy! for he tells the multitude, that St. Paul and his friends are against images only that were made with hands; whereas theirs was not such, but one that fell down from Jupiter. It was his duty, by office, to appease the rabble's rage, with reason and authority; he ought not to have done it fallaciously. But we must consider he was a Pagan, and his design was only to still the people; accordingly, he encourages the credulous multitude to believe, what the crafty priests had insinuated into them, that the image which they worshipped was not made with hands, but fell immediately down from heaven: hoping thereby to gain more veneration to their idols, and get more pounds into their own purses. Thus God made use of the worldly (and somewhat) wicked eloquence of this heathen to preserve St. Paul. Observe, 3. How God opens the mouth of this man to vindicate the apostle's innocency and his companions also. These men, saith he, are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess. It is very likely, that the apostle and the christians in Ephesus had in wisdom asserted christianity, without saying much against Diana, which would but have enraged the multitude; much less did they offer any violence either to her temple or her image. Here note, that although the apostles were great enemies to these men's idolatry, yet did they offer no outward violence to their idol-temples neither to demolish them, or deface any image in them: they well knew that such a work of public reformation was not their business, but the magistrates; therefore they endeavoured by preaching to cast idols out of the people's hearts, but not by violence to throw them out of the temple. Thus ends this chapter, with the account of St. Paul's marvellous, if not miraculous preservation at the city of Ephesus; where being surrounded with difficulties and dangers on all hands, yet being found in the way of his duty, and in the work of his Master, he escapes all perils. Safety evermore accompanies duty: when we are in God's way, we are under God's wing; preservation and protection we shall have, if God may thereby be more glorified; but sometimes danger is better than safety! a storm more useful than a calm: and blessed be God for the assurance of his promise, that all things, be they mercies or afflictions, comforts or corrections, dangers or deliverances, life or death, all shall work together for good to them that love God, and are found steadfast in their obedience to him, Rom. viii. 28.

CHAPTER XX.

AND after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia.

2. And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece.

3 And there abode three months, and when the Jews laid wait for him as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia, Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus, and Trophimus.

5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.

The foregoing chapter acquaints us with a very great and imminent danger, which the apostle escaped at Ephesus, where he had like to have been torn in pieces by those heathenish idolaters; which gave him occasion to say, 1 Cor. xv. 31. That after the manner of men he had fought with beasts at Ephesus. In this chapter we find, that the apostle, yielding to the fury of his persecutors, prudently withdraws from Ephesus into Macedonia; yet not so much for his own safety, (for he was willing to die Christ's sacrifice, if he might live no longer Christ's servant) as for the church's future advantage, that the disciples in Ephesus might be no farther persecuted upon this account. Hence learn, that the ministers of the gospel may depart from a place and people, where their ministry has been very successful when driven from thence by the fury of persecution: thus St. Paul here obeyed the command of Christ elsewhere; When they persecute you in one city flee to another, Mat. x. 23. Observe, 2. Though St. Paul withdrew from Ephesus to allay the fury of persecution there; yet he left Timothy behind, to confirm and comfort the disciples, as his substitute, and to strengthen them in the faith of the gospel, 1. Tim. i. 3. I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, &c. Observe, 3. The apostle no sooner escapes the fury of the heathens at Ephesus, but he is in danger of his life at Macedonia, by his own countrymen the Jews, ver. 3. The Jews laid wait for him: Well might the apostle say, he was in deaths often, in perils of robbers, in perils in the city, in perils by my own countrymen, in perils among false brethren, 2 Cor. xi. 26. The wicked Jews when they could not prevail against St. Paul by open force, contrive his ruin by secret treachery; but God gave him knowledge of their designs, and he avoided them by turning another way. Thence learn, That it is high presumption and a bold tempting of God, to run headlong upon evident and imminent dangers; and not to improve all lawful means we can to prevent and decline them: to trust to means, is to neglect God; but to neglect the means for our own preservation, is to tempt God. St. Paul would not tempt God by running into dangers, though his cause was never so good. Observe, 4: The persons are mentioned by name, who accompanied the apostle, and administered unto him: to wit, Sopater, Aristarchus, and Secundus, Gaius and Timotheus, Tychicus, and Trophimus: these accompanied the apostle, not out of state, but for necessary services; to which may be added St. Luke; but being the penman of this book, he declines mentioning of himself by name, though his praises will for ever be in the gospel, and ecclesiastical history.

6 ¶ And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow, and continued his speech until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man, named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and, as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him, said, trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

11 When he, therefore, was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

The next journey of St. Paul is from Macedonia in Greece, to Troas in Asia, where he abode seven days. During his stay here, several things are to be remarked and observed. Observe here, 1. How this great apostle became all things to all men, though he would not become sin to any man: to the Jews he became as a Jew, for he stayed his journey all the seven days of the Jewish passover's solemnity, and would not set forth to travel that time, because he would not offend the weak Jews: accordingly he sailed not from Philippi till after the days of unleavened bread. Thus St. Paul did comply with the Jewish rites, which though dead by the death of Christ, yet were not buried; and therefore his compliance was not sinful, but managed with design to gain the Jews. Observe, 2. That the change of the sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, was of apostolical observation now, as it was before Christ's institution. On this day the Lord arose; on this day the disciples met, "and Christ honored them with his presence," John xx. "on this day the collection for the poor saints was made," 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Now, this necessarily infers the abrogation of the saturday sabbath: for six days they were commanded to labor; and if they rested the seventh day and first day too, they violated the law of God, which we cannot suppose they did: and consequently the apostles and primitive christians observed the first day of the week in remembrance of the work of redemption, as the Jews of old observed the seventh in remembrance of the work of creation. Observe, 3. The fervent zeal and unwearied diligence of the great apostle for the souls of men; and also the patience and complacency with which his auditors attended upon his sermon at this time: Paul preached till midnight. ver. 7. A very long sermon upon a particular occasion is neither unscriptural, nor unapostolical. We do not find that either the apostle was weary, or the auditory drowsy at the dead time of the night; their wakefulness at midnight under a sermon condemns our sleepiness at mid-day. Observe, 4. The pious and prudent care which the apostle and his hearers took, that their night-meeting should not fall under any calumny, or themselves reproached for doing any thing indecently in the dead of the night; to prevent this, the 8th verse informs us, that "there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together," exposing themselves, and what they did to the view of all. Religious meetings in the night-seasons are not only lawful in times of persecution, but necessary; yet a special care ought to be taken to avoid all occasion of calumny, that the least suspicion may not arise concerning the honesty and holiness of those that do assemble at such unseasonable times. Observe, 5. What a warning the Holy Ghost here leaves upon record, for such as sleep under the preaching of the word; Eutychus, when asleep under St. Paul's long sermon, falls down from the third loft, and is taken up dead. Here note, The time when he was overtaken with sleep; not at noon-day, but at midnight; and it was not a sermon of an hour long, that he fell asleep under; but after St. Paul had preached several hours: this is not the case of our common sermon sleepers, who at noon-day sleep under the word; nay, settle and compose themselves to sleep, and do what they can to invite sleep to them. What if, with Eutychus, any of them fall down dead? Here is no Paul to raise them up; or what if this wretched contempt of the word provoke God to say, sleep on, and be so stupified, that no ordinances shall awake you; sleep on, till hell flames awake you? Observe, Eutychus is raised to life by a miraculous power communicated to St. Paul, which was a matter of great consolation to the spirits, and great confirmation to the faith of the disciples, ver. 12. "They brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted; not only for the young man's sake, but especially for their own sakes; for hereby God gave a convincing testimony to the word of his grace; God did hereby bear witness to it, and many were thereby confirmed in the belief of it.

13 ¶ And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go a-foot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia; for he hasted, if it were possible for him to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.

Here an account is given of several travels of the apostle, namely, from Troas to Assos, from thence to Mitylene, next day to Samos, then to Trogyllium, and the day following to Miletus, passing by and not touching at Ephesus; for the apostle having an earnest desire to be at Jerusalem at the feast of Pentecost, so that he might in that concourse have a larger opportunity of spreading the gospel, he would not now call at Ephesus, lest he should be detained too long by the brethren there. From the whole note, 1. The indefatigable diligence of this great apostle, and his unwearied industry in the service of the gospel; how he travels from place to place, and here from Troas to Assos, on foot all alone by land: he did not affect to ride with pompous train and retinue, but he goes on foot, expecting to meet with more opportunity of sowing the seed of the gospel as he passed through towns and villages by land, among those he conversed with: so intent was this holy man upon the work of winning souls: whereas had he travelled by sea, this opportunity had been lost. An happy example for all the ministers of Christ, to prefer an opportunity of doing good to the souls of others, before their own ease or profit. Note, 2. The true reason why St. Paul was so very desirous to be at Jerusalem at the feast of Pentecost; not that he placed any religion in observing this abrogated feast, but because that vast concourse of people at such time would give him a fairer opportunity to glorify Christ, and to propagate the gospel: this made him so desirous to get to Jerusalem by the feast of Pentecost. Learn thence, That the ministers of Christ, without the imputation of vainglory, or seeking popular applause, may warrantably desire, and occasionally lay hold upon an opportunity of dispersing the word to a numerous auditory, in hopes that, casting the net of the gospel among many, they may inclose some.

17 ¶ And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons.

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations which befel me, by the lying in wait of the Jews;

29 And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house:

21 Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

The foregoing verses acquainted us, how very intent St. Paul was upon his journey to Jerusalem at the feast of Pentecost, he hoping then and there to have a precious opportunity for preaching Jesus Christ, and him crucified, to his countrymen the Jews: now, lest he should be hindered in his expedition, he determines to slip by Ephesus, without touching there; but could not satisfy himself without seeing of, and speaking to the ministers of Ephesus, whom for that purpose he sends for to Miletus, and there in a grave and pious discourse, which warmed their hearts, and melted them into tears, he takes his farewell of them. Here note, 1. That St. Paul speaks much in his own vindication, but nothing by way of ostentation: a minister, when he is leaving a people, may modestly enough say something in his own vindication; for there are enough, as soon as his back is turned, will say more than is true by the way of accusation. Note, 2. That when the apostle here speaks much that looks like self-commentation, it is rather to propound himself as a mirror for gospel-ministers, and a pattern for all pious pastors, that whenever they leave their people, they may go off with a clear conscience, and be able to appeal to the consciences of their people, as touching their carriage and conversation amongst them. Note, 3. The several particular instances of his ministerial faithfulness: 1. He instances in his own humility; though he was lofty in his ministry, yet was he lowly in his mind: "he served the Lord with all humility of mind." The better any man is, the lower thoughts he has of himself. Almighty God renders that man most honorable, that minister most serviceable, whom he finds most humble. 2. In his affectionateness in preaching the gospel: he mingles tears with his exhortation. "Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears." In his constancy in preaching, in private inspection, publicly in the synagogues, and privately from house to house, like a good shepherd laboring to understand the state of his whole flock, and of every lamb in it, that no soul might miscarry through his neglect, for which the great and good shepherd died. 4. He acquaints them, not only with the manner, but also with the matter of his preaching; namely, "Repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ:" which two graces comprehend the sum of a christian's duty. Ministers must join these two together in their preaching, and our hearers must not separate them in their practice. They who repent without believing, or believe without repenting, indeed do neither.

22 And now, behold, I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there:

23 Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions abide me.

24 But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

25 And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men.

27 For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.

Here the apostle proceeds not to boast of himself, but to clear himself of any charge or surmise of ministerial mis-carriages, and also to propound himself as a pattern of ministerial faithfulness to the elders of the church at Ephesus: and here again, 1. Our apostle instances in his holy and heroic resolution and activity for God: "I know that bonds and afflictions abide me; nevertheless I go bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem, and nothing moves me." As if he had said, "I am fully resolved, by the grace of God enabling, that nothing shall divert me from my duty, neither deterring fear, nor deluding favor of men, shall ever affect me; but I will go out, and go on in the strength of Christ, running my race with patience, and finishing my course with joy." Hence learn, 1. That the apprehension of sufferings must not shake the resolution of a christian, much less daunt the courage of a gospel minister, ver. 24. None of these things move me. True ministerial courage delights in the air of that danger where duty dwells, and will neither be beaten off from doing an incumbent duty, nor be beaten on to complacence with any known sin. Learn, 2. That the ministers of Christ should endeavour, not only to finish their ministry and course of christianity with faithfulness, but with joy; and, that they may do so, let them see that they give up themselves wholly to the service of Christ, without restriction or reserve, and live daily by faith on the meditation of the Lord Jesus Christ. Here was such a masculine spirit in our apostle, as bid defiance to death and danger; and the argument that excited him was, that he might finish his course with joy. Next the apostle declares his impartiality in preaching the gospel, ver. 27. "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Where observe, He doth not say he had declared the whole counsel of God, for who but God himself can do that? But he had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God; that is, he had not concealed from them any truth necessary to salvation; and this freed him from the blood of souls; if any perished, it was not long of him, but their blood was upon themselves. "I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men." It is happy when the ministers of God can appeal to the consciences of their people, and summon them as witnesses to bear record for them at the bar of Christ. Lastly, the apostle tells them, they were never like to see his face again; A cutting, killing word! How would it fire the zeal of ministers, and inflame the affections of the people, did they remember that in a short time they must see the faces, and hear the voices of each other upon earth no more? Lord, what fervent prayer for, what yearning of bowels towards perishing sinners would be found with us! what zeal for their conversion, what endeavours for their salvation, did we believe that the grave was making ready to receive us! how should we louden our cry to God, and how fulfil our trust to man, did we consider our grave and coffin are at hand! Our glass had but a little sand; now we are preaching, but anon it will be said of us, we are gone; "and now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching, shall see my face no more."

28 Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

29 For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.

30 Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

31 Therefore watch, and remember, that, by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.

The blessed apostle having, in the former part of his farewell sermon to the elders of Ephesus, vindicated his own sincerity among them, both as to his doctrine and practice, and cleared himself by close addressed and smart appeals to their consciences: he now urges them in a rousing and heart-melting exhortation to the utmost care and diligence in the exercise of their pastoral charge; and to take heed to themselves and the flock, to the whole flock which Christ had purchased with his blood, and the Holy Ghost had committed to their care; ver. 28. "Take heed to yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers." Here observe. A twofold duty, and a threefold motive to enforce that duty: the first duty is to take heed to themselves: the second is to take heed to all the flock. The first part of a minister's duty is to take heed unto himself. Committite animam diligentibus suam, says St. Bernard: he that neglects his own soul, will never take a faithful care of the souls of others. We must first look to ourselves, that our judgments be sound, our hearts holy, and our lives exemplary: we must take heed to ourselves, that we be fit for the employment which we undertake; this is not a burden for a child's shoulder; he that is himself a babe in knowledge, is altogether unfit to teach men the mysteries of salvation. Take we heed that our example doth not contradict our doctrine, that our practice doth not give our profession the lie: that we do as well as teach: not preach angelical sermons, and lead diabolical lives; but securing that grace to ourselves which we offer unto others, and shunning that sin ourselves which we condemn in others: and this, because we have a depraved nature, and vicious inclinations in us, as well as others; because we have a heaven to win, and a soul to save as well as others; yea, when others have only their own souls to account for, we have not only our own, but others too; in a word, because our sins do more dishonor God, more discredit religion, more gratify the devil, more harden sinners, and have more of wilfulness in them, more perfidiousness in them, and more hypocrisy in them, than other men's: and we shall certainly be adjudged by God to a double damnation for them. Well, therefore, might the apostle say to the Ephesian elders, Take heed unto yourselves; next he adds, and to all the flock. That is with a constant care and laborious diligence acquaint them with their duty, inform them of their danger, show them where their happiness lies, and the ways and means for attaining of it: and, in order to this, all the flock must be known, that it may be heeded, and we must labor to be acquainted with the state of all our people as fully as we can; we must, as the apostle before us did, visit our people from house to house, that we may know their persons, know their inclinations, and know the manner of their conversation; what sins they are most in danger of, what temptations most liable to, and what duties they neglect, either for the matter or manner of them, and give them the best encouragement, directions, and assistance we are able: this is the sum of the apostle's exhortation to the elders of Ephesus: "take heed unto yourselves, and unto all the flock." The motives to enforce the duty, follow: and they are, 1. Drawn from their office, they are overseers of the flock; that is, officers appointed by solemn ordination to teach, to guide, to govern the churches, committed to their care, and under their charge. 2. From the authority and excellency of him that called them to their office, the Holy Ghost. We read of some that were nominated by the special and immediate instinct of the Holy Ghost, as Acts i. 24. and xiii. 2. Others were ordained by the apostles, who were guided by the Holy Ghost then; and whoever is set apart to that office now, according to the rule of God's word, may truly be said to be an overseer by the Holy Ghost; Almighty God concurring to own and bless his own institution. 3. From the dear purchase which Christ paid for, and the tender regard he bears to, this his flock; "Feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Where observe, the divinity of Christ asserted, he is expressly called God, in opposition to the Arians, and their unhappy spawn the Socinians, who will allow him to be only man; but then his blood could never have purchased the church, which it is here said to do; being God and man in one person; man, that he might have blood to shed; and God, that his blood might be of infinite value, and inestimable preciousness when shed. Observe also, the force of the apostle's argument; "If the church be thus dear to Christ, the chief Shepherd, she ought to be very dear to all under-shepherds: if Christ judged her salvation worth his blood, well may his ministers judge it worth their sweat." 4. From the danger which the church is in by seducers and false teachers, ver. 29. Grievous wolves will enter, not sparing the flock; and even from among yourselves shall arise heretics, who will vent their unsound doctrines to debauch men, first in their principles, and then in their practices: therefore take heed to all the flock. Now from the whole note, I. The church is Christ's flock, consisting of sheep and lambs; Christ himself is the great and good Shepherd; his ministers under-shepherds and overseers; bloody persecutors, heretical seducers, and false teachers, are wolves which worry and divide the flock. Note, 2. That every flock should have its own pastor, and every pastor his own flock. Note, 3. That the flock should be no greater ordinarily, than the overseers are capable of taking heed of. 4. That every overseer of Christ's flock ought to take great heed, both to himself and to the whole flock, in all the parts of his pastoral work, particularly; public preaching, and private inspection.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.

Here the apostle takes a very solemn farewell of the elders of the church at Ephesus, commending them to the guidance and protection of the grace of God, which was able to build them up in holiness here, and bring them to heaven hereafter. Where observe, 1. His courteous compellation, and herein his great condescension. Although he was an apostle of the highest eminency, yet he disdains not to call these elders, who were both in office, and also in gifts and graces, much inferior to him, by the name of brethren. And now, brethren, says the apostle to the elders at Ephesus: but probably together with the elders of Ephesus, here were some of the church and people of Ephesus, who came to take their last leave of the departing apostle; and then we may remark, that there is a near relation, even that of brethren, between ministers and people, as well as between the ministers themselves, and this founded upon the account of religion and grace. Observe, 2. The apostle being now to take his last leave and farewell of the ministers and people at Ephesus, he commends them to God. It well becomes the faithful ministers of Christ at all times, when they are with their people, but especially then when they are about to leave their people, to commit and commend them unto God; that is, to commend them to God's care and keeping, and to commit them to his conduct and guidance; and this as a testimony of our faithfulness to God, whose our people are, and for whom we must become accountable to him: and also as a testimony of our love to our people, and of our fervent desires for their salvation. Observe, 3. As the apostle commends them to God, so likewise to the word of his grace: to God as the efficient cause, and to the word of his grace, as the instrumental cause of their building up; I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up. Here note, 1. That the gospel is the word of God's grace, so called, because it is the effect, the fruit, and product of rich mercy and free grace: because it reveals the free grace of God in Christ to poor sinners; because it works inherent grace and holiness in the hearts of sinners; and because it carrieth on, and perfecteth the work of grace unto glory. Note, 2. That believers who are in a state of grace, have need of the word of God for their edification and building up. Note, 3. That the word of God is able to build up believers; it is able to preserve and keep them from decaying in grace and holiness, and is able to further their growth in grace, and to bring it to perfection. Well, and wisely therefore doth the apostle say, I commend you to God and to the word of his grace; he doth not say, I commend you to God, and the impulse of his Spirit; or I commend you to God, and to the light within; or, I commend you to God, and to the traditions of the church; but I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up. Observe, 4. A superadded commendation, which is here given of the word of God's grace; it is not only able to build us up, but to give us an inheritance amongst them that are sanctified; that is, the word of God, if we follow the dictates and directions of it, will infallibly bring us to the glorious inheritance which God hath provided for all his saints.

or sanctified ones. Here note, 1. That heaven is an inheritance, not like an inheritance on earth; but it is the most sure, the most satisfying, the most durable, and the most delightful inheritance, an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Note, 2. That heaven is the inheritance of saints, of all sanctified or holy persons, and only of such; it is purchased for them, it is promised to them, it is taken up in their names, and possession of it kept for them by their forerunner. In a word heaven is prepared for them, and they are daily preparing for it; and it shall be adjudged to them at the great day. Note, 3. That this inheritance of heaven is a gift, and free gift. Luke xii. 32. "It is your Father's pleasure to give you the kingdom." This inheritance is all of grace, our right and title to it is of grace, our fitting and preparing for it is of grace; all of grace, nothing of merit: all of God, nothing of ourselves; nothing in a way of meritorious casualty, but only in the way of ministerial endeavour. Note lastly, That God gives this inheritance by his word.—to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance. The word reveals to us the notice and knowledge of this inheritance; the word makes an offer of this inheritance to every one of us, yea, it calls us to the acceptance, and invites us to the participation of it. Finally, God by his word begets his people to a lively hope of this inheritance, 1 Pet. i. 2, 4. And also prepares and fits them by the word, for the participation and possession of it, Col. i. 12. "Giving thanks to the Father, who has made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." And how doth the Father make us meet for this inheritance in glory, but by the word of his grace; "I commend you, therefore, brethren," says the apostle, "to God and to the word of his grace, which is able to give you an inheritance among them that are sanctified."

33 I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.

34 Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.

35 I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak; and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

In the conclusion of St. Paul's discourse to the elders of the church at Ephesus, he vindicates himself from the sordid sin of covetousness, affirming, that he had coveted no man's silver or gold; but by the labor of his hands, had maintained himself, and them that were with him. Where note, That it is not simply unlawful for a minister of the gospel to labor with his hands, for his own and his family's support, when the poverty of the members of the church is such, that they cannot maintain him without it. Observe farther, he directs these elders to labor as he did, if the case required it with them, as he did with him, that they might by laboring as he, be in a capacity to support the weak, and relieve the poor. Yet note, He doth not propose this his practice as a precept or precedent, or rule to all ministers; for though St. Paul labored with his hands in a case of necessity, and because false teachers were watching all advantages against him; yet he often declares a right and privilege which he had to be maintained by the church, without laboring with his hands for his own livelihood and subsistence; nay, asserts it to be the ordination and appointment of God himself, that they which preach the gospel, shall live of the gospel. Observe lastly, A remarkable saying of our blessed Saviour not recorded by the Evangelists, but undoubtedly spoken by him; namely, that it is more blessed to give than to receive: that is, the condition of the giver is more desirable than that of the receiver, and giving is more commendable than receiving. 1. The condition of the giver is more desirable than that of the receiver; because, 1. Giving is a sign of sufficiency and power; he that gives to another, is supposed to be well provided himself; he that gives, looks like a full being, and like a swelling river; whereas receiving implies want and weakness, emptiness, and unsatisfied desires. 2. Because giving includes choice: for what a man parts with to another, he has a freedom to keep himself; but the receiver is not to be his own carver, but must depend upon the courtesy of his neighbours. 3. Because the condition of the giver implies an honorable trust committed to him by God Almighty. Givers are God's almoners and stewards, the poor's guardians and patrons. An honorable trust this is, by which the lives and livelihood of the poor are in a manner committed to us. By all which it appears that the condition of the giver is more desirable than that of the receiver. Note, 2. That giving is more commendable than receiving: it is a clear evidence of a noble and virtuous disposition of mind: for, 1. It is a sign of our victory over the world, and that our conversation is in heaven; that we have worthy apprehensions of God, and honorable thoughts of his providence; and that we can trust him and give him a part of his own whenever he calls for it. 2. Giving is better than receiving, because there is a more lasting pleasure in giving than in receiving: an alma taken is soon spent and forgotten, and the pleasure of it is over in two or three moments: but the pleasure of giving bears us company all along in this world, and will keep us company in the next; there is no such satisfactory pleasure as in doing good. Let us then often remember, and always put in practice, the words of our Lord Jesus, which he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

36 ¶ And, when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37 And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him;

38 Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.

Observe here, 1. What a solemn and sacred farewell St. Paul and the elders of Ephesus take of each other; they kneeled down and prayed together; instead of a parting cup, here is a parting prayer, and is accompanied with tears; they all wept sore. There is a sufficient occasion for sorrow and weeping, when the church loses a faithful pastor, it is a public loss, and many are concerned in it. Observe, 2. How loath, how very loath they were to part with the apostle, who had so exceedingly endeared himself unto them, by his holiness, humility, and universal usefulness: accordingly, they accompany him unto the ship, and when gone off to sea, send a long look after him; being more especially grieved at these words, that they should see his face no more. Learn thence, That a faithful minister of Christ is enjoyed with much love, and finally parted from with much sorrow by those who believe and obey the gospel; parting work is hard work: how hard is it for husband and wife, for parents and children to part? and perhaps it is as hard sometimes for ministers and people, who have lived in mutual endearments, to the glory of God, and singular comfort of each other; when they are pulled one from another alive by cruel persecutors, or when dying by the king of terrors: the parting is sad; but blessed be God, the next meeting will know no parting. When ministers and people meet together at the right hand of God in heaven, they shall never part more, but shall for ever be with the Lord.

CHAPTER XXI.

The chapter before acquaints us with St. Paul's dangerous voyage to Jerusalem, and enumerates the several places through which he passed in his journey thither; namely, through Coos and Rhodes, Phenicia, Ptolemais, Tyre, Cesarea, through many parts of Europe and Asia; and at last arrives safely at Jerusalem. Oh blessed apostle! what tongue can declare, what pen can set forth the pains which thou tookest, and the hazards which thou didst run, in preaching the glad tidings of the gospel to the heathen world? And who can sufficiently magnify and holily admire the conduct of divine providence, in carrying thee cheerfully through all the difficulties of life, and enabling thee to finish thy course with joy? Lord! who would not be found faithful in thy service? Who takest such an uninterrupted and unintermitting care of thy servants, that safety evermore accompanies duty.

AND it came to pass, that, after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

The latter end of the foregoing chapter acquainted us with the sorrowful and heavy parting of the elders and church of Ephesus, from the holy apostle. Now the first verse of this chapter informs us, that it was not less sorrowful on the apostle's and his companions' part: so much the word here imports, after we were gotten from them, and παρῆλθας ἀπ' αὐτῶν: "after we were torn from, and pulled as it were limb from limb from each other;" intimating the mutual endearments which were between them whilst together, and that inexpressible sorrow which was found among them at their parting. Verily there is no stronger love, nor more endeared affection betwixt any relations upon the earth, than betwixt the ministers of Christ, and such of their people as they have been instrumental in bringing home to God. Spiritual affections are stronger than natural; the removing of a spiritual father by death, or otherwise, is like tearing limb from limb; yea, like rending the head from the body. Lord, with what great difficulty and deep reluctance did the holy apostle and the church of Ephesus here part from one another! They were pulled and torn one from another, as the word imports.

3 Now, when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burthen.

4 And finding the disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

The divine providence is not more signally discovered in governing the motions of the clouds, than it is in ordering the spirits and motions of his ministers: the motion of the clouds is not spontaneous, and from themselves, but they move as they are moved by the winds; neither can the ministers of Christ choose their own stations, and govern their own motions, but must go when and whither the Spirit and providence of God directs and guides them; as evidently appears by St. Paul's present voyage to Jerusalem; though the journey was full of danger, yet his spirit was fully bent and set upon it; I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem. It was happy for the apostle, and his great advantage, that the will of God was so plainly revealed to him, touching this his journey to Jerusalem: for no sooner did he prepare himself to obey the call of God, and undertake the journey, but he is presently assaulted by many strong temptations to decline it. The first rub he met with in his way, was from the disciples at Tyre, who spake by the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem. But did not the spirit of God then contradict itself, in bidding the apostle go, and then speaking to him by those disciples not to go? not at all: St. Paul, by extraordinary revelation, was commanded to go up to Jerusalem; these disciples, by a spirit of prophecy, only foretold the difficulties and dangers that would attend him in his journey; and so through kindness and human affections they dissuaded him from undertaking it. We must distinguish between the prediction of trouble, and the counsel of safety: the prediction of trouble; so they said through the Spirit, that it should be dangerous for Paul to go to Jerusalem. The counsel of safety proceeded from their private love and affection to him; whereby they dissuaded him from going to Jerusalem. Learn from hence, 1. That divine precept, and not providence, is to rule out our way of duty. Learn, 2. That no discouragements or hinderances whatsoever will justify our neglect of a commanded duty: whatever difficulties or discouragements lay in the way of the apostle's duty, he overcame them all with an heroic and truly christian resolution, saying, ver. 13. "I am ready not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem; for the name of Jesus."

5 And when we had accomplished those days we departed, and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city; and we kneeled down on the shore and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship: and they returned home again.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cesarea; and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, (which was one of the seven,) and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy.

Observe here, 1. That nothing could divert the apostle from his intended journey to Jerusalem: the report of suffering was no discouragement to him, nor could the persuasive entreaties of his friends prevail with him: seeing, therefore, he was resolved to go on, they all of them, with their wives and children, to testify their great respect and affection to him, accompany him out of the city; and he and they kneeling down on the shore, pray together, and take their farewell of each other. The loving communion of saints, and prayer, are the marks of Christ's true disciples. Observe, 2. The apostle's next remove towards Jerusalem, was from Tyre to Cesarea, where he lodged with Philip the evangelist; that is, one of them who were sent forth as itinerary preachers, here and there to dispense the gospel, and to confirm the churches; and one of the seven; that is, one of the seven deacons, Acts vi. Here note, That this Philip in whose house St. Paul now lodged, was before driven out of his house by Paul's persecution. See Acts viii. 1, &c. "There was a great persecution against the church, and they were all scattered abroad, and Philip went down to Samaria." This Philip who was driven out of his house by Paul when a persecutor, gladly received him into his house, being now Paul a convert; and this without any upbraiding, yea, without the least mention of what he had formerly been and done. It is an ill office to take in the filth which God has covered, or to reproach men with, or for their sins which God has pardoned: it argues some degree of envy at the grace of God, to upbraid men with the sins committed before conversion. Former miscarriages and injuries should be forgiven and forgotten upon true repentance, and we should receive them into our embraces, whom Christ has taken into his bosom; "Paul went into the house of Philip the evangelist."

10 And, as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named Agabus.

11 And, when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, thus saith the Holy Ghost, so shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

Observe here, 1. That during the apostle's stay at Cesarea in Philip's house, a certain prophet named Agabus comes thither, and prophesieth of St. Paul's bonds at Jerusalem: Where note, That though Agabus was a prophet, yet, by what appeareth to him in scripture, he was always a prophet of evil things and bad tidings: he foretold the famine before, Acts xi. and Paul's bonds now. Such messengers of God as give warnings of judgments to come, should and ought to be accepted, as well as they that bring us hopes of mercy and deliverance; that message may be true, which yet is displeasing. Observe, 2. Agabus useth a sign, after the manner of the old prophets, who often prophesied by symbols, and significant expressions, that they might the better imprint their productions on the hearts of men. Thus Isaiah went naked and barefoot, to show what the people of Israel should meet with under the king of Assyria. Isa. xx. "And Ezekiel was to pack up his stuff, and remove, to signify the people's removal into captivity." Ezek. xii. It pleased God to teach his people by visible signs, as well as by word of mouth: that what was received by both senses, seeing and hearing, might make the deeper impression upon their minds. In like manner here, Agabus uses a sign, he takes St. Paul's girdle, and binds his own hands and feet with it, signifying, that after that manner, the Jews at Jerusalem would bind the apostle, and deliver him to the Gentiles; first to the Roman governor of Judea, and afterwards to Nero the Roman Emperor. From whence we may remark, the great goodness and condescension of God, in giving the apostle so many warnings of his bonds: the Holy Ghost first made it known to him, Acts xx. That bonds and afflictions did abide him. The disciples at Tyre prophesied the same, Act xxi. v. 4. and here Agabus, by a sensible sign made it known to him; and all this, that he might thoroughly be prepared for a suffering condition. God doth not love to take his children unprovided: St. Paul therefore was not surprised, but had warning upon warning of his present danger. If a sudden and unexpected flood of miseries and calamities break in upon us, for afflictions seldom go single, it is not because we want warning, but because we are not so wise as to take warning. When we are well, and at ease, we will not think of death and the cross; and therefore if we be surprised and unprovided, we may thank our own security: our apostle here being forewarned, was fore-armed.

12 And when we heard these things, both we and they of that place besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, what mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done.

Observe here, 1. The entire affection of the disciples to the holy apostles, "both we and they of the place besought him that he would not go up to Jerusalem." Learn, that the lives and liberties of those who are eminent instruments of God's glory, are very dear and precious to the faithful servants of God. Who can blame either St. Paul's companions or the disciples here, for desiring and endeavouring the preservation of so precious an instrument as the apostle was? and yet it is not improbable but satan might have an hand in this matter, and endeavour by the apostle's friends' persuasion to weaken his resolution; for the devil oft endeavoureth to take us off from our duty by the entreaties of our friends, who mean well in what they say. Thus when St. Peter lovingly advised our Saviour, against his sufferings, "be it far from thee, Lord, this shall not be unto thee;" Mat. xvi. Get thee behind me, satan, says Christ; it was Peter's tongue, but satan tuned it: who would have thought that Christ's disciples should have been satan's instruments? We must not measure our friends' counsel by their good meaning, but by God's word: we must be deaf to all relations, that we may discharge our duty to God. Thus we find the apostle here: "he would not be persuaded," but expostulates with them: "what mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart?" Observe, 2. St. Paul's entire affection to God, and his firm resolution for his duty: "He would not be persuaded." But did the apostles do well in this, to withstand all the importunities, and reject the unanimous advice of all his friends? How doth this carriage agree with that character of heavenly wisdom, Jam. iii. 17. That it is easy to be entreated? I answer, to the practice of our duty, it is praiseworthy to be easy to be entreated, but not from our duty. St. Paul knew his duty, and understood the will of God, and therefore his friends might sooner break his heart than break his purpose. Learn hence, that no persuasions of friends, no apprehensions of dangers, should ever be able to turn us out of the way of our duty. When Peter dissuaded Christ from suffering, our Saviour rebuked him with the same indignation as he did the devil tempting him to idolatry. Observe, 3. How the apostle lovingly and gently rebukes their fond and inordinate sorrow for his departure: "what mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart?" As if he had said, "what mean these passionate tears and entreaties? Alas! whether you think it so or not, they are but so many snares and temptations of satan, to turn my feet out of the way of obedience; you do as much as in you lies to break my heart; but by the grace of God nothing shall break me off from my purpose, nor weaken my courage and resolution for God." When a saint is once satisfied in the call and command of God to any duty, he fears neither impending nor approaching dangers in the way of duty. Observe, 4. The apostle's quieting and calming arguments; with which he labors to charm their unruly passions: "I am ready both to be bound, and to die for Christ." I am ready, 1. That is, God hath fitted me for suffering work; flesh and blood is overruled in me by the spirit of God; I am prepared for whatever God pleaseth, be it a prison, be it a scaffold, be it life, be it death, I am provided for both: liberty is dear, and life is dear, but Christ is dearer than either; therefore what mean you to work against the design of God, who hath fitted and prepared my heart for suffering service? I am ready, 2. That is, my will and resolution stand in a full bent, my heart is fixed, my friends, my heart is fixed; do not therefore disorder and discompose my spirits, by casting much temptations and stumbling blocks in my way; for I am come to a point, nothing shall divert me from this noble enterprise for God, I am ready, 3. That is fully determined to comply with the call and command of God, whatever befalls me; I am not solicitous about that; my Captain that leads me on, I am sure, will bring me off safe, either dead or alive: therefore all your tears and entreaties are but cast away upon me, ye had better be quiet, and cheerfully resign me up to the will of God; for I am ready both to be bound and to die. From whence learn, that it is a blessed and excellent frame of spirit, when the servants of God are prepared and ready for the hardest services, and sharpest sufferings to which the Lord may at any time call them: "I am ready, not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." Observe, 5. The disciples' discretion; "When he would not be persuaded, they ceased;" that is, they gave over their importunities, and urged him no farther beyond his own inclinations and resolutions. It is the disposition of humble spirits to submit to those that are wiser than themselves, and not to be too stiff and peremptory in their own opinions and conceits; a lesson which most men have great need to learn. Observe, 6. The pious ground of this their discretion, namely, acquiescency in the divine will: the will of the Lord be done. They refer the event to God's determination, and submit, all to his sovereign pleasure. Thence learn, that it is the duty and desire, and ought to be the care and endeavour of all the children of God, to be willing to submit themselves and theirs to the dispensation of God's providence, in whatever befalls either them or theirs. For this we have Christ's example, Mat. xxvi. 36. "Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt." The example of David, 2. Sam. xv. 26. "Here am I, let him do what seemeth good in his sight." The example of Eli, 1. Sam. i. 18. "It is the Lord, let him do whatsoever he pleaseth." Such is his justice and righteousness, that he can do his children no wrong; and such is his tender mercy and loving kindness, that he will do them no harm. The absolute sovereignty of God over us, and the sight of God in all his providential dispensations towards us, influences at once our judgments, our wills and our affections, our expressions and actions, that we neither dare to think, speak, or act any thing in contradiction to, or opposition against the wisdom and will of God: that which is oft against our will, is not always against our interest; but if we belong to God, all afflictions upon us are federal dispensations and covenant blessings to us, and either are good, or shall work for good; therefore it is both our duty and interest to submit to the wisdom of providence, and say with these disciples, the will of the Lord be done.

* 15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple with whom we should lodge.

17 And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 ¶ And the day following Paul went in with us unto James: and all the elders were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord,—

The apostle having holily resolved, that come life, or come death, he would be obedient to the call of God by his Spirit, and that nothing should divert him from his intended journey to Jerusalem, sets forward from Cesarea to Jerusalem, accompanied with certain disciples of Cesarea, who brought him to the house of one Mnason, an old disciple, who had long ago received the faith, and now lived at Jerusalem, in whose house the apostle lodged. Here note, what a badge of honor is put upon Mnason, even that of being an old disciple; to be an old man is an honor, but to be an old disciple is a double honor; it is a resemblance of him who is the Ancient of Days: where antiquity and piety, where agedness and holiness do concur, it renders a person as like the divine Majesty as can be expected on this side glory. To be an old disciple is a greater honor than to be a king or emperor. Observe next, the apostle being come to Jerusalem, is kindly received of the church there, he enters the house of St. James the bishop of Jerusalem, where the elders that were present congratulate his arrival, and he relates to them what great things God had wrought by his ministry, and they all gave praise to God for the great and glorious success of the gospel. Learn hence, that all christians in general, but the ministers of Christ in special, ought to make a particular declaration of the great and marvellous works which the Lord hath wrought for them, and by them. Thus did St. Paul here; he was very particular, no doubt, in relating the mighty works of God in the conversion of the Gentiles by his ministry from time to time, and from place to place: and all this, not to extol himself, but to exalt God for receiving the Gentiles into the faith and fellowship of the gospel.

—And said unto him, thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law:

(No. 36.)

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying, that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs.

22 What is it therefore? the multitude must needs come together; for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do, therefore, this that we say to thee: we have four men which have a vow on them;

24 Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may shave their heads: and all may know that those things whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing, but that thou thyself also walkest orderly and keepest the law:

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded, that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

We had St. Paul's report to the church at Jerusalem, of the success which God had given him in his ministry amongst the Gentiles; this is related in the foregoing paragraph of the chapter; in these verses before us, we have the church's reply to the apostle's relation. They glorified God; First, for the great success given to the word of his grace amongst the Gentiles: and withal they acquaint him with the like success, which the preaching of the gospel had amongst the Jews; "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of the Jews there are which do believe;" the original runs, "how many tens of thousands do believe;" which intimates the great and wonderful success of the gospel: well might our Saviour compare it to a grain of mustard-seed, seeing it had spread itself far and near in so short a time. If we consider the smallness of its beginning, the despicableness of the instruments, the shortness of the time, the obstinacy and prejudices of the Jews against the gospel, and yet remark the vast number of thousands and ten thousands of the Jews that did already believe, embrace and entertain it; we need not wonder that St. Paul, 1. Tim. iii. 16, reckons it as one of the great mysteries of godliness, that Jesus Christ was preached to the Gentiles, and believed on in the world: that is, so many thousands both Jews and Gentiles were brought to own him, and submit to him as Lord and Saviour. Observe, next, the advice given by the church at Jerusalem to St. Paul, concerning the Jews which did believe in that place. It seems the Jews, though they had received the gospel, yet thought that the ceremonial law must still be observed; therefore in condescension to their weakness, and to prevent their taking offence, they advise the apostle, not as a thing necessary in itself, but as an expediency in reference to their weakness, to conform himself to some of the Jewish ceremonies and purifications; for though they were not then needful, yet were they not unlawful; they might then be used, when the use of them would any ways conduce to the gaining and bringing over the Jews to a love of christianity. The synagogue was not hastily to be cast out of the church like the heathenish superstitions; but to die by degrees, and be decently interred. Hence note, that the law of Moses, as to its moral part, Christ continued as his law: the ceremonial part, as to the use of types and ceremonies signifying him that was to come, this was abrogated at Christ's coming; and the political part ceased when the Jewish polity was dissolved; but the abrogation of the whole was not fully made known at the first, but by degrees; and the exercise of it long tolerated to the Jews. Observe, lastly, the particular advice which they gave the apostle, to go into the temple, and perform the legal ceremony of purification; "we have four men which have a vow; them take and purify thyself, that all may know that thou walkest orderly, and keepest the law:" that is, "seeing we have four men here which have a Nazarite's vow upon them, the time of which vow is now expired, and they are to shave themselves ceremoniously in the temple; go thou with them, and perform the legal ceremony of purification there, that the people may know, that the report of thee is not true; but that thou, being a Jew, dost thyself keep the law." Here we may observe the truth of what St. Paul elsewhere declared, that "to the Jews he became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jews; yea, became all things to all men, that he might gain some." A noble pattern for the ministers of the gospel to write after, in yielding, so far as we may without sin or scandal, to the weakness of others, in order to the furtherance of the great ends of our ministry among our people; to the Jews I became as a Jew.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them, entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

27 And, when the seven days were almost ended, the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him, 28 Crying out, men of Israel, help: this is the man that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place; and further, brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had seen before with him in the city, Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the Temple.)

30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut.

Observe here, 1. That at the instance and importunities of his friends, St. Paul is persuaded to purify himself in the temple, partly to gain upon the affections of the believing Jews, who were still zealous for the law; and partly to confute the false aspersions of them that reported him to be against all ceremonial observances. If any had grudged that, after the coming of the gospel, so much cost should be bestowed on the law, and say, with murmuring Judas, to what purpose was this waste? The law might truly answer with our Saviour, and say, "he did it for my burial, and for the more solemn interment of me." Observe, 2. How blind was the zeal, and how furious the rage of the unbelieving Jews against the apostle! They seek, and because they could not find, they take an occasion to vent their malice upon him; accordingly, they put the whole city of Jerusalem into an uproar, upon a pretence, that he had brought Trophimus, a Gentile, into the temple, to profane and pollute it; and in their blind rage, they dragged the apostle out of the temple, as a profaner of it. Well might the apostle say, he was in deaths often, 2 Cor. xi. 23. He was now in danger to be pulled in pieces by this tumult; and of being made a sacrifice to the fury of the rabble: but God who never wants ways and means for the seasonable succour and relief of his servants, in an unexpected manner, and by unthought of means, rescued the apostle from the jaws of death and danger, as the next verses inform us.

31 ¶ And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar;

32 Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them. And, when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done?

34 And some cried one thing, and some another, among the multitude: and, when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was that he was borne of the soldiers, for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, away with him.

Note here, 1. How the great and gracious God provideth seasonable rescues for his persecuted and perplexed saints and servants, when they went about to kill Paul, God raises him up as a deliverer. Note, 2. The unexpected instruments of the apostle's deliverance, and that was an heathen governor: the Romans never durst trust such vast multitudes at Jewish festivals, without a strong garrison to be a check upon them; accordingly the governor, having tidings of the tumult, brings down a band of soldiers to see the peace kept, he rescues the injured apostle out of their hands, commands him to be bound with two chains, as Agabus had foretold, and the soldiers bear him up in their arms from the violence of the people. Hence we learn, 1. That a bad government, even an heathen government, is better than anarchy. Under a tyrannical government, many may be uneasy, but under popular rage none can be long at rest. Learn, 2. That heathens are oftentimes the protectors of christians against the blind rage of those that profess to worship the same God. St. Paul and these unbelieving Jews worship the same God, and yet the heathen soldiers were fain by force to carry and guard the apostle from the fury of the bloody unbelieving Jews. Thus God raiseth up what instruments he pleases to subserve his own gracious ends and designs in the preservation of his people. The barbarous heathen soldiers protect St. Paul, and keep him from being torn in pieces by the Jews, who worshipped the same God with him.

37 And, as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, may I speak unto thee? who said, canst thou speak Greek?

38 Art thou not that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul said I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And, when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people: and, when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying,

Observe, 1. The justice which the chief captain, though an heathen soldier, doth St. Paul: he demands what he had done before he punishes him: an heathen would hear the cause before he condemns the person; a piece of justice which the law of nature requires and obliges to. Observe, 2. The unjust suspicion which the chief captain had of St. Paul's being a very bad man. Art thou not that Egyptian which madest an uproar, and leddest out four thousand men that were murderers? Here St. Paul, without cause is suspected for a rebel, a seducer and a murderer, by the chief captain. It is not in the power of the most unspotted innocence to protect from jealousies and suspicion, from censure and calumny, from slander and false accusation. The peaceable apostle is suspected for a turbulent incendiary; art thou not the Egyptian that madest an uproar? Observe, 3. The just and necessary apology which St. Paul makes for himself, I am a Jew of Tarsus, a citizen of no mean city. Where note, 1. He describes his original; I am a Jew, not that wicked Egyptian, which you suspected me to be; but a Jew of a religious and noble extraction. Learn thence, that to be descended from religious and noble ancestors is a desirable privilege, and singular prerogative. St. Paul was a Jew descended from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the holy patriarchs. Note, 2. He describes the country where he was born; he was born in Cilicia, a rich and fruitful country in Asia. Learn thence, That to be born in a rich and fruitful country (if godly and religious) is a very considerable favor and privilege; it was not blind chance and fortune, but a wise and merciful providence of God which appointed both the place of our birth, and determineth the bounds of our habitation. What mercy is it that we were born, not in Spain, not in Turkey, not in a land of darkness, but in a valley of vision! If the Spaniards have the golden mines, we have the golden treasure of the scriptures, more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold, Ps. xix. Note, 3. He describes not only his country, but his native city, and the dignity of it: he was born in Tarsus a citizen of no mean city, it being the metropolis or chief city of all Cilicia; in this famous city was the apostle born. Learn thence, That to be born in a noble, free, and famous city, especially if religious, is a desirable favor and privilege. St. Paul was born in the noble city of Tarsus; but how could he then say as he did, Acts xxii. that he was a Roman? Answer, So he was: but not by birth, but by immunity and privilege. Tarsus was invested with the Roman privileges, and made free of Rome by M. Antonius: thus Paul was free born, and declared that they ought not to scourge a Roman citizen. Note, lastly, That though the forementioned privileges are considerable privileges, namely, to be descended from noble ancestors, to be born in a famous country, and in a free city, passages of divine providence not to be overlooked or disregarded, but very highly valued, and thankfully acknowledged; yet must it be remembered, that all these are but outward and temporal privileges common to the worst as well as the best of men; such privileges as a man may enjoy, and yet be under the wrath of God, and the guilt of eternal damnation. Let us labor to be noble minded, as well as nobly descended: by regeneration born from above, otherwise we are low born, mean born, be our parents never so high. Thus the chapter concludes with an account of the apostle's eminent preservation in a time of imminent danger; but when likely to have been torn to pieces by the riotous rabble, God stirs up the chief captain, an heathen, belonging to the bloody trade of war, to rescue oppressed innocence: and the guard of soldiers, who had no manner of affection for Paul, God sets as a life guard about his person, they bear him up in their arms, give him liberty to speak for himself; and his apology, or defensative plea, we have recorded in the following chapter.

CHAPTER XXII.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, we have the apostle craving leave of the chief captain to speak unto the people, who, without any just cause, had made a violent assault upon him, and attempted to take away his life. Liberty of speech being granted him, he stands upon the stairs, near the gate of the castle, in which he was a prisoner, makes a sign to the people to hold their peace, and when they gave audience, in the Hebrew tongue he thus bespeaks them.

MEN, and brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence; and he saith,)

3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous towards God, as ye all are this day.

4 And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.

5 As also the highpriest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there, bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

Here begins the apostle's apology, or defensative plea, which he makes for himself before the people at Jerusalem, who, in the foregoing chapter, had so injuriously treated him: in which apologetical narration, we have these particulars observable. First observe, with what lenity and mildness he bespeaks his cruel and pestilent persecutors, the people of the Jews: he accosts them with titles of respect and honor; men, brethren, and fathers; not with opprobrious invectives; he doth not render evil for evil, or railing for reviling; he had not so learned Christ, he knew how to suffer reproach for the gospel; but to persecute his persecutors with hard names and characters of reproach, was a piece of zeal which St. Paul and the holy sufferers of those times were little acquainted with. Observe, 2. How the apostle insinuates himself into his auditors, that so he might gain their attention to what was spoken; men, brethren, and fathers, hear ye, I pray, my defence which I make unto you. There is a lawful and pious insinuation for gaining the attention of our auditors, which the ministers of Christ may and ought to make use of, as the workman that would drive his nail, dips it in oil. We gain our auditors' attention by our courteous and loving compellations: men, brethren, and fathers, hearken. Observe, 3. The apology or plea itself, in which he sets before them, 1. His extraction, I am a Jew, born in Tarsus: 2. His education, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel: 3. His profession, he was zealous towards God: that is, he was one of that sect among the Jews which were called Zealots, and was very strict and exact in the observation of the law, a bitter enemy to christianity, and a bloody persecutor of all that owned themselves the disciples of Jesus, as the high priest very well knows, says he, "from whom I received a commission, that if I found any of this way, whether men or women, I should bring them bound unto Jerusalem." Here note, that Damascus was five or six days' journey from Jerusalem; yet Paul when a persecutor, sticks not at it; but spurs on through fire and water to glut his malice and revenge on the poor members of Jesus Christ. Learn thence, that persecutors will spare neither purse nor pains, they will stick and stop at nothing, though never so toilsome and hazardous, so they may but satisfy their revenge upon the poor disciples of Jesus Christ: "I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prison both men and women."

6 And it came to pass, that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus, about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

Our apostle having related what he was before his conversion, in the foregoing verses, in these and the following verses he declares the manner of his conversion; namely, that when he was travelling to Damascus to pursue his persecuting design, a great light shined round about him, upon which he fell to the ground, and heard these words articulately spoken to him: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Where observe, that Christ takes the opposition made against his gospel, and the persecution cast upon him against his members, as done unto himself, it being against his friends, his cause and interest: as the blow is unto the head, redounds unto the members, so the slings and injuries offered to the members, are resented by the head:

Christ said not thus, (when upon earth) unto his murderers, Why bind ye me? Why buffet ye me? Why scourge ye me, and crucify me? But now when his members suffered, he cries out from heaven, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Lord, thou art more tender of thy body mystical than thou wast of thy body natural; more sensible of thy members' sufferings, than of thine own. Observe next, How ready the apostle was to understand and know, and how desirous to execute and to do the will of God, Who art thou Lord? and what wilt thou have me to do? We may sooner find fire without heat, than a true convert without operative grace. Observe farther, Christ's answer to Paul's inquiry, Who art thou, Lord? says Paul: I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest, saith Christ. Where note, That contemned, though not contemptible name, Jesus of Nazareth, is owned by Christ from heaven. Mark, he said not, I am Jesus the Son of God, I am Jesus the heir of the world, and Lord of all: but I am Jesus of Nazareth; he gloried in that reproach which his enemies cast upon him, Jesus of Nazareth; he owned his name from heaven, to teach his members not to be ashamed of it when reproached by it here on earth. Observe lastly, The witnesses of Paul's conversion, The men that were with him, who saw the light, but heard not the voice. It is very probable that he had a great number of officers with him, to bring both men and women that professed christianity bound to Jerusalem. These saw the light shining, and heard a confused noise like thunder, but they heard not the articulate sound, much less the efficacious voice of Christ, which spake so convincingly to his soul. Lord, how many are there who come under the preaching of the gospel, that, with Paul's companions, hear only a confused noise, and empty sound? they do not hear the efficacious voice of Christ, speaking to their hearts with a strong hand, and so remain shut up under the power of unbelief.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12 And one Ananias, a devout man, according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there.

13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he said, the God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth.

(No. 37)

15 For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

16 And now, why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

Here observe, 1. That although Christ converted Paul himself, yet Ananias as his minister must instruct him; by Christ is grace infused; but by his ministers increased. Such an honor doth Christ put upon the ministers of the gospel, that he makes use of their endeavours (ordinarily) both for the production and augmentation of grace in the hearts of his people. Oh the necessity and usefulness of a standing ministry! It is a singular favor to have the mind of God made known to us by men like unto ourselves: and behold the honor which God puts upon his ministry, in using them as conduit-pipes for conveying the water of life unto us, which is not ordinarily communicated immediately from himself, nor immediately received by us! Observe, 2. The title given by Ananias to Saul, Brother Saul. They were now brethren by faith and profession, owning the same God, united to the same Saviour, animated by the same spirit, encouraged by the same promises, partakers of the same hope, and heirs of the same glory: as the scripture speaks of a brotherhood betwixt Christ and believers, He is not ashamed to call them brethren; so it speaks of a brotherhood betwixt believers themselves, Love the brotherhood; that is the whole fraternity and society of christians, who are Sanguine Christi conglutinati: Cemented by the blood of Christ, and united by the bond of love: Observe, 3. Ananias acquaints Saul with the special favors which God intended for him: The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, or taken thee by the hand, as the word signifies, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that just One, (so he calls the Blessed Jesus) to convince them of their sin in putting him to death: And be a witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. The work of the ministers of the gospel is now to witness for, hereafter to witness against; now they witness of God and his truth, and persuade sinners to believe it; hereafter they will witness against sinners for not believing and obeying the truth of God. Lord, what a sad consideration is this, that the ministers of Christ must be brought in as witnesses against the souls of their neighbours and friends, and be forced to testify to their faces for their condemnation! Ah, Lord, with what an heart must a poor minister study, when he considereth, that every sermon that he preaches must be brought in for a witness against many, if not most of his hearers? Doubtless this sad reflection makes every faithful minister of Christ study hard, pray hard, intreat hard, be earnest and instant in season, and out of season, that they may not be condemners of their people's souls. Observe, 4. The advice which Ananias gave to this new convert to take upon him the badge of christianity, to wit baptism. Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins: Here note, That sacraments are not empty, insignificant signs; God by his grace and blessing renders his own ordinances effectual for those great ends for which his wisdom has appointed them; be baptized and wash away thy sins: as water cleanseth the body, so the blood of Christ, signified by water, washes away the guilt of the soul. Where true faith is, together with the profession of it by baptism, there is salvation promised, Mark xvi. 6. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.

17 And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance;

18 And saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19 And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee.

20 And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21 And he said unto me, Depart; for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

St. Paul having thus declared to the Jews his wonderful manner of conversion, proceeds next to acquaint them how desirous he was to have preached to the Jews rather than to the Gentiles, if the will of God had seen fit; but it proved otherwise; for, as he was praying in the temple, he had a vision, in which he was commanded to hasten out of the city: because his former zeal in opposing the gospel would hinder his present preaching of it from being successful: against this he humbly argued, that his former zeal against christianity might, he hoped, be an argument to persuade the Jews, his countrymen, to embrace christianity. But this argument did not prevail for his staying at Jerusalem; but he was commanded to depart from thence to preach the gospel to the despised gentiles, who had not such strong exceptions against him, but, would with more readiness embrace his doctrine. Learn hence, 1. That carnal reasonings are very apt to rise in the hearts of God's own servants, and cause them to object something against their obedience to the divine commands; here the apostle objects, that according to his reason, he saw greater probability of doing good by his ministry among the Jews, than he could hope for among the Gentiles, who would be afraid of him, as Ananias was; but Christ repeats his command, Depart and get thee hence, for I will send thee to the gentiles. And now the apostle doth no longer dispute but dispatch. This teaches us, 2. To lay by all our carnal reasonings and vain pretences, when once the call and command of God is clear, and no longer cavil, but comply; no longer object, but instantly obey. We may safely follow God blindfold when once we have assurance that he goes before us, and obey every command without hesitation or limitation.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live.

23 And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air.

24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25 ¶ And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.

30 On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

Observe here, 1. With what patience the Jews heard the apostle's discourse, until he made mention of the Gentiles, and that he was appointed to preach to them: upon which they brake forth into fury and passion, and expressed their fury by throwing dust into the air, and casting off their clothes, as if they would presently stone him, whom they looked upon as the worst of villains, and unworthy to live:

Where we may remark at once, both what a vile opinion the Jews had of the Gentiles, whom they called and accounted dogs; and what an high esteem they had of themselves, and a proud conceit of their own deservings, as if the favors of heaven belonged to none but themselves who yet trampled upon them, when they were tendered to them. Observe, 2. What a vile esteem those wicked Jews had of the holy and innocent apostle, who desired above all things to preach the glad tidings of the gospel to them, and longed most affectionately for the conversion and salvation of them: they account him the greatest villain upon earth, and unworthy to live upon it: but the good man had learnt (and let all the faithful ministers of Christ learn it after him) to take pleasure in reproaches, in persecutions, in necessities and distresses for Christ's sake: "Aw y with such a fellow from the earth, it is not meet that he should live." Observe, 3. The pious prudence and innocent policy which the apostle uses for his own preservation; when they were about to bind him to a post, in order to the scourging of him, the apostle declares himself a free citizen of Rome, by being born in one of the cities which the Roman emperor had made free; accordingly St. Paul pleads for himself the privilege of a Roman citizen, who neither ought to be bound nor beaten. Though we may not render evil for evil, yet we may right ourselves by all lawful means. Christ allows as much of the serpent as the dove, in his servants, provided the subtilty of the one doth not destroy the simplicity of the other: the head of the serpent, and the heart of the dove, do best together; for as policy without piety is too subtle to be good, so piety without policy is too simple to be safe. Observe, 4. How the chief captain fearing he had done more than he could answer, because it was death for any one in authority to violate the Roman privileges; therefore more out of fear than love, or more out of love to himself than the apostle, he looses St. Paul's bonds. Thence note, That when at any time the persecutors of the saints do desist from their bloody purposes, it is not out of love to them, but love to themselves. Observe lastly The saints' deliverances from affliction and persecution, whilst on this side heaven, are not total or final, but momentary and partial. The apostle was delivered from his chains, not from his confinement: though unbound, not set at liberty: next day we find him before the great council, or sanhedrim, and fresh bonds and afflictions abide him. Little rest is to be expected by the members, and less rest by the faithful ministers of Jesus Christ in this world. Blessed be God for the believing hopes of an eternal rest; where the fury of the persecutor, the injuries of the oppressor, shall cease for ever; where no sin shall affect us, no sorrow afflict us, no danger affright us; but we shall be perfectly like unto God, as well in purity as immortality. In the mean time, may we the ministers of God, who are set for the defence of the gospel, bear the burden and heat of the day, with patience and courage, resolution and constancy; may we gird up the loins of our minds, not accounting either our labors or our lives dear unto us, so we may finish our course with joy, and fulfil the ministry which we have received of the Lord, glorying in our reproaches for well doing; yea, though we be accounted the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things: for when the chief shepherd shall appear, we shall receive a crown of glory, which fadeth not away.—Amen.

CHAPTER XXIII.

In the foregoing chapter we find the apostle in prison, but having leave given him to make his defence; which accordingly he did, but little to the satisfaction of the enraged multitude. In this chapter we find him before the sanhedrim, or great council at Jerusalem, professing his own innocency; but instead of setting him at liberty, the cursed Jews conspire his destruction, but the providence of God wonderfully interposes for his deliverance, as the chapter before us fully informs us.

AND Paul earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

2 And the highpriest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law.

Here we have observable the apostle's sober and ingenuous profession and protestation, Ananias' insolent and injurious injunction, St. Paul's zealous answer and contestation. Observe, 1. The apostle's sober and ingenuous profession and protestation, ver. 2. I have lived in all good conscience unto this day; that is during his continuance in the Jewish religion, and since his conversion to the christian religion. he had walked uprightly, and according to his knowledge, and the light of his conscience. But had Paul a good conscience, when he persecuted the christians? Answer, He went according to his conscience when he persecuted; he verily thought he did God service in so doing, and it was not any selfish end or sinister design he propounded to himself, but zeal for his religion provoked him to persecution, Phil. iii. 6. Concerning zeal persecuting the church; it is certainly a man's duty to follow his conscience; but then, it is as much his duty to inform his conscience, as it is to follow it; I have lived in all good conscience until this day. Here note, The apostle sets forth his good conscience these four ways: 1. From the goodness of his conversation; I have lived: A good conversation is the best evidence of a good conscience. God doth not measure men's sincerity by the tides of their affections, but by the constant bent of their resolutions, and the general course and tenor of their conversations. Every man's conscience is as his life is. 2. From the generality of his care and obedience; I have lived in all good conscience; if it be not a conscience all good, it is no good conscience at all. Herod had some good conscience, he did many things; but the apostle went farther, he lived not in some, but in all good conscience, 3. The apostle sets forth the goodness of his conscience from the integrity of it towards God; I have lived in all good conscience before God. Many a man's conscience passeth for a good conscience before men, and perhaps before himself, which yet are not good before God the judge of conscience. 4. From his continuance and constancy, Until this day; I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day: It is not sufficient to begin a good life, and to have a good conscience; but we must keep it too, and that all our days, even to our last day. Happy man! that can truly say at his dying day, I have lived in all good conscience until this day. Observe, 2. As the apostle's solemn protestation, so the highpriest's injurious injunction: Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth. Here note, What is the reward and portion of a good conscience from the world; to be smitten, either on the mouth, or with the mouth; either with the fist, or with the tongue. There is nothing so encourages men of wicked consciences, as the profession and practice of a good conscience doth: but better ten blows on the face, than one on the heart; better a thousand blows for a good conscience, than one from it. Observe, 3. St. Paul's zealous answer and contestation, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall. Where note, 1. That although the apostle did not smite again as he was smitten, though he did not smite Ananias on the cheek, as he smote him on the mouth; yet he gives him a check and sharp reproof for his violence and injustice. Thence learn, That christian patience, though it binds a man's hands, yet it doth not always bind his tongue; though it lays a law upon a man to forbear violence, yet it lays not a law upon him to enjoin him to silence. St. Paul, though he did not strike, yet he durst speak; though he held his hands, yet he did not hold his peace: though religion pinions a man's arms from striking, yet it doth not seal up a man's lips from speaking; but we may declare both our own innocency, and others' injustice. Note, 2. St. Paul doth not say, God shall judge thee, or God shall plague thee; but God shall smite thee: denoting, That as there is always equity, so sometimes a retaliation in the executions of divine justice, or a recompensing like for like: God sometimes returns smiting for smiting, so that the sinner is forced to cry out, As I have done so God hath requited me. God punishes sometimes in the same kind, sometimes in the same manner, sometimes in the same place; that sinners are forced to cry out, Righteous art thou, O Lord! and just are thy judgments.

4 And they that stood by, said, Revilest thou God's highpriest?

Observe here, That Ananias the highpriest having commanded the apostle, unheard and uncondemned, to be smitten, the apostle denounces the just judgment of God upon him for the same; yet not in a way of imprecation, but prediction; rather foretelling what would come, than wishing or desiring that it should come; not in a way of revenge, or recompensing evil for evil; but in a way of ministerial reproof, which the standers by called reviling, Revilest thou God's highpriest? 1. Thence learn, That profane sinners look upon the faithful reproofs, when the ministers of God give them for their lewdness, to be no better than revilings; they think we revile them, if we do but rebuke them; whereas, though we chasten sinners with the rod of reproof, we dare not sting them with the scorpion of reproach.

5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the highpriest: For it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

Several interpretations are given by expositors of these words, I wist not brethren, that he was the highpriest: 1. Some think that St. Paul did not really know the highpriest, having been gone so long from Jerusalem; and the highpriest being made yearly. Others say, 2. That there being a great throng about him, the apostle could not distinctly hear who it was that spoke to him. Some understand it of absolute denial, that any such office as that of the highpriest ought then to be in being. As if the apostle had said, "I do not own any man to be a lawful highpriest now, that function being abolished and dissannulled at the coming of the Messias." Again, 4. Others understand the words, as if the apostle denied him to be the lawful highpriest, one of God's appointing, he being one of man's making, having purchased the place with money; for the power and covetousness of the Romans put a new highpriest every year to officiate; accordingly St. Paul knowing this man to be none of the posterity of Aaron, but brought in by sordid gain, might justly disown him to be the highpriest. Lastly, there are who affirm, that the apostle did certainly see and know the highpriest; and that his meaning is; "That having received such unjust usage in the court as to be openly smitten in the time of hearing, he did not know, that is, he did not consider who it was that spake to him, and therefore spoke hastily and unadvisedly." The scripture will not bear us out to use ill words to magistrates, should we be, as St. Paul there was, ill used by them; yet are magistrates no more to be flattered than they are to be reproached: the greatest may be reprov'd, and with a gracious severity told of their faults; and St. Paul did no more. It is no sin to tell the judgment of God, which will certainly come upon injurious and unjust oppressors.

6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

Observe here, The innocent policy which the apostle uses for his own preservation: he perceiving that the council before whom he stood, were not all of a piece, but patched up of pharisees, and sadducees, he publicly professes himself a pharisee by education, and of that persuasion now in point of the resurrection.—Thus at once he cast in a bone of contention between the sadducees who denied the resurrection, and the pharisees who owned it; and obliged the pharisees, at least as to that opinion, to take his part, and so by pious prudence he turned their opposition against him upon one another; that by setting them at variance he might the better escape. Learn hence, That an innocent and prudent policy may warrantably be made use of by the members and ministers of Jesus Christ, without any blemish to their holy profession; in order to our preservation from the heads of persecutors, a serpentine subtlety may be made use of, together with a dove-like innocency. Thus did St Paul here, when he perceived that one part were sadducees, and the other pharisees, he cried out, &c."

7 ¶ And, when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the pharisees and the sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 For the sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit; but the pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry; And the scribes that were of the pharisees' part, arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man: but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God.

Observe here, 1. How sad a state, and how bad a condition was the Jewish church now in, when in the sanhedrim, or great council, men had power and authority, who believed no life but this; and what hypocrites were the pharisees, who could thus incorporate and embody with damnable heretics, the sadducees; and yet at the same time hated and persecuted christians. The sadducees were so far from believing that there was any spirit, that they blasphemously maintained, that God himself was not spiritual, but only a corporeal Being. When men sin with obstinacy against supernatural light, God justly draws from them even natural light, and suffers them to fall from one degree of error to another. Observe, 2. How partiality will change men's judgments, according to the interest of a party or faction. The pharisees were bitter enemies to the apostle; but because he owned himself of their sect, they instantly take part with him, and cry, We find no fault with him. The feuds about religion are commonly the sharpest feuds; men are more fond of the notions of their brains, than they are of the issue of their bodies: Odia religiosorum sunt acerbissima: "Religious hates are hottest." Observe, 3. How the dissensions of God's adversaries oftentimes become the deliverance of God's servants. Thus here the pharisees and sadducees quarrel about the resurrection: the pharisees justify St. Paul, and tell them that oppose him, "They are in danger of fighting against God." Thus God, when he pleaseth, can find or make patrons of his people, and raise up friends from amongst his very enemies, to defend his cause.

10 And, when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.
(No. 37.)

11 And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

St. Paul was now in the midst of difficulty and danger; but observe how seasonably God steps in for his succour and deliverance: First, he stirs up that heathen tribune, the chief captain Lysias, who was present at the trial, to see his prisoner have fair play; the Lord stirs up this man to rescue the apostle from the hands of violence, by which he was in danger of being pulled in pieces, and he is returned safe into the castle again. O how do God's encouragements evermore accompany his commands! His faithful servants, when they suffer for him, shall certainly be delivered by him, either in trouble or out of trouble. Secondly, God comforts the suffering apostle with his own presence, and with the gracious manifestations of his special favor, "The Lord stood by him, and said, be of good cheer, Paul." Where note, That if the Lord stand by, and be graciously present with his servants, in a suffering hour, it is no matter how many and how mighty they be that do withstand them, and appear against them. No doubt these words, be of good cheer Paul, turned the apostle's prison into a palace, yea into a paradise, and enabled him to bid a bold defiance to all the devilish designs of the Jews in Jerusalem against him; having got such good security for his safety, even from God himself, in the faith of which our apostle holily triumphs, saying "If God be for us, who can be against us!" Rom. viii. 31. That is none can be against us, either safely or successfully. The presence of God with his suffering servants outweighs all their discouragements.

12 And when it was day, certain of the Jews, banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13 And there were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

14 And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now, therefore, ye with the council signify to the chief captain, that ye bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would enquire something more perfectly concerning him; and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

Observe here, 1. A barbarous and bloody plot, a cursed combination and conspiracy against the life of the innocent and useful apostle: no sooner was it day-light, but the wicked Jews bind themselves by an oath, never to eat or drink more, until they eat the apostle's flesh, and drink his blood. "Thus the wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth." Psalm xxxvii. 12. Observe, 2. The numbers which were engaged in this conspiracy, more than forty; they all agreed as one man. Lord, how numerous, how unanimous, how resolute and outrageous are the enemies of thy holy religion, to carry on their accursed contrivances for the extirpation of it! Thus was it here, these enemies were numerous, more than forty. The devil's designs never miscarry for want of fit instruments; he has a party ever ready to oppose the gospel in every place. And as they were unanimous, as well as numerous, they combined together in one cursed bond: here was unity, but not an unity in the truth, but a conspiracy against it: here was agreement and friendship, but it was like that of Herod and Pilate against Christ, and not for him: and they were resolute and outrageous, They bound themselves under a curse, under a bloody vow, to pursue their purpose of murdering the apostle. It has been the old policy of the enemies of the church to oblige and bind themselves by oaths and excommunications, by leagues and associations, to carry on their wicked and bloody designs against the church: "They were more than forty, which made this conspiracy." Observe, 3. The quality of the persons which were engaged in this bloody purpose; they were the sadducees, who denied the immortality of the soul, and a life after death. And they apply themselves to the highpriest, and the sanhedrim or great council, not doubting of his and their readiness to join with them. O what a low ebb was the Jewish religion now at! What an highpriest and priesthood was there that must head a confederacy of murdering sadducees! How great was the degeneracy of the Jewish church, when their chief priests were thus ready to comply with, and contribute their best assistance to such a cruel crew of cut throats and bloody assassins! But they had almost filled up the measure of their sins, and their final destruction was near approaching. Observe lastly, What craft and cruelty, what fraud and force, are here found combined together in the church's enemies. The council must court the captain, that he bring down his prisoner, "as though they would enquire something more perfectly concerning him." Thus was the plot against the apostle's life laid craftily as well as cruelly; under a pretence of having the prisoner re-examined, they contrive to have him brought down from the castle, and in his way to the council, they combined together for his destruction. Lord, abate the power of the church's enemies, since their malice cannot be abated.

16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain; for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is it that thou hast to tell me?

20 And he said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to-morrow into the council, as though they would enquire somewhat of him more perfectly.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him; and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

Note here, 1 That no conspiracies are or can be kept secret from God, who can both detect them, and defeat them at his pleasure. Note 2 The remarkable providence of God in bringing this conspiracy to the knowledge of St. Paul's sister's son: he was perhaps by, when the conspirators were contriving the mischief, and overheard them. It is happy for the innocent, that the malicious cannot keep their own counsel. God oftentimes causeth the tongues of his people's enemies to fall upon themselves, and they discover the wicked purposes of their hearts, which none but themselves were privy to. Note, 3. How the hearts of all men are in the hands of the Lord, and he turneth them as he pleaseth. This is evident from the chief captain's great humanity towards St. Paul, and his courteous humility towards his sister's son, taking the youth by the hand, and as readily giving him both audience and dispatch; such a sovereignty and dominion has God over the hearts of men, that he can instantly incline them as he pleaseth, and make very enemies become benefactors at his pleasure.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me.

23 ¶ And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

Observe here, 1. How wonderfully God overruled the heart of the chief captain in that he took care both of St. Paul and the young man also; he bids the young man depart; for had it been known that he had discovered the conspiracy, they had conspired against his life; and had not the chief captain conveyed away the apostle, his enemies who had been disappointed in this, would have made further attempts against his life. Thus wonderfully doth the good providence of God work for his servants' preservation. Observe, 2. What a strong guard does God raise and set round the apostle for his defence and safety, even a guard of heathen soldiers, to secure him from the Jewish rage; two hundred soldiers, threescore and ten horsemen, and spearmen two hundred. What a royal life-guard was here raised for the apostle's safe conduct to Cesarea! None of these soldiers intended him any good; but God made use of them as effectually, as if they had had the greatest good-will for him. God can make bad persons show kindness to his good servants, and do his will by them, who know nothing of his mind and will. When God has work to do, he will find instruments to do it by. And though we see them not, yet are they never the farther off.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner;

26 Claudius Lysias, unto the most excellent governor Felix, sendeth greeting;

27 This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman.

28 And, when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council;

29 Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also, to say before thee, what they had against him—Farewel.

The chief captain, Lysias, having sent Paul under a strong guard to Cesarea by night, where Felix the Roman governor resided, he writes a letter to acquaint Felix with the accusation laid to the prisoner's charge. In which letter, observe, 1. The title given to the Roman governor, Most excellent; Claudius Lysias to the most excellent governor Felix, sendeth greeting: Titles of civil honor and respect given to persons in place and power are agreeable to the mind and will of God. There is an honor which belongs to men, with respect to their external degree and place, when none is due to them with respect to their internal qualifications.

He that is very honorable as to this place, may not deserve any honor as to his worth; yet ought he to be honored so far as his place requireth—Observe, 2. How God overruled the heart and pen of this Captain Lysias, to do the apostle right, in representing his case fairly and indifferently: That he found nothing brought against him that was punishable, either with death or bonds, by the Roman law. Observe, 3. How triflingly he speaks of the great things in question concerning our blessed Redeemer's death and resurrection, as also of the whole gospel: he calls them, undervaluingly, Questions of their law. As the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God, so the manifold wisdom of God is accounted and esteemed folly by the ignorant and blind world. Yet observe, 4. How God overruled his very slighting of these controversies in dispute, for the apostle's advantage; he being by that means preserved from the rage of the Jews; when this man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed by them, I came with an army and rescued him. Behold how God accomplishes his own design for the preservation of his servants, by the hands of those from whom destruction could rather have been expected. Thus here, God made use of an heathen captain to rescue and defend the apostle from the enraged Jews, who sends him under a strong guard with a friendly letter in favor of him to Felix the governor of Cesarea, where he gives notice to his accusers to implead him face to face. Blessed be God that our times are in his hands, not in our enemies' hands, nor yet in our own; until we have finished the work, which God designed us, neither men nor devils can take us off.

31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle;

33 Who, when they came to Cesarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was? And when he understood that he was of Cilicia;

35 I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment-hall.

The apostle being brought before Felix the Roman governor, a though he was an heathen, yet he showed the apostle far more favor than his own countrymen the Jews: For observe, 1. His affability to St Paul in asking him of his country. 2 His justice, he would not judge him till he had his accusers face to face; I will hear thee when thine accusers are come. If it be enough to accuse, who can be innocent? And if it be sufficient to deny, who would be found guilty? Magistrates must know a cause, before they give sentence or judgment about it; otherwise, though they pronounce a right sentence, it is not in judgment, but by accident. Magistrates must be stars, as well as ministers; they must do nothing blindfold, or blindly. Observe, 3. His great favor towards the apostles, in committing him a prisoner, not to the common gaol, but to Herod's palace: A fair prison, if a place of confinement may be so called. The sanhedrim at Jerusalem, though of his own country, and of his own religion, yet were not so kind to him as Felix the heathen governor.—Thus the chapter concludes with an account of the apostle's wonderful deliverance from the Jews at Jerusalem, who conspired his destruction; together with the instrumental means and manner of it. In the next chapter we find him brought to Cesarea, tried before Felix, making a defence for himself, and so reasoning that Felix trembled: Behold a prisoner at liberty, and his judge in bonds.

CHAPTER XXIV.

In the beginning of this chapter we find St. Paul brought to his trial before Felix the Roman governor; a famous trial, at which the plaintiff was Ananias the highpriest, and several members of the sanhedrim; the defendant, St. Paul; the judge, Felix; the emperor's attorney-general, Tertullus; and the indictment drawn up against the prisoner, heresy and sedition: From which imputation the apostle clears himself; and in the end of the chapter makes a declaration of his faith, and gives an account of the holiness and innocency of his life.

AND after five days, Ananias the highpriest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.

Observe here, How Ananias the highpriest, with the elders or heads of the Jewish council at Jerusalem, travel from thence to Cesarea, a great many miles, to inform the government against St. Paul; after five days Ananias descended, &c. The devil's drudges stick at no pains, spare for no cost, in doing his drudgery. A persecuting spirit claps wings to a person, it makes him swift in his motion, and zealous in his application and endeavours. Observe, 2. How the highpriest carrieth with him one of their most eminent and eloquent advocates, to plead the innocent apostle. Satan never miscarries in any of his enterprizes and wicked designs, for want of fit tools to carry them on. He hath his Tertullus, an eloquent orator, ready, who could tune his tongue any way for a large fee. Ananias descended with a certain orator named Tertullus, &c.

2 And, when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence.

3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

Observe here, St. Paul the prisoner being called forth, Tertullus the orator began to show his art by a flattering insinuation, which mightily prevails with men of mean corrupt minds. There is no cause so foul and bad, but some will be found to plead it; yes, to justify and defend it. And if so, judges had need be wise, as the angels of God, discerning between truth and falsehood. Observe farther, How Tertullus seeks to gain the judge's favor by flattery and falsehood: to win judges by flattery, hath ever, by false accusers, been taken for the surest way of success; but after all, flattery is a very provoking and wrath procuring sin: and it is hard to say, which is most dangerous, to receive flattery, or to give it. When men give much glory to man, it is hard for man to give that glory back again to God. It is hell and death to flatter sinners, or suffer ourselves to be flattered by them. Observe lastly, That bad government is better than no government; tyranny itself is better than anarchy. The Jews were not now their own masters, but tributaries to the Romans. Yet Tertullus acknowledges, "Many worthy deeds were done unto their nation by the prudence of the Roman governor: Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, we accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix."

5 For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes:

6 Who also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law:

7 But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands.

8 Commanding his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom, thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things whereof we accuse him.

9 And the Jews also assented, saying, that these things were so.

Tertullus having prepared the judge, presently falls upon the matter, and charges St. Paul with being a pestilent fellow, a seditious person, a disturber of the nation, a profaner of the temple, a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes. And adds, That out of more zeal to the Jewish religion, they had themselves before now dispatched him out of the way, but that he was violently rescued out of their hands by Lysias the chief captain, and brought thither to be tried. Concluding, That these things which he had spoken, were the sense of all those that came down with him as witnesses. Ver. 9. "The Jews also assented, and said that these things were so." Here note, 1. What an heavy load of reproaches and false accusations, our innocent apostle labored under; he is accounted, and called, a walking-pestilence. Thus the holy and faithful servants of God are esteemed by the world, the plague and bane of the place and nation where they live; although it is really for their sakes that God stays off plagues and judgments from falling into the world: "We have found this man a pestilent fellow." It is not the greatest holiness towards God, nor righteousness towards men, that can sufficiently shield and defend a saint from censure and slander, from calumny and false accusation. Note, 2. Besides the general charge, that the apostle was the very pest and plague of mankind; we have a three-fold accusation brought against him, That he was a mover of sedition, a profaner of the temple, and a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes. Lord, how should thy faithful ministers and ambassadors prepare themselves for, and comfort themselves under the most hellish reproaches, when we find the great apostle, whom St. Chrysostom honors with this character, "That the earth never bare a better man since it bare our Redeemer;" yet thus mis-called and accounted a pest, a plague, the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things! O why should such worthless worms as we murmur, when we meet with much less reproaches! Lord, help us, in imitation of thy example, for the joy that is set before us, to despise the shame, as well as to endure the cross. The best men that ever the world had, have fallen under the lashes of envenomed tongues. What foul aspersions hath malice cast upon innocency itself? Our blessed Saviour, in the clearest act of innocency, his casting out of devils, suffered the most horrid imputation, even of "casting out devils through Beelzebub the prince of devils," Mat. ix. 34. Now the servant must not expect to be above his Master; if Christ thus suffered, needs must christianity, needs must christians, needs must ministers and ambassadors,

10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself:

11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are but yet twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.

12 And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city:

(No. 37.)

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.

Our apostle, being accused of three notorious crimes, namely, sedition, heresy and profanation of the temple, answers distinctly to every one of them. Where observe, 1. How undaunted innocency is in a good person, and in a good cause; St. Paul was so far from being daunted by the greatness of his enemies, or by the vehemency of their accusation, that he tells the governor, he did with all cheerfulness undertake his defence. Observe, 2. How the apostle answers distinctly to the particulars of his accusation. And, first, as to the crime of sedition, charged upon his person. Secondly, As to the crime of heresy, charged upon his religion. As to the former, the crime of sedition, that is a very infamous charge: what schism is in matters ecclesiastical, that is sedition in matters temporal and civil. As the one violates the peace of the church, so doth the other the peace of the commonwealth. Sedition is committed three ways: by the head, by the tongue, and by the hand. A seditious head plots and contrives mischief, a seditious tongue vents it, and a seditious hand executes it. None of these ways, was the apostle guilty of sedition: he never employed his head to contrive, nor his tongue to utter, nor his hand to practise any thing that tended that way; yet he is charged with it: "We have found this fellow a mover of sedition." Learn thence, It is no new stratagem to represent the faithful servants of God, as enemies to states and kingdoms, as disturbers of the peace, as troublers of Israel, as trumpeters of rebellion, as movers of sedition, on purpose to bring them into hatred with princes, that they may fall under the sword of the magistrates as malefactors, and be looked upon as persons unworthy to live. But how does St. Paul free himself from the charge and imputation of sedition? Thus, 1. By demonstrating the improbability of it; how unlikely it was, that he who came up to the temple to worship God, and to bring alms to the poor, and was in Jerusalem but a very few days, and did not so much as dispute either in the temple, or in the synagogues, should yet stir up the people to sedition. 2. He puts his adversaries upon proof of their articles, ver. 13. "Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me." From the apostle's practice in clearing his own innocency, we learn, That it is a piece of justice which every man owes to himself, to vindicate and clear his reputation from all guilt falsely imputed to him, and especially from that of sedition.

14 But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets:

Here the apostle answers the second charge brought against him; namely, the charge of heresy, and being the ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes. Where note, That although the apostle would not, out of his great modesty, take upon himself to be one of the heads or chiefs among them, a ring-leader, as they styled him; yet, as to the owning of that way, notwithstanding all the imputations they had cast upon it, he doth it with the greatest freedom and courage, in the presence of his judge and accusers: "This I confess, that after the way which ye call heresy, so worship I, &c." Here observe, 1. The false imputation which christianity suffered under, in its first appearance; "After the way which they call heresy." It is no new thing to nickname the worshippers of the true God, to call them heretics, their way of worship, heresy. Observe, 2. The way taken by St. Paul to remove this false imputation; namely by an appeal to scripture and antiquity: "So worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and the prophets." Where note, How he appeals to scripture as the ground and rule of his faith, the law and the prophets, and then he appeals to the best and purest antiquity for the object of his worship: "So worship I the God of my fathers." Observe, 3. The freedom and courage of the apostle in owning his religion, notwithstanding these false imputations even in the presence of his greatest enemies, and when they were in hopes to destroy him; This I confess unto thee. The apostle abhorred that mean and base spirited principle, which makes it lawful for men to deny their religion, when it brings them into danger: No, he valued his above, and preferred it before his personal safety. God Almighty inspire us with the same courage and holy resolution, that when our adversaries of the church of Rome pronounce us heretics, and call our religion heresy, we may answer them as our apostle answered their forefathers, the subtle pharisees, "After the way which you call heresy, so worship we the God of our fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets."

15 And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

16 And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men.

Our apostle hath made a free and open profession of his religion in the foregoing verse, "After the way called heresy do I worship the God of my fathers;" here, at the 15th verse, he asserts the doctrine of the resurrection, which was a principal article both of the jewish and the christian religion; "I have hope towards God, that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and unjust." And having made a declaration of his faith, ver. 14, 15, he next gives an account of his life, at ver. 16. "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men." Observe here, What is the principle and guide of a good man's actions, and that is conscience. The word and law of God is the rule of our actions, but conscience is the immediate guide and director of them. Observe, 2. The extent of a good man's pious practice, "To keep a conscience void of offence toward God and man." To exercise a faithful care in performing the duties of both tables, is both an argument of our sincerity, and an ornament to our profession. Observe, 3. The apostle's constancy and perseverance in this course,

"To have always a conscience void of offence." We must not make conscience of our duty by fits, and starts, but in the whole course and tenor of our lives and actions. Religion should be a constant frame and temper of mind. Observe, 4. The apostle's earnest care and endeavour to this purpose, "Herein do I exercise myself." The original word is of an intense signification, and denotes the apostle's applying his mind in good earnest, to be thoroughly instructed in all the parts and points of his duty, and his being very careful and conscientious in the discharge and performance of it. Observe, 5. What was the apostle's great motive and encouragement to do all this; namely the belief of the resurrection, and the future state of rewards and punishments; consequent upon it: because "I hope for a resurrection both of the just and unjust," therefore "do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence." If we believe the resurrection of the dead, and the judgment to come, we shall be very careful to discharge a good conscience now, in order to the rendering a good account of ourselves then. Happy man, who, when he goes into another world, carries with him neither a conscience clear of all guilt, either by innocency or repentance! For verily, at the hour of death, to be free from stings and upbraidings, from the terrors and tortures, from the confusion and amazement of a guilty conscience, is a happiness so desirable, that it is well worth the care and best endeavours of our whole life. May the apostle's exercise be our daily practice, namely, "to keep a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward all men."

17 Now, after many years, I came to bring alms to my nation and offerings:

18 Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult.

19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had aught against me.

20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council.

21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them. Touching the resurrection of the dead, I am called in question by you this day.

The apostle had vindicated himself from the charge and imputation of sedition and heresy before, he comes now to clear himself of the third charge, namely, the profanation of the temple; in order whereunto, he declares that he had not been a long time at Jerusalem before this journey, and that he now came to bring alms to the poor Jews that were converted to christianity: he acknowledges that at this time he went indeed into the temple, yet not to profane it, but to perform those rites in it, which the law of the Jews required of such as had the vow of the Nazarites upon them. Thus the apostle cleared himself of all that was objected against him, and made it evidently appear to the face of his enemies, that all the accusations brought against him were false and calumnious. Learn thence, That generally the accusations laid by the malicious to the charge of the innocent, are nothing but empty noise and clamor. Having thus vindicated himself to their faces, he next makes an appeal to the consciences of his accusers, whether there was any thing of moment charged upon him more than this, That he professed and believed the resurrection of the dead. Thus bravely did the apostle plead his own cause here, or rather the Spirit of God that spake in him, though satan had got the high-priest Ananias, and his eloquent orator Tertullus to implead and impeach St. Paul: yet behold with what a flood of truth and eloquence doth the apostle vindicate his own innocence. Magna est veritas et prevalebit, "Great is the truth, and will finally prevail."

22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way; he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintances to minister or come unto him.

The sense of this is: "When Felix understood and discerned how things went, he would not pass any sentence in the case at present: but put them off, saying, 'When I have got a more perfect knowledge of this way of christianity,'" and when I have spoken with Lysias, and understand the truth concerning the tumult, I will then determine the difference between you: In the mean time, the captain of the guard shall have the prisoner in custody, to gratify the Jews." Where observe, both the equity and clemency of Felix the judge: His equity, in that he would not pronounce sentence, before he had thoroughly and fully understood the matter of fact: His clemency, in suffering the apostle to be prisoner at large, and allowing his friends and acquaintance liberty to come and visit him. Behold the former rigor towards the apostle mercifully relaxed: he is no more confined to a close dungeon, but goes abroad with a chain and a keeper, and none of his friends are forbidden either to visit him or relieve him. Thus God, in an unexpected hour, casts such outward comforts to his suffering saints and servants, as he sees will do them most good: yea, and can cause his and their enemies to become contributors thereunto.

24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

25 And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled; and answered, Go thy way for this time: when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

This chapter now concludes with the apostle's famous sermon before Felix his judge, in which we have considered, the preacher, the hearer, the text or subject preached upon, and the successful effect of a sermon. Observe, 1. The preacher, St. Paul, As Paul reasoned: The apostle was now in bonds, yet had liberty to preach, and he preached with liberty, with great boldness and freedom of speech, though under great disadvantages; his person imprisoned, his reputation blotted and defamed, loaded with calumnies and odious imputations; yet under all these disadvantages the apostle preaches. Observe, 2. His hearers, Felix and his wife Drusilla; Felix, a bad man, guilty of bribery, &c. Drusilla, a vile woman, forsook her own husband, and lived in adultery with Felix, as Josephus says: Here was a pair of hopeful hearers: yet St. Paul boggles not to preach to them, as bad as they were, hoping to make them better. Learn thence, That the gospel must be preached by us, when we are lawfully called therunto, whatever the persons be that make up the auditory; we know not what persons, or in what hour God may call. Observe, 3. The text or subject matter preached upon, righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come: where the wisdom of a preacher appears by the suitableness of the subject: the apostle chose a very proper subject for them both. Felix was guilty of bribery, or at least was ready to commit it: for the next verse tells us, that he hoped to have money given him by Paul, to release him, therefore to him he preaches of righteousness. Drusilla was guilty of incontinency and adultery, to her he preaches of temperance, and to both of a judgment to come: Happy were it, if great offenders had such wise admonishers near them; but too often they meet with flattering parasites, instead of faithful preachers. Observe, 4. The success or effect of the sermon, Felix trembled: He trembled, but not believed: he trembled at the guilt of sin, and at the apprehensions of the wrath of God due unto sin, but his trembling did not arise from a holy dread and reverence of the Majesty of God speaking to him in and by his word: The word of God can make the proudest and stoutest sinner in the world to quake and tremble. Observe, lastly, How Felix's trembling fit or sick quail of conscience soon went over: he dismisses the preacher for that time, and tells him he will call for him at a more convenient season. But we never read of any such opportunity taken afterwards for that purpose: so dangerous is it to stop our ear at the present call and command of God; if to-day we will not, to-morrow, God may say, you shall not hear my voice.

26 He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him; wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27 ¶ But after two years Poreius Festus came into Felix' room: and Felix willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

Observe here, what small success the apostle's preaching had, it found and left Felix a bad man; covetousness and bribery were his sins before, and they are so still; "He hoped that money should be given him of Paul." That is, he expected a bribe for setting the apostle at liberty, contrary to the law both of God and man. To this covetousness he added cruelty; for though he had nothing to charge Paul with, yet to gratify the Jews, he left Paul bound, minding the pleasing of men more than the displeasing of God. An hypocrite can become all things to all men, that he may gain by all; but behold the hand of God upon Felix: he that had so unjustly kept Paul bound for two years, and cruelly left him bound at last, to please and gratify the Jews, is sent a prisoner in bonds himself to Rome, to answer before Nero, for his misdemeanors in the managing of his government. A just reward for him who regards the pleasing of men more than the displeasure of God.

CHAPTER XXV.

St. Paul's trial before the Roman governor Felix, was recorded at large in the foregoing chapter. In this we find him brought upon his trial before Festus, who succeeded Felix in the administration of the government. And although Festus could find the apostle guilty of no misdemeanor, yet he had neither the courage nor honesty to set him at liberty, but sends him bound from Cesarea to Rome, as St. Luke relates in this and the following chapters.

NOW when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Cesarea to Jerusalem.

2 Then the high priest, and the chief of the Jews, informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3 And desired favor against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Festus answered, That Paul should be kept at Cesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5 Let them, therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.

St. Luke here informs us, that Festus being come to the government, and going up to Jerusalem, the high-priest and rulers of the Jews quickly began to inform him against Paul, and besought him that he would send for him to Jerusalem, resolving to lay some villains by the way to kill him as he came; but the divine providence so over-ruled the matter, that Festus would not consent to it, but ordered his accusers to come to Cesarea, and implead him there. Here note, 1. How restless is the rage, and unwearied the malice and enmity, which the persecutors of the truth have against the professors and preachers of it. The high-priest, and chief of the Sanhedrim or ecclesiastical court, continued their murderous designs against the innocent apostle; and are sorry they could not get an heathen governor as cruel as themselves, to join with them. Heathens have sometimes blushed at the mention of those crimes, which the professors of religion have committed without either shame or remorse. Note, 2. How deplorably corrupt and degenerate the Jewish church at this time was! Lord, what priests and church-governors were here, who call it a favor to have an opportunity granted them to murder an innocent man in cool blood, contrary to the law of nature and of nations! But behold the justice of God upon them: they were now given up to a reprobate sense, and are hurried headlong by a diabolical spirit, a little before their final destruction; "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who killest the prophets, and stonest them that were sent unto thee." Note, 3. What an overruling providence was here seen, in that Festus, by no flatteries nor persuasions, would be prevailed with to remove the apostle from Cesarea to Jerusalem: This broke the high-priest's measures, who designed to have killed him by the way. No, said Festus, the prisoner shall not come to you, but you shall go to him." This was a marvellous providence for the apostle's preservation. Oh how easy is it for the most wise God to baffle and blast the most cunning contrivances of the devil, to befoul the enemies of his church and people, by making the counsels of the wicked to be of no effect! God looks and laughs at all the plots of wicked men against the righteous: Frustration and disappointment attend all their designs, and perdition and destruction do awe their persons; Psal. ii. 6. "He that sitteth in Heaven laughs them to scorn, the Lord has them in derision."

6 And, when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Cesarea: and the next day, sitting in the judgment-seat, commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And, when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove;

8 While he answered for himself, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all.

Observe here, 1. The equity and justice of Festus, an Heathen judge, in his proceedings at St. Paul's trial: he will have the high-priest and elders that accused him speak to his face; he will have the prisoner brought forth, and he will have the matter examined by, and before himself. When the malicious bring the innocent upon their trial, God will provide a judge for their turn. Observe, 2. The indictment or charge which the Jews brought in against the apostle, That he had offended against the law, profaned the temple, and raised sedition against the Roman government. Here we find the devil at his old trade: Namely, stirring up the rage and malice of the world against the saints of God, under pretence of their being enemies to the state, and sub-verters of civil government. Observe, 3. That to be loaded with calumnies and reproaches, has been the common lot, and constant portion of the faithful friends and servants of Christ, from the first beginning of christianity, the Jews laid many and grievous things against Paul, which they could not prove. Reproach has been the reward of religion and righteousness; but St. Paul easily wipes off the several reproaches cast upon him, affirming himself to have been always a religious observer of the law, that he went into the temple upon a religious account, that he had never taught nor practised any rebellion against Cæsar. The servants of Christ are happy in their own innocence, and their adversaries render themselves odious by belying them, and laying that to their charge which every one can disprove.

9 But Festus willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judge of these things before me?

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat, where I ought to be judged. To the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

11 For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die; but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them, I appeal unto Cæsar.

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

Observe here, how Festus being willing to gratify the Jews, asks St. Paul, if he would go to Jerusalem, and be tried there, in the Jewish court about those matters? The apostle replied, that he was his prisoner, and that he was his proper judge under the Roman emperor, and not the Jews; and that being a Roman, he might claim the privilege of a Roman, which accordingly he did by appealing unto Cæsar. Festus hearing that, not only admitted his appeal, but was glad of it to be rid of him without peril on the one hand, or ill will on the other. Here we may remark, 1. That carnal politicians do not so much consider what is just and righteous in its own nature, as what is of use and advantage to themselves, be it right or wrong. The apostle had cleared himself from all slanderous accusations; and yet, Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, would not set him at liberty. It is too often the practice of corrupt judges, that they may please the people, to deliver up truth to be injuriously crucified; considering more their own interest, than the prisoner's innocence. Note, 2. How the apostle appeals from Jerusalem to Rome, from his own countrymen to Heathens; from the Highpriest to the emperor Nero; expecting to find more justice at the hands of infidels, than from the Jewish sanhedrim: and to this the (No. 37.)

apostle was in some sort divinely admonished by Christ himself, to make his appeal to Rome, Acts xxiii. 11 Be of good cheer, Paul, thou shalt bear witness to me at Rome. Doubtless, this was a mighty support and strong consolation to him, to know that he appealed and desired to go to Rome, where God had appointed to have him go.

13 And after certain days, king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cæsarea to salute Festus.

14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15 About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

16 To whom I answered, it is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.

17 Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow, I sat on the judgment-seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth:

18 Against whom, when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed:

19 But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

20 And because I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

Observe here, 1. How God will not be wanting to his servants in their greatest straits and sufferings, but will providentially dispose of all matters in order to their deliverance, when it may most conduce to his own glory and their good. Thus here, king Agrippa comes to congratulate Festus;

Festus declares the cause of God's oppressed servant to the king, and God makes use of both Festus and Agrippa to screen the apostle from the violence of his enemies. In the mount the Lord will be seen, his people's extremities are the seasons of his succour. Observe, 2. How the very light of nature in and among the Heathens condemns it as an act of manifest and notorious injustice in a judge to pass sentence upon a person, unheard and unallowed to make his defence. This baseness was below the Roman gallantry whilst Pagans: Festus demands the accusers and the accused to appear face to face; and yet such a diabolical spirit of malice had so blinded the Jews, that contrary to the law of nature, and the law of all nations, they would have had St. Paul here condemned without knowing the cause, or hearing his defence. Observe, 3. What base and vile, what low and undervaluing thoughts and apprehensions have carnal men of the high and holy things of God. Festus here calls the religion and worship, which was of God's own institution, most profanely and contemptuously by the name of superstition; They had certain questions against him of their own superstition; and how slightly doth he also speak of our glorified Redeemer, styling him one Jesus! But no wonder that the dunghill-cocks of the world know not the worth of the pearl of price.

22 Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. Tomorrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing with the chief captains and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men, which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me both at Jerusalem and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer.—

25 But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himself had appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and especially before thee, O King Agrippa, that after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

27 For it semeth to be unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

Observe here, 1. King Agrippa's curiosity to see and hear St. Paul: he was born and bred up amongst the Jews, and probably understood something of the Christian religion, and possibly had heard much of Paul, and therefore desired to see him, as Herod desired to see Christ, and to hear John the Baptist, only to gratify his curiosity, not to be advantaged by his ministry. Observe, 2. How contemptuously the Holy Ghost speaks of all the pomp, retinue, and state, which Festus, Agrippa, and Bernice appeared in, at the time and place of hearing; he calls it fancy, so the original word signifies, intimating, that all the pomp, gaiety, and glory of the world, is nothing but fancy, a dream and a shadow, having no real existence, but a being in imagination only. Observe, 3. That truth and innocency shine forth the more splendidly by the greater opposition that is raised against them. The more malicious the Jews were in accusing Paul, the more did his innocency appear; and the more was he acquitted and discharged by his judges. Thus we see the providence of God wrought all matters for St. Paul's justification, and for the Jews' reprehension: Festus had nothing to write to Cæsar, no crime to inform him of against the apostle. Thence learn, that although God sometimes permits his servants to be laden with slanders and reproaches, yet he will find a time to clear their innocence, and cause their very judges, if not their accusers, to proclaim them guiltless. I find, saith Festus, that he hath committed nothing worthy of death. It is no small mercy to have our innocency vindicated, for God to clear up our righteousness as the light, and our just dealings as the noon day, and to free our reputation from those blemishes which the uncharitable suspicions, or rash censures of men have cast upon us. There is no spot so unbeautiful, as that upon our credit, saving only a spot upon our consciences. God made the apostle's enemies here do him right, and his name was clothed with honour in the estimation of his very adversaries.

CHAPTER XXVI.

This chapter brings St. Paul to his third trial, namely, before King Agrippa; in which we have the apostle's apology or defensive plea, which he makes for himself against those blind Jews, which did so maliciously persecute him: in which plea he declares, 1. His manner of life before his conversion, which was very pharisaical. 2. The manner of his conversion, which was miraculous and wonderful. 3. His manner of life after his conversion, which was religious and remarkable: before his conversion, he persecuted the gospel, which others preached; after his conversion, he preached the gospel, which he himself had persecuted; and the great charge brought against him was this, that of a great opposer, he was become a great professor. But the particulars of his defence are before us in the following chapter.

THEN Agrippa said unto Paul, thou art permitted to speak for thyself: then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself:

2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee, touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews;

3 Especially, because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews. Wherefore, I beseech thee to hear me patiently.

Observe here, 1. The person whom the apostle makes his defence before, Agrippa, Agrippa a king, of whom he begs the favor patiently to hear him: it is a great favor for great men so much as to hear an innocent good man plead for himself: Agrippa, who, by reason of his birth and breeding among the Jews, was acquainted with the scriptures, the law and the prophets. Observe, 2. How the providence of God wonderfully procures St. Paul a liberty to speak for himself: hereby he had an opportunity at once, to make known his case, and to publish the gospel. But note, farther, that as the providence of God procured him liberty, so the good spirit of God gave him ability to speak so efficaciously and effectually, with such evidences and demonstration, that he not only took the ears, but captivated the consciences of the whole court, and almost persuaded the king himself to turn christian.

4 My manner of life, from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews, 5 Which knew me from the beginning (if they would testify) that after the most straitest sect of our religion, I lived a pharisee.

Here the apostle begins his defence, with a relation of the innocency and strictness of his life before his conversion; he did and could appeal to all that knew him, concerning the unblameableness of his conversation. Thence note, that an innocent and blameless life, from our youth upwards, is a singular support and encouragement to us in a suffering hour, especially when we are called forth to suffer for religion and righteousness' sake. Observe farther, the instance which the apostle gives of his strictness in religion, "After the most straitest sect of our religion, I lived a pharisee." Of all the sects among the Jews, there was none that took up such an extraordinary strict way of religion as the pharisees; of this sect was St. Paul, before converted to christianity, and in this he rested for salvation. Thence learn, 1. That an extraordinary strict way taken up in religion, is thought by many a sure and sufficient foundation for their eternal salvation. Learn, 2. That many may rest upon a strict way of religion, which yet cometh not up to, but is oft-times besides, the appointment of the word of God:

the pharisees, for their unusual and supererogating way of exactness, concluded that they should certainly go to heaven, if any did; when, alas! many things which they practised with extraordinary zeal and strictness, were never required by God at their hands.

6 And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers:

7 Unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hope to come: for which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

Our apostle had vindicated his life before, his doctrine now: he tells Agrippa, that for believing, expecting, and preaching the doctrine of the resurrection, he was questioned of the Jews: this he calls the hope of the promise made of God unto the Fathers: Others understood it of the promise of the Messias, which was made unto the Fathers, and was generally depended upon by the most pious among the twelve tribes scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth; and in the faith and expectation whereof, they fervently served God night and day. Learn thence, 1. That the pious and godly among the Jews, lived in hopes of the Messiah's appearing, of a glorious resurrection by him, and of an eternal life and salvation with him. 2. That their hope of this promised mercy, did cause them to serve God instantly day and night. Hope is the great exorter of industry and endeavour; expectation puts it upon action; hope of obtaining, is the motive to every undertaking; the christian's hope, or thing hoped for, is great and excellent in his esteem, namely, eternal life: and where the esteem is high, the endeavour will be strong. That christian who has a well grounded belief and hope of a life to come, will serve God with an unwearied diligence and industry; if by any means he may attain the fruition and enjoyment of it, "Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come."

8 Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?

As if the apostle had said, "The great point in controversy between me and you is this, whether the dead in general shall rise? and whether Christ in particular be risen from the dead? Now, why should either seem incredible to you? Is it too hard for God, who made the world, and upholds the world, and gives life to all living; is it too hard or difficult for him to raise the dead? If not, why should it be thought incredible or impossible?" Learn hence, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust, is neither incredible nor impossible, neither against right reason nor true faith.

9 I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, 10 Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and, when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them.

11 And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme: and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.

Here the apostle frank'y declares, that he was once as sharp and bitter an enemy to Christ, and to all that believed in him, as any one whatever; and thought himself bound in conscience to persecute all that owned him; and, with threatenings and tortures compelled them to deny Christ; and, being exceedingly fierce, he forced them to fly to heathen cities to escape his fury. Where note, 1. That we ought to be upon very good and sure grounds, before we oppose and persecute any. 2. That some persecute others, and at the same time think they do well in so doing; I verily thought, says the apostle, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus. He spake as if his conscience would have troubled him, unless he had troubled others, for that which was indeed their conscience. Note, 3. That Paul, being a blasphemer himself, compelled the professors of the gospel to blaspheme. This he probably did two ways, First by his example, they imitated him in blaspheming, or speaking evil of the ways of Christ. Or, secondly, by his cruelty; vexing them so in the profession of Christ, that some who were unsettled, probably fell away, and blasphemed the name of Christ, which they had professed. He compelled them to blaspheme: there is a compelling power and constraining force in example, especially in the example of persons in power and authority. Men sin with a kind of authority: Paul's blasphemous example compelled others to blaspheme.

12 Whereupon as I went to Damascus, with authority and commission from the chief priests.

13 At mid-day, Oh king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me, and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

15 And I said, who art thou, Lord?

And he said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest.

Our apostle having declared his manner of life before conversion, proceeds next to declare the extraordinary manner of his conversion: he tells Agrippa, that as he went with a persecuting purpose towards Damascus, at mid-day, a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun, shined round about him, and when they were all fallen prostrate on the earth, he heard a voice speaking to him in the Hebrew tongue, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." Here note, 1. How restless and unwearied persecutors are in the execution of their bloody designs and purposes; Paul, as he thought, had swept and cleansed Jerusalem of saints before; after which he resolves to ransack Damascus, and undertakes a long journey, of five or six days, in order to that end: the worst journey that ever he intended, but the best that ever he undertook; a journey most maliciously purposed by him, but most mercifully disposed by God; and accordingly, he is met with in the way: Christ appears to him, a sudden beam of light shines round about him, and a voice is heard by him, saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" that is, Me in my members. Such as persecute saints for their sanctity, persecute Christ himself, and he can no more endure to see them wronged than himself; as the honor of the head redounds to the members, so the sorrows of the members are resented by the head: Christ said not thus to his murderers on earth, "Why bind ye me? Why buffet ye me? Why scourge ye and crucify me?" But here when his members suffer, he cries out from heaven, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Lord, thou art more tender of thy body mystical, than thou wert of thy body natural; more sensible of thy members' sufferings than of thine own.

16 But rise and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee;

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee.

18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance, among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me.

St. Paul had given King Agrippa an account of his miraculous conversion in the former verses; in these he declares to him his extraordinary commission to preach the gospel; that Christ, who appeared to him from heaven, chose him to be a preacher, as well as a professor of the gospel; assuring him, that he would stand by him, and deliver him from the persecutions both of the Jews and Gentiles, to whom he should send him, and would bless his endeavours, to the opening the eyes of their understanding, and to the turning of them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God; that they might receive, by faith in Christ, remission of sins, and a portion of the heavenly inheritance among such as are regenerated by his Holy Spirit. Here note, 1. The honor which God is pleased to put upon the ministry of the word, his own ordinance: The apostle, who was only the instrument, is said to open the eyes of the blind, and turn sinners from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God; all which is properly and principally the work of the Spirit of Christ; yet he is pleased to put this honor upon his instruments the ministers, by whom he worketh all this, and for which reason they are called co-workers, or workers together with Christ. Note, 2. The apostle's mission, I send thee. Great is the dignity of gospel-ministers, they are God's messengers; their commission is sealed by the whole Trinity, and intimates both their dignity and duty: to intimate their holiness, they are called men of God; for their vigilancy, watchmen; for their courage, they are called soldiers; for their painfulness, harvest laborers; for their care of the flock, shepherds; for their wisdom, overseers; for their industry, husbandmen; for their patience, fishermen; for their tenderness, nurses; for their affectionateness, fathers and mothers: for their faithfulness, stewards. A very high and honorable calling; the Son of God despised it not. Note, 3. St. Paul's commission in the several branches of it. 1. To open their eyes, that is, to enlighten their understandings, that they may know God and their duty to him: In order to which there is required, 1. Ability in the preachers: how can they open the eyes of others who are blind and ignorant themselves? Ought not they who undertake to be guides and leaders, very well to know the way themselves? 2. Perspicuity in the sermon: what hope can there be of opening men's understandings, when the matter delivered is closed up from them? It was St. Paul's aim to speak words easy to be understood, and it should be ours; it is the same thing to preach in an unknown tongue, as in an unknown style, above the reach of our hearers. Painted glass is more costly, but the plainer glass is the clearer and more useful. But we must take care, that though we come in plainness, yet not in rudeness of speech. The second part of St. Paul's commission, was to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God; in order to which, he was turned from these himself. He has little reason to expect, that God will honor his ministry for the conversion of others from sin and satan, who is under the dominion of both himself. The minister's life is the people's looking glass, by which they usually dress themselves. Note, 4. The happy fruit of St. Paul's mission and commission both. "That they may receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified.—Whosoever true repentance is wrought by the ministry of the word, there is forgiveness attained, and a title to the inheritance of heaven attained with it. Note lastly, a threefold metaphorical description of the sinful state of nature before conversion, and the like of a state of grace after conversion. The state of nature is a state of blindness, To open their eyes; A state of darkness, To turn them from darkness to light; A state of slavery, And from the power of satan unto God. The state of grace after conversion is set forth by sight, light and liberty. All this is

(No. 38.)

Christ's work originally, but his ministers' work instrumentally; "I have sent thee to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God."

19 Whereupon, Oh king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision:

20 But showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

21 For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say shall come:

23 That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

Observe here, 1. How obedient the apostle was to the call of Christ: having had so glorious a vision, he did not, he durst not rebel against the light of it; but immediately went forth and preached, first at Damascus, then at Jerusalem, then throughout all Judea, and at last among the Gentiles, the doctrine of repentance, and the necessity of good works. Observe, 2 The ill requital which the good man met with for his diligence and faithfulness in preaching the glad tidings of the gospel; for this he had like to have been killed by the Jews in the temple; Evangelium predicare est furorem mundi in se derizare; "To preach the gospel is the ready way to bring the wrath and fury of the world upon ourselves." Observe, 3. With what thankfulness the apostle owns and acknowledges the merciful providence of God in preserving him both from the fraud and force of his enemies, "Having obtained help of God, I continue unto this day." And how did the sense of divine goodness upon his soul, provoke him to go on with his work, declaring no other thing concerning Christ, but what Moses and the prophets did of old foretel of him: namely, That he should be put to death, and should be the first that should rise again by his own power, and be the author of our resurrection. Note here, That the sufferings of Christ were taught by Moses, in all the commands given about sacrifices: and not by Moses only, but by the prophets also, particularly the prophet Isaiah, chap. lii. the evangelical prophet, and prophetic evangelist, who wrote as clearly of Christ's coming, as if he had then been come: From whence the apostle argues how black the wickedness of the Jews was, who went about to kill him, for preaching the same doctrine which Moses and the prophets had taught before him.

24 And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely. For I am persuaded, that none of these things are hidden from him: for this thing was not done in a corner.

Hitherto Festus had heard the apostle with great patience, but now he interrupts him, and tells him he talks like a man that was crazed. Carnal minds pass very uncharitable censures upon spiritual persons and spiritual things. Christ's kindred said, he was beside himself. Mark iii 21. Festus here judged Paul to be mad, thinking that he had over-studied himself, by meddling with matters too high for his capacity, and too deep for his understanding, he had brought himself into a deep melancholy; Paul, thou art beside thyself, much learning hath made thee mad. But observe with what meekness and due terms of respect the apostle replied to this reviling governor, I am not mad, most noble Festus. Here observe, 1. The title of honor given to Festus, not so much to his person, for that was unworthy, as to his office, which was truly honorable, most noble Festus. Titles of respect and honor given to persons in place and power, are agreeable to the mind of God, and countenanced by christianity. Observe, 2. What an happy victory and conquest the apostle had over his own passions! he waves the reflections Festus had made upon him, and had learned of his Master, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again. It is a happy attainment for a man to be master of himself under a provocation, to be regulated by right reason, and not hurried by blind passion.

27 King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest.

The apostle, knowing that Agrippa was educated among the Jews, tells him that he could not but hear of the life, doctrine, miracles, death and resurrection of Christ; all which were done openly, and not in corners; and he could not but believe the prophets, and what they had foretold concerning the Messiah; and if the power of worldly interest did not overcome him, his life and practice would be answerable to his faith and belief. Thence learn, that a right belief of the holy scriptures is of great efficacy and force to confirm a person's life to the practice of real and universal holiness.

28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian.

29 And Paul said, I would to God that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.

Observe here, 1. What an efficacy St. Paul's doctrine had upon Agrippa, though he would not be converted, yet he could not but be convinced; his conscience was touched, though his heart was not renewed. Learn thence, that there is certainly that in religion which carries its own evidence along with it, even to the consciences of ungodly men. Observe, 2. How sad it is, when persons have enjoyed the scriptures, the preaching of the word, and all means of salvation, and yet are but almost christians, and shall never enjoy the least salvation; they are within sight of heaven, and yet shall never have a sight of God. Observe, 3. That such as will be christians indeed, must not only be almost but altogether christians; I would that thou and all that hear me, says the apostle, were altogether such as I am, except these bonds. Where note, the extraordinary charity and christian compassion of St. Paul: he wished them his graces, not his chains; he did not wish them his bonds and imprisonments, but he wished them the same liberty and enlargement by Jesus Christ, which he enjoyed; he would keep his sorrows and outward troubles to himself, but wishes they were acquainted with his inward consolations and comforts. A good man wishes others as well as he wishes himself; and if at any time he wishes that which is penally evil to the worst of his enemies, he doth it with an eye to their spiritual and eternal good: a good man dares not wish ill to those that have actually done ill to him; but wishes, prays, and endeavours the best good for them.

30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them;

31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, this man doth nothing worthy of death, or of bonds.

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, this man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Cæsar.

Observe here, how Agrippa, Festus, and the whole company, acquit the innocent apostle in their judgments and consciences, yea, with their tongues declare that he deserved neither death nor bonds; yet at the same time that they acquit him, they discharged him not, but he is left in his enemies' hands, and at last put to death by the Gentiles. But how may it be said, was God's promise fulfilled then, ver. 16, 17, of this chapter, "I have appeared unto thee, to make thee a minister and a witness, and will deliver thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom I now send thee." How did God deliver him from the Gentiles, when he was at last delivered into their hands, and put to death by the Gentiles? Answer, As long as the wisdom of God saw it fit and convenient, for the purpose of his glory, and as a real mercy conducing to the people's good; as long as it was a true and beneficial deliverance, so long God wrought deliverance for him; nay, rather than fail, in a miraculous manner, no chains could bind him, nor iron gates, nor prison walls confine him: but when he had finished his course, run his race, fought the good fight of faith, and done the work which God set him about, it would not then have been a deliverance, but a real detriment to have been kept longer from his reward; now might the apostle say, Give me my robes and my crown. God now made his word good to the apostle, to deliver him from the people and the Gentiles, by making death his deliverer and deliverance. Thus faithful is God in his promises to his people. He will deliver them in six troubles, and in seven: in every danger, in every difficulty; but when death is the best deliverance, they shall have it as a covenant-mercy and blessing; for all things are ours, if we be Christ's, whether life or death, 1 Cor. chap. iii. 22.

CHAPTER XXVII.

This chapter gives us an account of St. Paul's voyage from Cesarea to Rome: the providence of God so disposed, that the apostle was not sent by land, lest the Jews should lie lurking in the way to take away his life: but by sea, which though it proved a very dangerous voyage, by reason of tempestuous winds and storms, yet the divine care watched over him, preserved him, and all that were with him, for his sake. A full relation, both of the danger and deliverance, we have recorded in the chapter now before us.

AND when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.

2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia, one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

The time being now come for the fulfilling of God's purpose and determinate counsel concerning Paul, recorded Acts xxiii. 11. "Be of good cheer, Paul, as thou hast testified of me at Jerusalem, so shalt thou bear witness also at Rome!" Pursuant to this purpose of God, Festus the Roman governor delivers the apostle and his associates, Luke, Timothy, and Aristarchus, to Julius, in order to their sending, with several other prisoners, who probably were great malefactors, to the city and court of Rome, where all appeals made to the Roman emperor were heard and determined before him. Now here we have observable, 1. The person whom the apostle was delivered to, Julius, a very civil person to the apostle, who suffered him to see and receive the civilities of his friends. Thus God raises up his people friends in the midst of their sufferings, and when persecutors send his saints to prison he will provide keepers for their turn. Julius, an Heathen soldier, was kinder to him than his own countrymen the Jews. Observe, 2. The villainous company of malefactors and prisoners, that the innocent apostle was packed with: they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners to Julius. Saints and sinners, good and bad, innocent and uncent, share together in the same outward miseries; but though they be thus jumbled together in this world (where all things come alike to all) yet the righteous judge will make a difference between them in the other world, according to their works. Observe, 3. Though the apostle was thus yoked with malefactors and criminals in the ship, yet God favored him with some companions which were according to his heart's desire, namely, his dear associates, St. Luke, Timothy, and Aristarchus. It is a great comfort to the afflicted to have good companions in their afflictions, Optimum solatium est sodalium: but above all, it was the happiness of the apostle, that he enjoyed the presence of God with him in so comfortable a manner, in and under all his sufferings, according to his promise, chap. xviii. 10. I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee. The gracious special presence of God with his children and people, is a sure and sufficient support unto them in and under all the difficulties and trials which his wisdom sees fit to exercise, and try them with. Observe, 4. What an additional favor it was from God, that St. Paul found friends in Sidon, such saints as he could comfortably converse with, and receive refreshments from, even needful accommodations for his tedious voyage. Learn hence, that God's care of, his compassion towards, and provision for, his children and people, is universal and perpetual, at all times and in all places.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under Crete, over-against Salmone;

8 And hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called, The Fair Havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11 Nevertheless, the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

An account is here given of the very hazardous voyage which the apostle had from Cesarea towards Rome. He sails from Cesarea to Cyprus: from Cyprus to Cilicia; from Cilicia to Crete: and having been long at sea, and the summer wearing away, and the great fast being past; that is, the anniversary fast of expiation, which was on the tenth day of September; after which the sea growing tempestuous, the ancients left off sailing until March, because of the shortness of the days: St. Paul, foreseeing the danger of the season, and being also inspired by the spirit of God, admonished them of the great hazard of the voyage, both to the ship and also to the lives of those that were in it, and advised them to venture no further till the sea was calmer; but the owner and governor of the ship (who was supposed to be better skilled in his own art) advising otherwise, the captain of the guard prefers his judgment before Paul's, and so sets forward, but with great hazard and great loss, as the event declared. From the whole we gather, that the fittest seasons ought to be observed and taken for every enterprise both sacred and secular: winter journeys by land, or voyages by sea, are unsafe, as well as uncomfortable. A season is beautiful for all things, and has a lustre upon it above all other parts of time. This winter voyage, about our October, was very hazardous and unseasonable; for the winds were hoisterous and contrary, the days were short, the light little, the night long, the clouds thick, the weather dark, the storms raging; therefore, the apostle advised to winter in the fair havens, knowing the season for sailing was now past.

12 And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south-west and north-west.

13 And when the south-west wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence they sailed close by Crete.

14 But not long after, there arose against it a tempestuous wind called Euroclydon.

15 And when the ship was caught and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island Which is called Claudia, we had much work to come by the boat.

17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and fearing lest they should fall into the quick-sands, strake sail, and so were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship:

19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands, the tackling of the ship.

The farther difficulties and dangers which the apostle met with, in this winter voyage, are here described and declared, and the properest lessons of instruction which can, I think, be gathered from them, will be by way of allusion: thus, 1. The ship in which he sailed is an emblem of the church, in her militant state here on earth; she is afflicted, tossed with tempests, and in danger of being shipwrecked every moment; many tempestuous Euroclydons arise suddenly, and threaten her fatally; but her wise pilot sits at the helm, steers her with a fixed eye and steady hand between rocks and shelves, undergirding her by his everlasting arms of power and love which are underneath her; and when, in our apprehensions, she is brought to a bopeless and helpless state, without the light of sun or stars to comfort her; then doth the Lord enlighten her darkness, and at midnight there shall be light. Again, 2. This voyage neglected in the summer, and undertaken in the winter season, to the peril of the passengers, and loss of the ship, lively represents unto us both the folly and danger of persons who suffer the spring of youth and the summer of ripe-age to slip and slide away from them; and when the winter of old age comes upon them, then they think of launching forth towards the fair haven of eternal happiness, and not before. Set we forth never so soon, the winds will be contrary, the weather tempestuous, the rocks many, the difficulties great: and yet, Lord! how is our precious time spent and spilt? When age comes upon us, we complain we want time, whereas we foolishly waste it; how are miserable souls that set out late for heaven (when they can serve sin no longer) benighted, bewildered, shipwrecked, eternally and irrecoverably lost! Behold, now only is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation.

20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

21 But, after a long abstinence, Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer; for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

23 For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve.

24 Saying, fear not, Paul: thou must be brought before Cesar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.

25 Wherefore, Sirs, be of good cheer; for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.

Observe here, 1. The hopeless, helpless, comfortless, state which St. Paul, and those in the ship with him, were now reduced to; neither sun nor stars appeared, and the weather proved very tempestuous; and when they utterly despaired of life, then God gives Paul, and he the rest, a comfortable assurance, that nothing should be lost, but the vessel only. Oh how does God delight to deliver those that are forsaken of their hopes; what a present help is he to the helpless? He reserves his holy hand for a dead lift; our extremities are the seasons of his succour. Observe, 2. The great and special favor with which God indulged the holy apostle, even to send an angel to him to comfort him: the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, said, fear not. Oh what an encouragement is it to us, to enter upon, and be faithful in the service of God, when he causes his holy angels, upon all occasions to serve us? When visible dangers are before us, God has invisible servants round about us, both to succour and secure us. Lord, help me in sincerity to say, thine I am, and thee I serve; let me be found faithful in all the instances of my duty to thee, and then shall I find (as the apostle here) that safely evermore accompanies duty. Observe, 3. How God was pleased, for St. Paul's sake, to save all that were with him in the ship; sinners are spared and saved for the saints' sake, whom yet they hate and seek to destroy. The wicked are oft-times delivered from temporal destruction, for the sake of the godly who live among them, and intercede with God for them; there were two hundred, threescore and sixteen persons, all heathens, except three or four, saved for St. Paul's sake, who, no doubt, begged their lives of God. Lord, what fools and madmen are the wicked, who seek the destruction of those for whose sake it is that they are not themselves destroyed? The breaches which wicked men make by sinning, they make up by praying. Observe, 4. How steady and steadfast the apostle was in the faith and belief of God's promise and providence, for his own and the company's preservation. I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me. We honor God exceedingly, when we depend upon his promise, rely upon his power, believe his word, though what he says be very improbable, and unlikely to come to pass.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country:

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms; and, when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then, fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day.

30 And, as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under color, as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship.

31 Paul said to the centurion, and to the soldiers, except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

A farther account is here given, both of the apostle's imminent danger and extraordinary deliverance: for fourteen days together the ship was continually tossed in the sea; at last the mariners cast four anchors out of the ship, and by the help of a boat intended to make their escape, leaving the passengers to shift for themselves: St. Paul perceiving this, told the centurion and the soldiers, that although Almighty God had promised to preserve them, yet they must not expect it without using due means for their own preservation, which was to stay the mariners in the ship: whose help and diligence, direction and care, would be especially needful to them on such an occasion. Hereupon the soldiers, to prevent the mariners' design, cut the ropes of the boat, and let it fall into the sea. Learn hence, That the end and the means are always joined together in the purpose and decree of God. The same God that ordained the end, ordained the means in order to that end: therefore, as to trust to means, is to neglect God : so to neglect the means is to tempt God. As here, that God who decreed that they should not perish with the ship, decreed that the skilful seamen should abide in the ship. Almighty God likes not to be tied to means himself; but it is his pleasure to tie us : sometimes, to show his sovereignty, he is pleased to work without means ; sometimes, to show his omnipotency, he works against means : the fire shall not burn, the water shall not drown, the iron shall swim, the sun shall stand still, nay, go several degrees backward : the First Cause can suspend the power and operation of second causes, when he pleases. But as the care of the end belongs to God, so the care of the means belongs to us, and must be used when they may, and where they can be used. Accordingly here, the mariners, in order to their own and others preservation, stay in the ship, lighten the ship, undergird her, cast out their anchors, hoist up the main-sail, loose the rudder-bands, and do every thing in order to their preservation which was needful. The purpose of God to prolong our lives, must not lessen our care for the preservation of our lives : when God has ordained and appointed means, we cannot expect to find safety in the neglect or contempt of that means.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, this day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat : for this is for your health ; for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And, when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all ; and, when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meal.

37 And we were in all in the ship, two hundred threescore and sixteen souls.

Observe here, 1. What honor God put upon the holy apostle : although he was a poor prisoner in chains, yet God made him the only counsellor and comforter unto all that were in the ship. First he adviseth them to eat, because that through consternation of mind, and horror of death, they had made no set meal for fourteen days ; not that they subsisted miraculously without any nourishment at all ; but eat so little that it was in a manner continual fasting. Next he becomes the chaplain of the ship : he gave thanks to God in presence of them all ; that is, he deired God's blessing upon what they eat, and praiseth him for it ; thanks should be returned when benefits are received from the hand of man, much more from the hand of God : what shall we think of those that sit down to a full table as a beast to his forage, without taking any notice of the bountiful hand that feeds them ! St. Paul having thus refreshed himself, and by his example and words encouraged all the rest to do the like ; an account is taken of the exact number of persons which were in the ship, and it was found to be two hundred threescore and sixteen souls ; probably this was done at the motion of St. Paul, that so, after their deliverance, it might appear how exactly his prediction, mentioned ver. 22, that there shall be no loss of any man's life, nor an hair fall from the head of any, was verified and fulfilled. Whatever God speaks by the mouth of his holy servants, be it by way of prediction or denunciation, shall certainly be accomplished and come to pass : God is honored in his truth, when his promises are fulfilled towards his people ; and threatenings inflicted on his enemies.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land : but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40 And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder-bands, and hoisted up the main-sail to the wind, and made toward shore.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground, and the fore-part stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out and escape.

43 But the centurion willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose, and commanded that they which could swim, should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land ;

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.

Here observe, 1. How willingly men in distress are to part with all things for the preservation of life : these sea-faring men are here found three times lightening their ship of her lading and burthen : first the merchandise was cast overboard, ver. 18, next all the ship's furniture was heaved over, ver. 19, and now ver. 38, goes over the very wheat which they had provided for their daily bread ; future provision is cast away, to save life at present : life is the most precious treasure, the most excellent thing in nature ; a man will part with all the comforts and supports of life, rather than with life itself. Observe, 2. What a wonderful work of God was here upon the heart of these poor Pagans, thus to venture their lives, by parting with their food which they had to live upon, barely upon St. Paul's word, that they should want wheat no more in the ship. Such an influence has God upon the hearts and minds of men, when he pleases to make use of it. Observe, 3. How God's delivering power is most gloriously manifested in the most deplorable extremities of his people. Now, when the ship was fallen into a place where two seas met, when she ran aground and was broken with the violence of the waves, this extremity was God's opportunity ; and this strait was the season of his succour. Observe, 4. What horrid and cruel ingratitude was found with these wretched soldiers toward the apostle ; they design to take away his life, who had taken such care of them, and for whose sake all their lives were preserved ! It is no new thing for an unkind world to return evil for good, and hatred for good will ; but to do good, and to suffer evil, is the christian's exercise at present. They consulted to kill the prisoners (of whom the apostle was the chief) lest any of them should swim out and escape. Observe, 5. How God put into the centurion's heart to defeat that barbarity and bloody counsel, and to save the apostle, for whose sake the centurion and all in the ship were saved. Many are the wicked devices in the heart of man ; but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand. Observe, 6. How God performed his promise to the apostle to a very title : they were all saved, not a man drowned, no, not any one of the bloody soldiers who gave counsel to kill Paul. Oh how good is God to the unthankful and unholy ! his tender mercies are over all his works ; and how well do sinners fare sometimes for the saints' sake ! Thus, after a long and dangerous voyage, the providence of God, brought St. Paul, with the rest of the passengers, at last, safe to shore. Oh how punctual is God to what he promises ! What he foretels, he will fulfil. He had foretold by Paul, that they should suffer shipwreck, and at last he cast upon a certain island ; and accordingly, here they escaped to an island, called Melita ; where, what signal instances of humanity they received from the hands of barbarous heathens, the following chapter fully informs us.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

AND when they were escaped, then they knew that the island was called Melita.

2 And the barbarous people showed us no little kindness : for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, no doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

5 And he shook off the beast into the fire and felt no harm.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly : but, after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god.

After a long and dangerous voyage, recorded in the foregoing chapter, the providence of God brought St. Paul, and the rest of the prisoners, to an island called Melita, where they were all courteously received by the islanders ; who, finding them wet and cold, made them a fire to warm and refresh them ; when, behold a viper that was in the wood, feeling the heat of the fire, leaped out upon St. Paul, and fastened on his hand ; which the islanders seeing, instantly concluded, that the apostle was some notorious malefactor, whom divine vengeance followed : but the apostle (according to our Saviour's promise, Mark xvi. 18. "If ye touch any deadly thing, it shall not hurt you,") shaking off the venomous beast into the fire, without harm, the people presently changed their opinion, and took him for a god, that was come to them in the shape of a man. Here note, 1. How it pleased God by a new miracle, to confirm the apostle's authority, and thereby to prepare the hearts of those barbarous people for the receiving of the gospel. God will honor his gospel, and the faithful dispensers of it, wherever they go, by preparing the hearts of the people to receive and entertain it. Note, 2. That great and manifold dangers and distresses may, and oftentimes do, befall gracious persons. No sooner is one affliction passed over and gone from them, but presently another comes on with a fresh assault. Thus here, St. Paul had no sooner escaped the shipwreck, and gets to shore, but a viper fastens upon his hand : many are the afflictions of the righteous. Observe, 3. That the very light of nature suggests even to the most barbarous heathens, that wickedness shall not go unpunished : "no doubt this man is a murderer, whom vengeance suffereth not to live." Note, 4. That natural agents cannot act or exert their natural powers, without the concurrence and concurrence of supernatural providence : this viper according to its nature, did not, and could not, sting the apostle, being restrained by the overruling providence and power of God. Note, 5. That the humanity of these barbarous heathens towards those that suffered shipwreck, may justly condemn the inhumanity of them that are called christians, towards those which are shipwrecked : how do some that live near the sea coast rejoice at a wreck at sea, in hopes of enriching themselves with the spoils of others ? The barbarous were humane here, but the humane are now barbarous. Note, 6. How prone and ready men are to draw sinful inferences from sorrowful premises ; to conclude, that such a man, or such a people are wicked because they are wretched.

ed; great sinners, because great sufferers. This was the barbarous logic of these islanders: it had been well that it had been confined to that island; "When the barbarians saw the venomous beast on the apostle's hand, they said, No doubt this man is a murderer." Note, 7. How mutable is the mind of man, and how inconstant are men in their esteem and opinions of men; the apostle had no sooner shook off the viper into the fire, but the barbarians change their opinions into another extreme; he whom they accounted a murderer before, they called a god now: they changed their minds, and said that he was a god. They are light and lavish in their applauding, as before they were rash and severe in censuring. Thus, upon changes of providence, many change their opinions of men, sometimes for the better, but commonly for the worse. Lord, help me to esteem myself only by the esteem which I have with thee. Let me never be lifted up with the applaudings, nor cast down by the despisings of men; neither praise nor reproach are much to be accounted of, whilst we are innocent, and make thee our friend. Quest. But why did not St. Paul, that shook off the viper from his hand, shake off the chain from his arm, and set himself at liberty? Ans. St. Paul was not the author, but a minister or instrument in this miracle; it was not St. Paul himself, but God by him, that wrought this miracle, Acts xix. 12. "God wrought special miracles at the hand of Paul." Now, when the deliverance of the apostle from his bonds made most for the glory of God, he was delivered; but, when his bonds would more advance the gospel, God kept him in bonds.

7 In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius: who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever, and of a bloody flux; to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So, when this was done, others also which had diseases in the island, came and were healed.

10 Who also honored us with many honors; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.

Observe here, How God goes on still to honor the person and ministry of St. Paul, in the eyes and hearts of this barbarous people, by enabling him further to work miracles in this island: first, on Publius, the governor's father, and then on others that were diseased in the island. Here note, 1. How great the civility of the governor of the island was towards St. Paul, entertaining him and all the company with him, even more than two hundred persons, at his own charge. And, 2. How well the governor was rewarded for his hospitable charity: his father lying sick of a fever and bloody flux, is miraculously recovered by God. As there is no duty more certainly rewarded in another world than that of charity;

so is it frequently rewarded in this world: Publius was paid well by his father's recovery, for what he did for St. Paul and his company. Note, 3. The means which the apostle used for recovering the sick person, prayer and imposition of hands, ver. 8. "Paul prayed, and laid his hands on him; and healed him;" now hereby the apostle showed that he could do nothing of himself; accordingly he applies by prayer to that God who killeth and maketh alive, and the Lord heard him. St. Paul had honored God, and now God honors him: how grieved was the holy apostle when God's honor was sacrilegiously given to him? I doubt not but it grieved the good man more, when they called him a god, than when they accounted him a murderer: here, therefore, he returns the honor to God by prayer, ascribing all to him; and God honors him by making him the instrument of the miraculous cure. Note, 4. How the infinitely wise God made all things work together for his own glory; that the apostle should suffer shipwreck: that he should be cast upon an island; that he should be cast upon a barbarous island, where the name of God was not known; that a viper should fasten upon him, and not hurt him; that the governor of the island's father, and other inhabitants of the island, should at this time be sick, and miraculously cured by St. Paul: all these tended towards the promoting of God's glory, by opening an effectual door for the conversion of many souls; for, during the three months that the apostle stayed there, he planted a christian church in the island which became famous for its steadfastness in the truth. Note, 5. The proof and evidence which the islanders gave of the truth of their conversion by the apostle's ministry among them; namely, that those new converts loaded St. Paul's ship with necessities for their voyage when he went away from them: this was a real fruit of their effectual faith, as also their honoring him with many honors. The best evidence of sincere faith, is an holy fruitfulness in good works, in works of piety towards God, and works of charity towards man: "they honored us with many honors; and when we departed, they loaded us with such things as were necessary."

11 And after three months, we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.

12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium; and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli;

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome;

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii-forum and the Three Taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

Observe here, 1. That St. Paul, at the command of God, though shipwrecked before, yet puts forth to sea again. A clear call from God will carry on a christian cheerfully to grapple with all imaginable difficulties and dangers, without either dispute or delay. Thus did the apostle here; he enters a ship of Alexandria, sails from Malta to Syracuse in Sicily, from thence to Rhegium in Italy, from thence to Puteoli; where they found some christians, with whom they abode seven days. Here note, How wonderfully the christian religion was spread abroad in the Italian country: yea, in and about Rome, before St. Paul's coming thither. From Puteoli the apostle passes to Rome, the chief city in Italy, the empress of the world, the seat of the Roman emperor: behold how God bears witness to, and puts honor upon, his suffering servant; he passes to Rome, more like a conqueror than a prisoner: he is met upon the road by many eminent persons, as conquerors used to be, to congratulate their great victories; even by christians, who are called brethren, ver. 15. who are not ashamed of St. Paul's chain, but left their houses, and came forth to meet him, some fifty miles, others thirty: some one day's journey, others two; to congratulate his coming, and pay their respect unto him: for which favor, the apostle thanks God, and took courage: That is, he owned it as an encouragement sent from God unto him, and was greatly refreshed by their company. But how came christians so early to be found at Rome? Who converted them? St. Paul had never been there till now, and we read not of St. Peter's or any of the apostles having been there thus early: yet St. Paul finds many christians at and about Rome? Answer, These brethren are thought to be converted by such as were present at Jerusalem at the feast of Pentecost, Acts ii. 10. where it is expressly said, That there were strangers of Rome then present, when those mighty miracles were wrought there; and we may suppose that they, becoming true converts at that time, did propagate the gospel in and about Rome, according to their ability; and the blessing of God so accompanied and succeeded their endeavours, that the apostle now found some saints even in Nero's house. Thus mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself, with a soldier that kept him.

17 And it came to pass, that after three days, Paul called the chief of the Jews together. And when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people; or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

(No. 38.)

19 But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Cesar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.

20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain.

Now is the great apostle landed and lodged a prisoner at Rome, according to the divine prediction, chap. xxlii. 11. "Be of good cheer, Paul; as thou hast testified of me at Jerusalem, so shalt thou bear witness also at Rome. Yet observe, 1. The favor which God gave him in the sight of his enemies; he is not clapped up in the common gaol, but a sort of prisoner at large; he dwells by himself in his own hired house, with his keeper with him: this liberty was highly valued by the apostle, we may believe: not so much for his own comfort as for the benefit and advantage of the gospel; for by this means he had an opportunity of going abroad and preaching the word of God in every place, as the providence of God gave him opportunity. Observe, 2. St. Paul is no sooner come to Rome with desire and design, no doubt to preach the gospel there to his countrymen the Jews in the first place; but he sends for the Jews to come to him, states his case to them, lays the matter of fact before them, and endeavours to remove all prejudice from their minds, which they might have taken up against him, and so have missed of the benefit of his ministry. From whence learn, That it is the great duty of the ministers of the gospel, prudently to prevent, if possible, or presently to remove all prejudices, which may be taken up by their people against their persons, knowing that, if they have a prejudice against their persons, they will never relish their doctrine, nor be benefited by their ministry. Thus did the great apostle here endeavour to set himself right with his auditors the Jews, before he began to preach to them. Observe, 3. How the apostle was not ashamed of, but rather glories in the cause for which he suffered. For the hope of Israel, I am bound with this chain: As if he had said, "For preaching that Messiah, who hath long been hoped and prayed for, I am come hither a prisoner; or for the sake of Jesus Christ, the promised Messiah, whom all true Israelites long expected and hoped for, who is now come in the flesh, to be their Redeemer, and in whom all the true Israel of God repose all their hope of salvation, and by whom they expect a joyful resurrection; I am bound with this chain." Here observe, 1. The hard usage which the blessed apostle meets with from the hands of a wicked world: a chain is clapped upon him as if he were some rogue or thief: Paul the lamb, was now a prisoner to Nero the lion. The best of men may, and oft do suffer under the notion of the most vile and wicked persons. Observe, 2. The true cause of St. Paul's sufferings, For the hope of Israel I am bound. That is, for the object of Israel's hope, or the Messiah which they so long expected, and so much hoped for. Observe, 3. The publication which St. Paul makes of his sufferings here at Rome: he tells all the world, for whom, and in whose cause he now suffered. Thence learn, That sufferings for Christ and the gospel are no matter of shame, but glory: The apostle doth not blush to say, For the hope of Israel I wear this chain; the shame belonged to them that clapped on the chain, not to him that wore it. Observe, 4. The end why the apostle makes known his sufferings; namely, That all the Jews now at Rome might know the true cause wherefore he suffered. St. Paul's enemies had laid heavy things to his charge, which possibly might fly as far as Rome, now, although he little regarded what the wicked world said of him, yet he desired to stand right in the thoughts of the Jews here at Rome; and therefore, as soon as he was come thither, he sends for them to acquaint them with the cause of his imprisonment. When good men are in a suffering condition, the devil is very industrious to defame them, and the world very ready to misrepresent them; therefore it is a duty which is owing to themselves, to vindicate their own innocency, and to set forth the cause of their sufferings, in a clear and true light. It is verily for the hope of Israel, that I am bound with this chain.

21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came; showed or spoke any harm of thee.

22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest; for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.

23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 And some believed the things which were spoken; and some believed not.

Observe here, 1. The advantage which the apostle had to preach the gospel to these Jews at Rome: they assure him that they had entertained no prejudice against his person; for they had received no letters out of Judea concerning him; neither had any of their brethren that came from Judea spoken any evil of him: yea, they assure him, it was their desire to hear him preach, and to understand what he had to say for the christian religion (which they call a sect or heresy) that both Jews and Gentiles did generally oppose and speak against, and talk hardly of. Observe, 2. How readily the apostle complies with their request in preaching to them: time and place are appointed, and the people assembled: the great truth defended and proved was this, That Jesus of Nazareth was the true and promised Messiah, in whom all that desire to be saved, ought to believe; and trust. This argument he confirmed by testimonies out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, continuing his discourse from morning until night: so unwearied was this faithful laborer in his Lord and Master's work. Observe, 3. The different success of the word preached, and the contrary effects which it had upon its hearers; Some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not. As the same sun that softens the wax hardens the clay, so has the gospel different effects upon those it is preached to; there are some whom no sun will tan, no heat will warm, no influence will quicken: to some we are the savor of life unto life, to others the savor of death unto death: but, blessed be God, if we his ministers be found faithful, we shall be a sweet savor unto God, as well in them that perish, as in them that are saved.

25 And, when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers.

26 Saying, Go unto this people, and say, hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive.

27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed: lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

28 Be it known therefore unto you that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

The obstinate infidelity and unreasonable unbelief which was found among the Jews under the apostle's preaching, was no doubt a great grief of heart unto him; but at their departure, he tells them that they would not be persuaded, that this unbelief of theirs was what the prophet Esaias had long before punctually foretold, that hearing they will not hear, and seeing they will not see; having contracted such a wilful hardness, blindness, and deafness, as will not suffer them to hearken to any counsel which may tend to their conversion and salvation. Here note, That though the present unbelief of the obstinate Jews, to whom the apostle now preached, was long before foretold by the prophets of God: yet the prophet's prediction was no cause of their unbelief; or that which laid them under an impossibility of believing: but the fault lay in their own obstinate wills; with respect to which, by the just judgment of God, they were blinded and hardened. When sinners close their eyes wilfully, and say, they will not see, it is just with God to close their eyes judicially, and say they shall not see. Deus non deserit nisi deserentem; the Jews had forsaken God, and now God forsakes them; but the apostle tells them, that upon this refusal of theirs he was to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, and that they would hear it, and gladly receive it, ver. 29. "The salvation of God is sent to the Gentiles, and they will hear it." Where observe the epithet or title given to the gospel, the salvation of God: 1. It is styled salvation, because it makes a tender and universal offer of life and salvation unto lost sinners. 2. It is called the salvation of God, because it is a salvation of his providing and contriving, of his revealing and discovering: it is his by way of patefaction and discovery; his by way of tender and offer; his by way of power and efficacy: the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles.

30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him.

31 Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Note here, 1. The special favor indulged St. Paul, now a prisoner at Rome, with so much freedom, and without any molestation to preach the gospel in his own hired house for two years together. Where observe, 1. Who preaches; St. Paul a prisoner, who scarcely had liberty to hear, rarely to preach. 2. Where he preached, even in proud, powerful, and imperious Rome, and in his own hired house there. 3. To whom he preached; to all that came unto him. He set open the doors of his house for all comers, excluding none from the gracious offers of salvation by a Redeemer, upon the condition of faith and obedience. 4. How long he continued his ministry at Rome: for two whole years at that time; he would neither be allured by flatteries, nor hectorred by threatenings to lay down his ministry, or desist from his preaching-work. 5. After what manner he preached; with all confidence, boldness, openness, and freedom, with such an undaunted courage, as neither love of life, nor fear of death, could overcome. 6. The subject matter of his preaching; the kingdom of God, and things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ: not vain jangling or envious railings: but Jesus Christ and the way of salvation by him. Lastly, with what freedom he did all this; no man forbidding him; neither emperor, nor senate, nor magistrate, nor soldier, nor priest, nor people, though in an heathen city, devoted to idolatry, in the least hindering or forbidding him. Where note, That Rome, heathen of old, was far less cruel, and much more courteous to the preacher of the gospel, than Rome Antichristian since has been. Then an apostle might preach two years together, without molestation, in his own hired house, to all comers; but now a minister of God must there have no public or private place of meeting to worship God according to his word and will, without the danger of an inquisition. To conclude, see how impossible it was at that day to hinder the progress of the gospel; even as impossible as to hinder the sun from shining, or the wind from blowing. That God, who shut the mouths of the hungry lions that they hurt not Daniel, did open the mouth of the apostle, that neither Nero nor the Jews could stop it; yea, after this, he was delivered from the mouth of the lion, rescued out of Nero's hands. And God would have continued to deliver him, had not his death been more for the glory of God, and his own advantage, than his life, which at last was offered up as a sacrifice and a sweet smelling savour, acceptable unto God through Jesus Christ. Thus St. Luke concludes his history of St. Paul's life, without giving us any particulars of his death. He leaves him at Rome, a prisoner under Nero, where, after two years confinement, the scriptures seem to hint, that he was set at liberty, and that he went about preaching the gospel, and confirming the churches for some years; but an attempt to trace this apostle farther, without scripture-light, may be the ready way to lose ourselves: Let us therefore conclude with prayer:

"That Almighty God, who, through the preaching of his blessed apostle St. Paul, did cause the light of the glorious gospel to shine throughout the world, would mercifully grant, that we, having his wonderful conversion and instructive example in our remembrance, may show forth our thankfulness unto him for the same, by following the holy doctrine which he taught; through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

EPISTLE OF SAINT PAUL
TO THE
R O M A N S.

This Epistle to the Romans has always been esteemed by the church of God one of the chiefest and most excellent portions of holy scripture: The reason why this epistle stands first is not because it was wrote first (the epistle to the Corinthians, Galatians, and Thessalonians, being writ before it;) but either because of the imperial dignity of the city, to wit, Rome, unto which it was directed; or else because of the sublimity of the matter, and the excellency of the doctrine contained in it, with respect to which some have called it, The marrow of divinity; The key of the New Testament; The christian church's confession of faith; and The most divine epistle of the most holy apostle.

The scope and design of which, is twofold; First, to show that neither the Gentiles by the law of nature, nor the Jews by the law of Moses, could ever attain to justification and salvation, but only by faith in Jesus Christ; for the sake of whose merits alone we are accounted righteous in the sight of God. Secondly, To show that faith is not separated from good works, but productive of them; being the parent and principle of obedience, without which, whosoever liveth, is accounted dead before GOD.

The subject matter of this epistle is twofold, partly doctrinal, and partly practical: In the doctrinal part, which makes up the first eleven chapters, the apostle treats of justification by faith alone, without the works of the law; of original corruption by the fall of Adam; of sanctification by the Spirit of Christ; of the calling of the Gentiles; that is, of the present rejection of the Jews, and the future recalling of them when the fulness of the Gentiles was come in.

In the applicatory or practical part of this epistle, which begins at chapter xii. we have many useful and excellent exhortations, both to general and particular duties respecting GOD, our neighbour, and ourselves; and several encouragements given us to the love and practice of universal holiness.

CHAPTER I.

In this first chapter our apostle (after salutation given) proceeds to his principal design and scope; namely, to assert and prove the grand doctrine of justification by faith; that is, by believing and obeying the gospel of Christ; and that no person, either Jew or Gentile, could possibly be justified by any works of their own.

As to the Gentiles, he shows in this chapter, that their works were so far from justifying them before God, that they were an abomination in his sight; that for rebelling against the light and law of nature, God delivered them up to their unnatural lusts, which exposed them to unutterable and inevitable condemnation (as the close of this chapter will inform us) and this as a just judgment and righteous punishment for their sins.

PAUL, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God,

Observe here, The author and penman of this epistle described; 1. By his name, Paul: Before his conversion he was called Saul; then Saul the persecutor: After his conversion, he was Paul the professor, Paul the preacher, Paul the great doctor of the Gentiles. Oh wonderful power of the heart-changing grace of God! which is able to turn Sauls into Pauls, persecutors into professors, faithless sinners into faithful servants of Jesus Christ. Observe, 2. He is described by his general office; a servant of Jesus Christ; an higher and more honorable title than that of emperor of the whole earth. Servire Christo est regnare: To serve Christ, especially in the quality of an ambassador, is a greater honor than to have the monarchs of the world to serve us, and bow the knee before us. Observe, 3. He is described by his particular office; called to be an apostle; that is, constituted and appointed by Christ to that holy function, without any merit or desert of his own. He did not assume the honor of an apostle till called; and when called, it was not any desert of his own, but the free and undeserved grace of God that called him. Observe, 4. That as he was called to, so he is said to be separated for the great work of preaching the gospel; separated unto the gospel of God; that is, set apart in the purpose and decree of God; separated from his mother's womb, Gal. i. 15. Immediately and extraordinarily called by Christ himself to this great work, Acts ix. 15. And immediately by the officers of the church, Acts xiii. 2, 3. &c. The work of dispensing the mysteries of the everlasting gospel is to be undertaken by none but those who are solemnly separated and set apart for it, and regularly called to it: I would to God the herd of lay-preachers at this day would consider this. These usurpers of the sacred function can neither pray in faith for a blessing upon what they undertake, because they have no promise to bottom their faith upon, nor can the people expect to profit by what they hear from thence; for this would be to expect God's blessing out of God's way. Read with trembling what God says, Jer. xxiii. 32. "I sent them not, neither commanded them, therefore shall they not profit this people at all." Where mark, That the people's not profiting by these men, is not charged upon their false doctrine, but upon their want of a call and commission: it is not said, that their doctrine is unsound, but they preach un-sent; therefore they shall not profit this people at all: these men contradict the command of God, the universal practice of the christian church; violate the rules of order and right reason, and expose a most awful and tremendous ordinance of God to contempt and scorn; yea, lay it open to the bold presumption of every ignorant and impudent pretender. Observe, 5. The glorious title given to the gospel, which St. Paul was called forth to preach; it is here styled the gospel of God, and elsewhere the gospel of Christ. It is the gospel of God, as he was the author and contriver of it; it is the gospel of Christ, as he is the subject matter and scope of it: as Jesus Christ was the sum of the law, so is he the substance of the gospel. Indeed, St. Paul sometimes calls it his gospel, Rom. ii. 16. because he was the dispenser and promulger of it; it was depositum fidei sue commissum; "A divine treasure committed to his care and trust." And, if the gospel preached be the gospel of God, let us entertain it in our judgments, retain it in our memories, embrace it in our affections, hide it in our hearts, confess it with our mouths, and practise it in our lives.

(No. 32)

2 (Which he had promised before by his prophets in the holy scriptures)

That is, Which gospel God had promised before by his holy prophets speaking in the holy scriptures. Where note, 1. The antiquity of the gospel, how ancient that doctrine is, even as old as the old prophets themselves; nay, as old as Adam himself. The gospel, or glad tidings of a Saviour, was first preached to Adam by God himself, Gen. iii. 15. next to Abraham, Gen. xv. then it was predicted by all the prophets which have been since the world began. The gospel which we preach can by no means fall under the charge and imputation of novelty: it is no new or modern doctrine, but almost as old as the world itself: Which gospel he had promised before by his holy prophets. Behold then a great correspondence, a sweet agreement and harmony between the old and new Testament, between the prophets and apostles, though great difference in the manner and measure of the revelation. For, as one says, the old Testament is the hiding of the new; the new Testament is the opening of the old. The old Testament is the new Testament veiled: the new Testament is the old revealed. Note, 2. The venerable title given to the scriptures; they are called the holy scriptures: Which he had promised before by his prophets speaking in the holy scriptures. The scriptures are holy in several respects. 1. In regard of their author and inditers, the Holy Spirit of God. 2. In regard of the penman and writers of them, holy men of God. 3. In regard of the subject matter contained in them, the holy will of God. 4. In regard of them to make us holy both in heart and life. And, if the word of God be an holy word, then let it be treated by us with all holy deference and regard. Lord, what an impious liberty do some men take, in this wanton age, to furnish out a jest in scripture-attire, and in their jocular humor to make light and irrelevant applications of scripture-phrases and sentences! They lay their schemes of ridiculous mirth in the Bible, and play the buffoon with the most serious things in the world. These men bring forth scripture as the Philistines brought forth Samson, only to make them sport; but they shall ere long find Almighty God in earnest, though they were in jest: He that has magnified his word above all his name, will not brook it, that any man should make it vile and contemptible, by rendering it the theme of his giddy mirth and profane drollery.

3 Concerning his son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David, according to the flesh.

4 And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead.

The apostle having told us in the foregoing verses, that he was particularly called to, and by God set apart for the preaching of the gospel; in the verses before us, he declares that Jesus Christ was the main subject of that gospel which he preached, and describes him by his twofold nature, by his human nature, ver. 3. by his divine nature, ver. 4. According to his human nature, he was made of the seed of David; that is, descended from David and one of his posterity by the mother's side, who was of that house and line according to the flesh; that is, the weakness, frailty, and morality of his human nature. Where observe, 1. That our Lord Jesus Christ had a being, even an external existence, before his incarnation or manifestation in our flesh and nature. He was the son of God, before he was born the son of man; hence he is said to be made of the seed of David, intimating, that he was then made what he was not before. In regard of his divine nature, he was begotten, not made, but, in regard of his human nature, he was made, not begotten. Observe, 2. That Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God, did in the fullness of time assume the true and perfect nature of man into a personal union with his God-head. The human nature was united to the divine nature miraculously and extraordinarily, by the overshadowing power of the Holy Ghost, Luke i. 34, 35, and also integrally and completely: that is to say, Christ took a complete and perfect human soul and body, with all the faculties of the one and all the members of the other, that thereby he might heal the whole nature of that leprosy of sin, which had seized upon, and diffused its malignity into every member, and every faculty. Next, we have a demonstration of Christ's divine nature, ver. 4. Declared to be the Son of God with power, &c. As if our apostle had said, That our Lord Jesus Christ, though according to the frailty and weakness of human nature, he was of the seed of David; yet in respect of that divine power of the Holy Ghost, which manifested itself in him, especially in his resurrection from the dead, He was declared to be the Son of God with power; that is, mighty and powerfully demonstrated so to be. Learn hence, 1. That the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead, by the Holy Ghost, is a powerful and convincing demonstration that he was the Son of God. Christ, as man, is nowhere said in scripture to be the Son of God, but with relation to the divine power of the Holy Ghost, by whom he had life communicated to him from the Father, both at his conception and at his resurrection. At his conception he was the Son of God, by being conceived by the Holy Ghost; but this was secret and invisible, known only to the mother of our Lord: therefore at his resurrection, by the Spirit of holiness, that is by the immediate power of the Holy Ghost, God thought fit to give a visible demonstration to the whole world, that Jesus was his own Son, the true and promised Messiah; and consequently did thereby give testimony to the truth and divinity of our Saviour's doctrine and miracles. God did now publicly own his Son, in the face of the whole world; and freed him from all suspicion of being an impostor or deceiver; for it is not supposable, that God should put forth an almighty power to raise him from the grave, if he had by robbery assumed that glorious title of the Son of God; therefore saith the Father of him, in the morning of the resurrection, Thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee; that is, in the words of our apostle here, declared, and made thee conspicuously appear to "be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Yet observe, 2. That though Christ was raised from the dead by the power of God's Holy Spirit, yet he did certainly raise himself by his own power as God, according to his own prediction, John ii. 19. "Destroy ye this temple," of my body, "and in three days I will raise it up;" according to St. Peter's assertion, 1 Pet. iii. 18. "Being put to death in the flesh," that is, in his human nature, "but quickened by the Spirit;" that is, by the power of his Godhead, or divine nature, quickening himself: for had he been only raised by the power of God, and not by his own power, how could his resurrection have been a declaration that he was the Son of God? What had more appeared in Christ's resurrection than in other men's? For they were raised by the power of God as well as he. But here lies the difference: Christ rose by a self-quickening principle, others are raised by a quickening principle derived from Christ; with respect to which he is called the resurrection and the life, John xi. 25, that is, the principle of quickening life, by which the dead saints are raised. Observe, 3. That the apostle doth not say, Christ was made or constituted the Son of God by his resurrection from the dead, but declared so to be: Multa tunc fieri dicuntur, quando facta esse manifestantur, according to the phrase of scripture, "Things are then said to be, when they conspicuously appear." Nothing can be more evident, than that Christ was the Son of God before his resurrection; yea, before his incarnation, being the Father of eternity, Isa. ix. 6. But the glory of his divinity was much clouded, darkened, and eclipsed, by the frailty of his humanity, by the miseries of his life, and the ignominy of his death. But by his resurrection, God rolled away his reproach, and freed him from all the aspersions and accusations of his enemies, who charged him with blasphemy, for affirming that he was the Son of God: And thus our Jesus, in whom we trust, was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."

5 By whom we have received grace and apostleship for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name:

6 Among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ.

Observe here, 1. St. Paul declares the person from whom he received authority to be an apostle, namely, Christ himself: By whom we received apostleship; that is, by Jesus Christ, mentioned in the foregoing verse; who called him immediately, and furnished him with authority and ability for a gospel-preacher, even then when he had been a furious and fiery persecutor. Observe, 2. He declares how free and undeserved a favor this was; he acknowledges he had received grace to be an apostle: intimating, that to be rightly called to be an apostle, or messenger of the gospel of Jesus Christ, is a special act and instance of divine grace and favor; By whom we have received grace and apostleship. Observe, 3. What is the special office and duty of an apostle, and the great end and design of that honorable function, namely, to call all persons to believe and obey the gospel. Learn thence, that the great end of the ministry of the word, is to bring sinners to believe and obey the gospel of Christ, to persuade them to yield, not a professed subjection only, but a real obedience also to the gospel of Christ; By whom we have received grace and apostleship for obedience in the faith among all nations. Observe, 4. How the apostle puts the Romans in mind of their condition by nature, before the gospel was revealed to them, and received by them; they were then Pagans and heathenish idolaters, but now Christians, or the called of Jesus Christ, among whom (that is, among the Gentile nations) ye are also the called of Jesus Christ. Learn thence, That it is a necessary duty for ministers, and a profitable duty for the people, to put, and be often put in mind of what they were and are by nature; it is profitable, both to increase their humiliation, and also to excite their gratulation. "You Romans (as if the apostle had said) who are now the called of Jesus Christ, were once afar off, even amongst the vile and cursed Gentiles: let the remembrance of what you once were, keep you continually humble, and the knowledge of what now by grace you are, render you for ever thankful."

7 To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints; Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ

Two things are here observable, 1. The general inscription of St. Paul's epistle; and, next, the particular salutations therein given. In the inscription, we have the persons described to whom the epistle is directed: And that, 1. By their place of abode and habitation; To all that be at Rome. Thence note, That Rome, though now a grove of idols, a nest of unclean birds, yet was once an habitation of holiness; a receptacle for the saints and dearly-beloved ones of God. Rome that is now a lewd and impudent strumpet, was once the chaste and holy spouse of Christ. Behold, the grace and favor of God is not confined to place or person! The Lord is with you while you are with him, and not longer. 2. They are described by their title; Beloved of God, Saints, and Called. Where note, the order of their titles: first, Beloved of God, then Called and Sanctified; intimating, that the love and grace, the favor and free good will of God, are the source and spring, the root and original causes of all blessings and benefits; namely, of vocation, sanctification, and remission, &c. We love him because he first loved us, 1 John iv. 10. The love of God is the cause of our holiness, and our perseverance in holiness will be the preservation of his love. John xv. 10. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love. Question, But how could the apostle call the whole church at Rome saints, when doubtless there were many hypocrites amongst them? Answer, 1. They were all saints by external communion and visible profession. They were called out of the world, that is, separated from the world, and consecrated to the service of Christ, and so lay under a necessary obligation to be true and real saints. 2. They were denominated saints from the better, and we would hope, from the greater part amongst them. Doubtless there were many, very many of them that answered their character, who were holy in the habitual frame of their hearts, and in the general course of their lives, and from them the whole received their denomination of saints, or holy. Observe, 2. After the inscription follows the apostle's salutation, Grace to you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Where note, 1. The comprehensiveness of the salutation: Grace and peace comprehend all blessings, spiritual and temporal; grace implies and includes, both the spring and fountain of all divine favor, and likewise the several streams which flow from that fountain, all the effects and fruits of grace. And peace, according to the Hebrew manner of speaking, implies all good things for soul and body, for time and eternity. Note, 2. The persons from whom these blessings are derived, from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ: From God as the sovereign and fountal cause, and from Christ as the mediator of all, without whom we have nothing to do with any of the divine favors; for both grace and peace come by Jesus Christ. And whereas Christ is called Lord, and here joined with the Father, and the same blessings are said to flow from Christ as from the Father; we learn, That Christ is really and undoubtedly God equal with the Father, and blessed for evermore. Quest. But why is the Holy Ghost here excluded, no mention at all being made of him?—Ans. He is not excluded, though he be not named, but necessarily implied in the forementioned gifts; because grace and peace are the fruits of the Spirit, they come from God the Father, through the mediation of the Son, and are wrought in us by the operation of the Holy Ghost. Besides, in other salutations (though not in this) the Holy Ghost is expressly mentioned, as 2 Cor. xiii. 13, 14. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and communion of the Holy Ghost be with you."

8 First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.

Observe here, 1. The great and wonderful success of the gospel; it had produced faith in the hearts, and obedience in the lives of the Romans, which had made them famous throughout the world: Your faith, says the apostle, is spoken of throughout the whole world; that is, through all the Roman empire, which at that time ruled over a great part of the known world. The entertaining of the gospel at Rome, made that place more celebrated and famous, than all the victories and triumphs of the Roman emperors; faith and holiness make a place and people more renowned than all outward prosperity and happiness. Observe, 2. That this their renowned faith was the ground, yea, the highest and chiefest ground of the apostle's rejoicing; First, I thank my God, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world. Learn thence, That it is both the duty and the disposition of the faithful ministers of Jesus Christ, to be highly thankful to God, above all things, for the powerful success of the gospel, in bringing sinners to the faith and obedience of Jesus Christ. This is our rejoicing, nay, this will be our crown of rejoicing in the day of Christ: we value our lives only by their usefulness to the souls of our beloved people; we live as we see some of you stand fast in the Lord; we die as we see others stick fast in their sins.

9 For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayer;

10 Making request (if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God) to come unto you.

Here we have observable, 1. The apostle's solemn protestation of his affectionate love unto, and great care and concern for, these Roman converts, whom he was now absent from, yea, whose faces he had never yet seen; Without ceasing, says the apostle, I make mention of you always in my prayers. Behold here, as in a glass, the face of every faithful minister of Christ; he continually bears his people upon his heart, whenever he goes in and out before the Lord: as Aaron bare the names of the children of Israel upon his breast plate; he pours out his very soul in fervent supplications for them, and can sooner be forgetful of himself, than unmindful of them: Without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers. Observe, 2. That because the apostle was yet a stranger to them, had never seen them, and it was impossible for them to know the outgoings of his heart toward them, he solemnly appeals to the heart-searching God, calls him to witness how affectionately he loved them, and how frequently he prayed for them; God is my witness. The words have the force, if not the form of an oath, and teach us, that it is unquestionably lawful in important affairs to swear, to appeal to God, and call him to be a witness of what we either say or do. We find St. Paul did it often, and our Saviour himself did not refuse to answer upon oath, when solemnly adjured. Observe, 3. How the apostle swears by God, not by the creatures, which is the swearing condemned by our Saviour and by St. James, Matt. v. and James v. Note farther, How St. Paul appeals to that God, whom he served in or with his spirit; that is, with the apostle's own spirit, with his heart unfeignedly. From whence we may remark, That no service can be performed acceptably to almighty God, except the heart and spirit of a christian be engaged in it. True, the body has its part and share in divine worship, as well as the soul; but the service of the body is never accepted by God, unless animated and quickened by an obedient soul. Oh christian, serve thy God with thy soul and spirit, as well as with thy tongue and knee! and then thy offering will be more acceptable to God, than the most adorned temples, the most pompous ceremonies, and most costly devotions whatever, with the want of these.

11 For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

12 That is, that I may be comforted together with you, by the mutual faith both of you and me.

The apostle having declared, in the foregoing verses, how fervently he prayed for them, and how passionately he desired to come unto them; he now acquaints them with the reason of that desire; namely, For the furtherance of his own joy, and their establishment; "I long to see you, that you may be established, and I may be comforted." Learn hence, 1. That establishment in faith and holiness, is that which the holiest and best of christians do stand in need of. Learn, 2. That the presence of the ministers of Christ, with and among their people, as well as their preaching the doctrine of faith to them, is absolutely necessary, in order to their establishment; God has joined the duties of public preaching and private inspection together, and woe unto us, if by our non-residence, and not dwelling among our people, or, if living with them, we haughtily refuse, or slothfully neglect personally to converse with them, we deny them one special means for their edification and establishment. Observe, lastly, That the apostle desired to be personally present with the church and saints at Rome, for his own benefit, as well as for their advantage; That I may be comforted. Learn hence, That the ministers of Christ do certainly improve and benefit themselves, as well as edify and establish their people, by their conferring with them; as iron sharpeneth iron, and the rubbing of one hand warmeth another, so the meanest of Christ's members may contribute to the advantage of the greatest apostle; God's weak servants may strengthen thy strong shoulders; "Verily, I have sometimes gained more knowledge by an hour's conference with a private and experienced christian, than by half a day's study." Most certainly the ministers of God are great losers by being strangers to their people.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you (but was let hitherto) that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other Gentiles.

14 I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise.

15 So much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also.

Here observe, How the apostle obviates an objection, and prevents a reflection upon himself: Some at Rome might be ready to say, If Paul had such a longing desire to see us as he expresses, why did he not come all this time, and preach here, as he has done at Corinth and Ephesus, and elsewhere? He truly told them, therefore, that it was not for want of inclination and will, but for want of opportunity; he had often intended it, and attempted it also, but was providentially hindered. From whence I gather, That the ministers of God cannot always dispose of themselves and of their labors according to their own inclinations and desires, but both their persons and ministry are directed and disposed of by the providence, and according to the pleasure of Almighty God. Observe, 2. The great modesty and condescending humility of our apostle, in telling the Romans, that though he desired and intended to take this long journey to Rome, to preach the gospel to them, yet this was rather a debt than a gift: he doth not intimate to them, that his coming amongst them was an arbitrary favor, for which they should be indebted to him, but a bounden duty which he owed to them; "I am a debtor both to Jew and Greek, and ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." Here note, that the debt spoken of is the preaching of the gospel: St. Paul contracted this debt, and laid himself under an obligation to pay it them, (as every minister doth now) at his first entering upon the work of the ministry; by virtue of his mission, it was his duty to preach the gospel to all, both to the learned Greeks and unlearned Barbarians. From whence learn, That to preach the gospel of Christ both far and near, with a laborious diligence, when regularly called thereunto, is a ministerial debt and duty. We are first indebted to God that sends us forth, we are also indebted to the people we are sent unto. But oh! how many people are there that would willingly forgive their ministers this debt! but we must tender payment at the time and place appointed, or we can never be discharged, whether the debt be accepted or not.

16 For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

Observe here, 1. The glorious description which the apostle gives of the gospel; It is the power of God unto salvation. That is, the preaching of it is attended by, and accompanied with, an almighty power, which renders it effectual to salvation, if we do not bolt our ears and hearts against it. Learn, that the plain and persuasive preaching of the gospel, is the chosen instrument in God's hand which he uses and honors for the conveyance of spiritual life into the souls of men, though it be despised and ridiculed by the men of the world. The gospel is powerful; it is the power not of men or angels, but the power of God; not the essential but instrumental power of God; it works as an instrument, yet not a natural, but as a moral instrument in God's hands; freely, not arbitrarily. The word gives out to us, as God gives into that: the power of the gospel is not from the preachers of the gospel, therefore do not idolize them, but they are instruments in God's hand, their words are the vehicle, or organ, through which the vital power of the spirit is conveyed; therefore do not vilify and think meanly of them. Observe, 2. The solemn protestation and bold profession which the apostle makes of his not being ashamed of the gospel of Christ; I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. Where note, 1. He doth not say, I am not afraid to preach the gospel; but I am not ashamed, because shame hinders our readiness more than fear: a man may be fit and ready to preach the gospel, and yet be afraid to undertake it; but he that is ashamed of the work, can never be fit for it. Note, 2. That when the apostle says, he is not ashamed of the gospel, more is intended than expressed: I am so far from being ashamed, that I account it my glory; as if the apostle had said, "Verily I esteem it the highest honor that God can confer upon me, to preach the gospel at Rome, though it should cost me my life." Oh how exceeding well doth a bold profession of the gospel become all the ministers and members of Jesus Christ! Let all say with the apostle, we are not ashamed of the gospel: none of the ministers of Christ to preach it, none of the members of Christ to profess and practise it.

17 For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, the just shall live by faith.

Here the apostle produces an argument to prove that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation; "Because by it the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith:" that is, the righteousness of the Mediator, called the righteousness of God, because it is of his providing, and of his approving and accepting, and for the sake of which God pardons our unrighteousness, and receives us graciously. This righteousness is by the gospel revealed to beget faith in men, even such a faith as goes from faith to faith; that is, groweth and increaseth from one degree and measure to another; and thus the apostle falls upon his main proposition, which is the scope and design of this epistle; namely, that there is no possible way for the justification of a sinner, either Jew or Gentile, but by faith in the Mediator. Learn hence, that the righteousness whereby we are justified in the sight of God, is discovered to us in the gospel, to be only by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, as the appointed Mediator betwixt God and us; "the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith:" the apostle proves this by a citation out of the prophet Habakkuk; the just shall live by faith: that is, as the pious Jews in the time of the Babylonian captivity did live and find comfort for their troubles, by faith and affiance in God; in the like manner the apostle shows, that he that is evangelically just or religious, shall live a life of grace on earth, and glory in heaven, by faith in Christ; that is, depending upon the merits and righteousness of the Mediator, in the way of holiness and strict obedience to his commands. Learn hence, that a justified man lives a more holy, useful, and excellent life than other men: his life is from God: his life is with God: yea, he lives the life of God himself. 2. That whatever life a justified man lives, (in a more excellent manner than other men) he lives that life by virtue of his faith, the just shall live by faith.

18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness;

Our apostle having asserted and laid down a general proposition, that the justification of a sinner is only to be expected by the righteousness of the Mediator in a way of faith: he now undertakes the proof and demonstration of it thus; distributes the whole world into Gentiles and Jews; the former seeking righteousness by the dim light of nature, or the law written in their hearts; the latter by the works of the law, that is, by their external conformity to what the law of Moses exacted and required of them. Now his present business is to prove distinctly and folly, that neither Gentile nor Jew could ever find what they thus sought; He begins here with the Gentiles, and shows that indeed they had inbred notions of a God imprinted in their minds by nature, and also had the book of the creatures before their eyes, in which much, very much of God might be seen: yet these common notices of God, and of good and evil, they did not obey and put in practice, but rebelled against the light and dictates of their natural consciences: for which cause, the wrath of God was revealed from heaven against them. Here observe, 1. A dreadful manifestation of divine wrath: the wrath of God is revealed from heaven. The wrath of God: that is, the indignation or vengeance of God: this the sinner shall feel who doth not fear it; for the fears of an incensed Deity are no bugbears, not the effects of ignorance and superstition, as the Atheists fancy. This wrath is said to be revealed from heaven; that is, discovered and made manifest by the God of heaven, partly by the light of nature, their own consciences giving them notice and warning of it; and partly by the examples of others, in the lashes of a divine severity on the back of sinners, by the hand of an incensed God; thus the wrath of God was revealed to the Gentiles from heaven. Observe, 2. The object or impulsive cause of his revealed and inflicted wrath; namely, all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Ungodliness compriseth all sins against God, or neglect of the duties of the first table: unrighteousness comprehends all sins against our neighbour, or the breaches of the second table. Note here, that the abstract is put for the concrete, the sins for the sinners that commit them; the wrath of God is revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men; that is, against all ungodly and unrighteous persons; the meaning is, that God will certainly punish these sins upon the persons of the sinners. Observe, 3. The special aggravation of these their sins, or that which made them so very provoking to Almighty God: namely, that they held the truth in unrighteousness; that is, their natural convictions were kept down under the dominion and power of their corruptions. Lust in their wills and affections was too hard for the light of their understandings; they entertained the light of truth in their minds, but did not suffer it to have its proper effect and influence upon their hearts and lives; thus making that a prisoner which would have made them free. Learn, 1. That it is a very great aggravation of sin, for men to offend against the light of their own minds, and to rebel against the convictions of their own consciences: 2. That the wrath of God is dreadfully incensed against all those that live in any course of sin, rebelling against the dictates and convictions of their own enlightened consciences. Dread it then, as thou dreadest hell itself, to sin against knowledge, to rebel against the light of thy own mind, to slight the whispers, to stifle the voice of thy own conscience; but reverence and obey its dictates as the commands of God.

19 Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them.

That is, much of the nature and properties of God may be known by the light of nature; his infinite power, wisdom and goodness, are manifest in the minds and the consciences of all men: for God hath showed it unto them, partly by imprinting these notions of himself upon the hearts of all men, and partly by the book of the creatures, in which his glorious attributes are written in large and legible characters. Learn hence, That all men have a natural knowledge of God, and those great duties which result from the knowledge of him. 2. That the natural knowledge which men have of God, if they live contrary to it, is a sufficient evidence of their holding the truth of God in righteousness, and is a God provoking and wrath-procuring sin.

20. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head; so that they are without excuse:

The apostle here proceeds in acquainting us with that knowledge of God which the heathens had by the light of nature, which was in their hearts, and augmented and increased by what of God they saw in the book of the creatures; namely, in the works of creation and providence: "the invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, &c." The sense, I conceive, is this, that the wise and wonderful frame of the world, which cannot reasonably be ascribed to any other cause but God, is a sensible demonstration to all mankind, of an eternal and powerful Being, that was the author and contriver of it. The strokes of the Creator's hand are engraven in all parts of the universe, the heavens, the earth, and the capacious sea, with all things contained in them, are evident testimonies of the excellency of their original cause: and therefore such of the heathens of old as shut their eyes, and such of the atheists at this day as wink hard, and will not see the footsteps of a Deity in the works of creation and providence, are and will be, everlastingly left without excuse. Learn hence, 1. That much of the being and essential perfections of God may be known by the light of nature, if attended to; and much more may be understood by the book of the creatures, if attentively looked into. The invisible things of God are clearly seen from the creation; that is, the creation of the world is a plain demonstration to men of the being and power of God. Learn, 2. That all such persons will be left for ever without excuse before God, who either extinguish the light of nature, and smother the natural notices which they have of God, or do not improve them by a due consideration of the works of God. Without opening the eye of reason, the book of creation is of no more use to us than to the brute beasts: they see the creatures as well as we, but many of us consider the creatures, and see God in the creation no more than they: and this will leave us without excuse. Learn, 3. How endearing are our obligations to almighty God, for the favor and benefit of divine revelation; that together with the light of nature, we have the superadded light of scripture; the law to convince us of our sin, the gospel to discover a Saviour. The heathens had only those natural apostles, of sun, moon, and stars, to guide them to God, and instruct them in their duty to him; but we have the wisdom of the Father, the incarnate Son of God, and his inspired apostles and ministers to lead us into all truth and his Holy Spirit to excite and quicken us in our obedience to him. Therefore, eternally magnified be Omnipotent Love, for the light of Scripture, for the benefit of divine revelation. For though there be a natural theology, there is not a natural Christology; there is a natural divinity, but not a natural gospel, a knowledge of God by the light of nature, but no knowledge of Jesus the Mediator, with out the light of scripture. All thanks, eternal thanks be to God for his unspeakable gifts! Lord, how will all such as condemn it be left without excuse!

21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

From this verse to the end of the chapter, we have a large and black catalogue of the sins which the old heathens, or Gentiles were guilty of; some of which they voluntarily committed, and others they were judiciously delivered up unto (for God, without any impeachment of his holiness, often punishes sin with sin.) Their sins voluntarily committed, are here recited, and the first of them is their sinning against light and knowledge. They had some natural notices of God implanted and imprinted in their minds, and such an additional knowledge of his being and attributes, as might be gained by an attentive study in the book of the creatures: but they rebelled against this light, and thereby contracted an aggravated guilt. Learn thence, That to sin against light and knowledge, either in the omission of duty, or commission of sin, is the highest aggravation of sinfulness: as ignorance lesseneth, so knowledge aggravateth the malignity, of sin. The next sin charged upon them was, they did not glorify that God whom they had the knowledge of: that is, they did not conceive of him, and worship him as became his divine perfections and excellencies; they did not esteem so high of him as they ought, and pay that homage and honor to the Deity which they should. Learn thence, that the knowledge which we have of God and his attributes, if it do not engage us to honor, glorify, and worship him suitable to his adorable perfections, it is vain and useless in God's account, and will but expose us to a more dreadful condemnation. Another sin mentioned in this verse, which the heathens were guilty of, was the sin of unthankfulness. They glorified him not as God, neither were they thankful: that is, they had not a due sense of the favors and benefits of God conferred upon them; but, ascribing the blessings of heaven to chance and fortune, to fate and destiny, to the influence of the stars and planets, to their own prudence and providence, they paid their thanks to blind fortune, for a favor which the eye of providence had bestowed upon them: it is impossible that God should receive the tribute of thankfulness, if we do not see all our mercies flowing from him. Observe farther, the sad effect, fruit and consequence of the forementioned sins. The heathens which committed them, it is said, 1. That they became vain in their imaginations, that is, they had various opinions and vain conceptions of the Godhead. Some of them denied that there was a God, others doubted whether there was a God or no; some affirmed there was but one God, others owned a plurality, yea a multiplicity of gods. Some acknowledged God's being, but denied his providence; others owned his providence, but confined it, in its exercise to secondary causes. Thus vain in their imaginations, thus absorbed in their notions, and thus sottish in their reasonings, were the heathens concerning God, his nature and worship. Well might our apostle say, they became vain in their imaginations, And, 2. That their foolish hearts were darkened: that is, for rebelling against the light received, their minds and understandings were more and more darkened; their natural reason obscured, because not improved. Lord, how dangerous is it not to improve our knowledge! how fatal to rebel against the light and convictions of our own minds! it provokes thee to deliver us up to the power of spiritual darkness on earth, and consign us over to eternal darkness in hell, where is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever, as the punishment and portion of those that rebel against the light, and sin against knowledge.

22 Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools:

23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.

The next sin which the apostle charges upon the Gentiles, is the sin of idolatry. Such as professed themselves to be the most wise and knowing men among them, as their celebrated philosophers, poets, and orators, they debased and dishonored the all-glorious God, by framing vile images of men and beasts, of birds and creeping things, to represent him by. These idolaters changed the glory of the living, ever-living God, into the likeness of lifeless things; whereas the Lord is so infinitely glorious, that nothing can set forth his glory sufficiently: the most excellent creature cannot represent his super-excellent perfections: and accordingly, it is as real a debasing of the divine Majesty, to represent him by an angel, as by a worm or a fly. All attempted representations of God by any creature whatsoever, are idolatrous provocations.

24 Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lust of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves;

Observe here, 1. Another infamous sin charged upon the heathens; namely, the sin of uncleanness: yea, base unnatural uncleanness, and pollutions of the most odious kinds. Learn thence, that idolatry and uncleanness often go together. Solomon's uncleanness led him to idolatry, and his idolatry increased his uncleanness. The city of Rome at this day, which is a grove of idols, the chief city of idolatry is next to Sodom for uncleanness: witness their allowing of stews by public authority. Learn, 2. That all kinds and degrees of pollutions both natural and unnatural, are to be detested and abhorred, as dishonoring the body. Our bodies are Christ's members, the Holy Ghost's temples; let us therefore glorify God with our bodies on earth, which shall be subjects capable of glory with himself in heaven. Observe, 2. God's judicatory tradition of these idolatrous heathens to the sin of uncleanness. Wherefore God gave them up to uncleanness. Almighty God often doth, and always righteously may punish sin with sin: God punished the idolatry of the heathens here, by delivering them up to vile affections, to uncleanness, and unnatural lusts. But how is this consistent with God's holiness and hatred of sin? Thus, God neither infuses sin in their hearts, nor excites to sin in their lives, but leaves sinners to themselves, to act without restraint, according to the inclination of their own lusts and corruptions: and also gives them up to satan, that unclean spirit, who will not fail to provoke them to such uncleanness as he knows their inclinations stand ready to comply with. Lord keep back thy servants from sinning against the light of nature, against the light of scripture, lest we be judicially darkened, and given up to a sottish and injudicious mind, to hardness of heart, and the vilest of affections.

25 Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen.

26 For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: For even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature;

27 And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men, working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet.

28 And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient:

Here our apostle proceeds to give a particular and distinct account of the abominable idolatry and unnatural filthiness, which he had charged the heathens with in the foregoing verses. As to their idolatry, he had told us at the 23d verse, that they had made false and unworthy representations of the ever-blessed God: worshipping God in and by the creatures. In the 25th verse, they are charged with a false object of their worship, giving divine honor to a creature; they changed the truth of God into a lie; that is the true God into an idol, called a lie, because it deceives men as a lie doth, by seeming to be that which indeed it is not; it seems in the idolater's fancy, to have something of divinity in it, when, in reality, it is but wood or stone. Every image of God is a false and lying representation of God. Secondly, as to their uncleanness, he shows that they were so given up to the ravings of lust for sinning against the light of nature, that they forsook the order of nature, and were more brutish than the very brutes. Learn hence, that when men provoke God finally to forsake them, and judicially to give them up to their own hearts' lusts, they will not stick to commit such monstrous and unnatural uncleanness, as the very brute beasts abhor. Here men and women burnt in worse than beastly lusts towards those of their own sex. Lord, if we are not more vile than the vilest of thy creatures, we owe it all to thy sanctifying, or at least, to thy restraining grace. As by the grace of God we are what we are; so by his grace it is that we are not what we are not.

29 Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers,

30 Backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents,

31 Without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful:

Here the apostle sums up the sins which the heathens committed against the second table, or against their neighbour; not that every particular person was guilty of all these black crimes, but all were guilty of some, and some perhaps were guilty of all or most of them. Learn hence, that the heart of man doth naturally swarm and abound with strange and monstrous lusts and abominations. Lord! what a swarm is here! and yet there are multitudes more in the depths of the heart. Whatever abominations were found in the hearts and lives of heathens and Sodomites, and the most profligate wretches under heaven, are radically and seminally in our corrupt and degenerate natures, Matt. xv. 19. "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, &c." What are our lusts, but so many toads spitting of venom and spawning of poison? Oh deplorable degradation! Learn, 2. How much sadder is the condition which unregenerate souls abide in, who remain in and under the power and dominion, the vassalage and slavery of these imperious lusts, which perpetually rage within them, and incessantly contest and scuffle for the throne. Learn, 3. To stand astonished at the heart-changing grace of God, which has delivered thee from so dismal a condition. Oh! fall down and kiss the feet of mercy, adore the sovereignty and freeness of divine grace, which step in so seasonably to thy rescue. Lord! what black imaginations, what vile affections, what hellish desires, what monstrous abominations were lodged in my heart and nature, before regeneration wrought a change! Oh that ever the Holy Ghost should set his eyes upon any of the sinful offspring of apostate Adam; in whom were legions of unclean lusts, and whose nature was become the sink and seed-plot of all sin. Observe, lastly, two particular sins, which of all others seem most monstrous in these heathens. 1. They were haters of God, not of his essence, being, and goodness, but haters of his holiness, justice and providence. 2. They were without natural affection. This appeared by sacrificing their children to their idols; and exposing themselves and their dearest relations to ruin. No sooner did we fall out with God, but we fell out with ourselves and one another.

32 Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.

The apostle here closes the chapter with the blackest character that could be given of the Gentiles' sin, namely, that although by the light of nature, and the dictates of natural conscience, they knew that their adulteries and unnatural lusts did deserve death, and expose them to the wrath of God, yet they not only committed those sins themselves, but took a real pleasure and delight in those that committed them. Now this was the top and height of their wickedness. It is a greater wickedness to approve and applaud sin, than it is to act and commit sin; to delight in sin, is worse than to do sin. A man may fall into sin by the policy of the tempter, and the prevalency of temptation, but by consideration may be brought to a sense of his folly, and repent of it: but when he is arrived to such a pitch of wickedness, that he not only approves and applauds, but takes pleasure and delight in the wickedness of others; this demonstrates such a strong affection to sin, as brings a man nearest to the devil in sinning. Learn hence, 1. That there is in God an avenging justice, engaging him to punish sin with the eternal death of the sinner. 2. That there is that evil and malignity in sin, which deserves the judgment and sentence of eternal death. 3. That this desert of sin, as also the vengeance of God upon the sinner, is sufficiently made known to all men; to some by the light of nature, to others by the superadded light of scripture. 4. That notwithstanding this discovery of sin's desert of divine wrath, yet multitudes of sinners every where do not only commit wickedness themselves, but delight in it, and in them that do it, which lays them under an aggravated guilt, and will both heighten and hasten their condemnation; "who knowing the judgment of God, that they who do such things, are worthy of death, not only do the same, but take pleasure in them that do them."

CHAPTER II.

The apostle having in the first chapter discovered at large the rueful state of the Gentiles by nature, and their worse condition by reason of sin, in rebelling against the light and law of nature; in this second chapter, he comes to speak of the Jews, and lays them as low as he did the Gentiles, upon design to convince both of the utter impossibility of being justified before God by any righteousness of their own, but only by faith in Jesus Christ.

THEREFORE thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest, doest the same things.

Lest the Jews should swell and be puffed up with pride, by hearing what the apostle said in the former chapter, of the detestable wickedness of the Gentiles, and the heavy displeasure of God against them for the same; St. Paul in this chapter pronounces the Jews to be guilty of the same sins of which he had accused the Gentiles, affirming, that the Jews had offended as much against the law of Moses, as the Gentiles had offended against the law of nature; and consequently, their censuring and judging others, when they did the same things themselves, would render them totally inexcusable at God's tribunal. "Therefore thou art inexcusable sable, O man, that judgest another, and by doing the same things condemnest thyself." Learn hence, 1. That it is too usual and common a practice to condemn that sin in another which men practise themselves. 2. That when persons commit themselves the sins which they censure and condemn in others, they are totally inexcusable, and pronounce sentence against themselves.

2 But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth, against them which commit such things.

3 And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?

As if the apostle had said, we that are Jews know, by the light of the scripture, what the Gentiles knew imperfectly by the light of nature, that the just God judges uprightly, according to truth, and not according to appearance. It is equitable that he should, and certain that he will, deal with men according to his word, and reward every man according to his work. Think not then, O Jew! who judgest the Gentiles for doing such things against the law of Moses, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God, which they have so severely felt. Learn hence, that such is God's hatred against sin, and such is the impartiality of his justice towards sinners, that no offenders can expect escaping the judgment of God for presumptuous sinning. "Thinkest thou, O man, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?" No affection, or nearness of relation, can blind God, or put out the eye of his justice. If Gentile or Jew sin together, they shall suffer together; for there is no respect of persons with God: God will judge men in truth and righteousness, and condemn every sinner, whatever his knowledge or profession be. Learn, 2. That no man's zeal in condemning sin in others, will justify or save him, if he lives in sin himself: "Think not, O man, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God."

4 Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

5 But after thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto thyself, wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

Observe here, 1. The indulgent carriage of Almighty God towards poor sinners, discovered in the vast expence of the riches of his goodness and bounty upon them, and in the patient exercise of his forbearance and long-suffering towards them. Observe, 2. The gracious end and design of God in his expence of his goodness, and in the exercise of his patience and forbearance: namely, to lead sinners to repentance. The end of goodness is to oblige and engage persons to love and serve their benefactors; this is the most natural and constrained consequence that the mind of man can infer from God's bounty and sparing mercy: the goodness of God leadeth to repentance. Observe, 3. The unanswerable and undue returns, which sinners make to God for the exercise of so much goodness and forbearance towards them: "they despise the riches of his goodness and long-suffering." They despise it by being unthankful for it, by not improving it, and by misimproving or sinning against it: they melt the mercies of God into bullets, and shoot them at the breast of the Almighty. Observe, 4. The sad and fatal consequence of these undue returns made to God by sinners: hereby they treasure up wrath against the day of wrath. As if the apostle had said, "the more patience God expends upon thee, if perverted and abused by thee, the greater wrath is treasured up for thee; which the longer it has been treasured up, will break forth the more fiercely and violently to consume thee." Observe 5. The description given by the apostle of the day of judgment; he calls it, "A revelation of the righteous judgment of God." The judgment of God is righteous now; but it is not always revealed and openly made manifest now: therefore a time shall come, when there shall be a revelation of his righteous judgment fully. From the whole note, 1. That the goodness of God is a natural and genuine motive to repentance. 2. That not to be persuaded by, is in God's account to despise his goodness. Note, 3. That this despising of goodness, by delaying our repentance, is a treasuring up of wrath against the day of wrath; as sinners have treasures of sin, so God has treasures of wrath for sinners. Note, lastly, that the day of judgment will be a day of revelation, a day in which the righteousness of God's proceedings shall be universally manifested and magnified; then will all the divine attributes be conspicuously glorified: his wonderful clemency sweetly displayed: his exact justice terribly demonstrated; his perfect wisdom clearly unfolded; all the knotty intrigues of providence wisely resolved; all the mysterious depths of divine counsels fully discovered, and the injured honor and glory of Almighty God visibly cleared and repaired, to the joyful satisfaction of all good men, and to the dreadful consternation and confusion of the wicked and impenitent world: O how well might the apostle call this day, "the revelation of the righteous judgment of God!"

6 Who will render to every man according to his deeds:

7 To them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life;

8 But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness; indignation and wrath:

9 Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also the Gentile;

10 But glory, honor and peace, to every man that worketh good: to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile.

11 For there is no respect of persons with God.

The apostle in the foregoing verse had given a description of the general day of judgment, which he called, "A revelation of the righteous judgment of God." Here he acquaints us with the impartiality and uprightness of God in the distribution of rewards and punishments in that day, according to the merits and deserts of men: "who will render to every one according to his deeds; that is, according to the kind and quality, and according to the measures and degrees of every man's works. Where note, he doth not say, God will render to every man a reward for his works, but according to his works? Works are regula retributionis, non causa mercedis: "Our works are the rule of God's proceedings, but not the cause of his rewards."—Having thus described the impartiality of the Judge, he next declares the universality of the persons that shall then be judged; namely, the righteous and the wicked, which shall both have their distinct rewards assigned them, according to the quality of their works. Observe, 1. The righteous persons described, and their reward declared; they are described by their well-doing, by their continuance in well-doing, by their patient continuance in well-doing: they are not weary in well-doing, they can undergo sufferings for the sake of well-doing, and they can patiently wait for the reward of well-doing till hereafter, whilst others snatch at their reward here: yet in the mean time they are seeking after, and securing of this their reward: they seek for glory, honor, and immortality; that is, they seek for a portion of glory and immortality in the world to come: they leave the world to the men of the world, and whilst they are scrambling for earth, they are making sure of heaven. Next, their persons being described, their reward is declared, eternal life; an eternity of glory and happiness in a future state, shall certainly be the reward of well doers, and of patient continuers in well-doing. Observe, 2. The wicked are here characterized, and their reward assigned: "They are contentious, and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness;" that is, they contend with God, and resist the light of his revealed truth; they refuse the offers of his grace, and kick against his word, disobeying the gospel of truth, but obeying unrighteousness. God will pour forth upon such indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish. Lord, who knoweth the power of thine anger, or who can bear the weight of thy wrath! It broke the back of angels, how shall sinners stand under it? It is styled fire in the scripture, it is a consuming fire, and an unquenchable fire: it preys upon the sinner, but never devours him: it is unquenchable by any thing, but the blood of Christ. A mysterious fire, whose strange property it is always to torment, but never to kill; or always to kill, but never to consume. Observe, 3. With what equity, as well as impartiality, this distribution of God's indignation and wrath will be made: "upon every soul that doeth evil; but upon the Jew first, and then of the Gentile." The Jew first, that is, principally and especially; because the light and mercy which the Jews abused and sinned against, was far greater than that bestowed upon the Gentiles. Learn hence, That the light under which men sin, puts extraordinary aggravations upon their sins, answerable whereunto will be the degrees of their punishment. Then Gentiles will be condemned for disobeying the light of nature, the law of God written on their hearts; but much greater wrath is reserved for the Jews, unto whom were committed the oracles of God; but the greatest of all is reserved for Christians, who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; these shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe, 2 Thes. i. 9, 10.

12 For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law.

That is, as many as have sinned without the written law, which is the case of the Gentiles or heathens, shall also perish without that law, being judged and condemned by the law of nature written in their hearts; but as many as have sinned in, or under the law of Moses, which is the case of the Jews, shall be judged and condemned by that law. Observe here, 1. A truth plainly implied, and necessarily supposed; namely, that as some sinners perish, having the written word, and all external means of salvation; so others perish, having not the written word or law of God, and the outward and ordinary means of salvation: "as many as have sinned without the law, shall perish without the law." God, in the dispensations of his grace, acteth in a way of sovereignty, according to his own pleasure; yet in his penal dispensations, he proceeds according to the measures of strict justice, upon the previous demerits of sinners. Observe, 2. That all men shall not be proceeded against in the day of judgment after one and the same manner; but every man according to the demerit of his sin, according to the capacity and relation in which he stood in this life. The Gentiles which had only the law et nature, shall not be judged by the law of Moses; the Jews, which have both the law of nature, and the law of Moses, shall be judged by both: and consequently, christians, which have the law of nature unwritten, the Mosaic law written, and the Evangelical law, both written and preached, shall lie under greater guilt, and receive a more aggravating condemnation. Christ will exactly proportion every man's hell hereafter to his sin committed here; the greater light we have quenched, the greater darkness will be inflicted, Heb. ii. 3. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"—

13 (For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.

That is, not the bare hearers of the law shall, upon that account be just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified; that is, accepted of God, as acting suitably to their holy profession. It is notoriously known, the Jews gloried in, and rested upon their outward privileges for salvation, because they were Abraham's seed, because they were circumcised, because they were employed in reading and hearing of the law; they concluded this sufficient to render them acceptable with God; therefore, says the apostle, not the hearers, but doers of the law shall be justified; that is, the persons whom God will accept and account righteous for the sake of Christ. Note here, that the doers of the law or word of God, are the best hearers, yea, the only hearers in the account of God. Hearing is good, but, it must not be rested in; a great understanding may a man have by much reading the word and law of God; but a good understanding only have they that do the word and will of God: the praise and fruit of that endureth for ever. Psal. cxi. 10.

14 For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves:

15 Which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excusing one another.)

The sense is, that the Gentiles, which have not the law of Moses promulged, are yet not without a law ingrafted in their consciences; and although they have not a written law; yet are they a law, that is, a rule of living to themselves; doing those things which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their consciences bearing witness to it, and their natural reason either accusing or defending of them from it. Learn, 1. That there is a law of nature ingrafted and written by God in the hearts of men, whereby the common notions of good and evil are found with them. Learn, 2. That this law of nature serveth for the instigation and provocation of men to many good actions and duties towards God and man. 3. That to rebel against, and not walk in conformity unto this ingrafted law of nature, is a God-provoking and wrath-procurring sin. 4. That although many of the Gentiles gave themselves over to all manner of uncleanness, yet others "showed the works of the law written in their hearts:" they showed it two ways. 1. By their temperance, righteousness, and moral honesty: wherein (to our shame) they excelled many of us who are called christians. 2. In the efficacy of their conscience; which, as it cleared and comforted them for things well done, so it witnessed against them, yea judged and condemned them for doing evil: and these evidences of a law written on the heart, are every where to be found, wherever men are found: "the Gentiles having not a written law, are a law unto themselves, and show the work of the law written in their hearts."

16 In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel.

As if the apostle had said, if any shall ask, when shall rewards and punishments be distributed to Jew or Gentile? The answer is, "in that day when God shall judge the secrets of men's hearts by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel:" that is, as my gospel testifies, he will most certainly do. Here observe, 1. A fundamental doctrine asserted, that there will be a day of judgment, in which the secrets of all men's hearts shall be judged by Jesus Christ, as Mediator. All the thoughts, words, and works of men, that lived from the beginning of the world, or shall live to the end of the world, will then be produced in judgment; and if so, may we not infer, that the day of judgment must certainly and necessarily take up a vast space of time? For if all records and registers now made shall then be opened and read, and all the witnesses for and against man, shall be then examined and heard, what a vast space of time then must that great day take up! Some divines are of opinion, that the day of judgment may last as long as the world hath lasted: this we may depend upon, that thing will not be huddled up, nor shuffled over in haste: but as sinners have taken their time for sinning, so God will take his time for judging. Observe, 2. The proof and confirmation of this doctrine of a future judgment. According to my gospel; that is, as certainly as I have foretold you of it in the doctrine which I have preached, so certainly shall all men, and the secrets of all men's hearts, be judged by Jesus Christ. But was it not a presumption in St. Paul, to call the gospel his gospel? Answer, he means that he was the publisher, not the author of it; it was God's in respect to authority, St. Paul's in respect of ministry: it was God's in respect of revelation; his only in respect of dispensation.

17 Behold, thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God:

18 And knowest his will, and approv'st the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law.

19 And art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness, 20 An instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge, and of the truth in the law.

Here the apostle proceeds in his former argument; namely, to prove, that the Jews could no more rationally expect to be justified before God by the law of Moses, than the Gentiles by the law of nature; the apostle allows them all the privileges which they so much doated upon, boasted of, and gloried in; but withal assures them, that these, all these, yea, more than these, were insufficient to justify them before God: As if the people had said, "thou bearest thyself mightily upon this, that thou art called a Jew; that is, a professor of the true religion, and a worshipper of the true God: thou retest in the law: that is, either in the divineness and perfection of it, or in thy external obedience to it, and in the outward performances of it: thou makest thy boast of God, as a God in covenant with thee above all the nations of the earth: and thou knowest his will, having his word and law in thy hands, the oracles of God committed to thee, and the writings of Moses and the prophets alone found with thee, and approv'st things that are most excellent, being instructed out of the law; that is, thou thinkest that thou hast such a degree of knowledge of God's word and will, that thou canst clearly discern between sin and duty, and compare one duty with another, preferring that which is most excellent "And art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them that are in darkness;" that is, thou hast a strong conceit that such are the measures of thy knowledge, that thou art able to be a guide to the blind Gentiles, who sit in darkness, and to be a teacher of babes, that is, such as have little or no knowledge in the matters of religion, conceiting, "that thou hast the form and knowledge of the truth in the law;" that is, such a method and measure of divine knowledge, as may enable thee to instruct others, whether Gentiles or Jews, which never reached to thy attainments." These external privileges the presumptuous Jew rested upon, and thought them sufficient to salvation, though he lived loosely, and his practice gave his profession the lie. Hence learn, 1. That persons are exceeding prone to be proud of, and puffed up with, church-privileges, glorying in the letter of the law, whilst neither in heart nor life, they are conformed to the spirituality of the law. Learn, 2. That gifts, duties, and supposed graces, are the stay and staff which hypocrites rest upon, and repose their trust and confidence in: "thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law; that is, in the outward profession of the law, or in an external obedience to the law; the apostle speaks of this thou resting in the law, not barely by way of narration, but by way of reproof, telling us not only what they did, but how ill they did in so doing. The duties which Christ has appointed, are the trust and rest of the hypocrites; but Christ himself is the rest and trust of the upright; they desire to be ever acting graces, never trusting to them; to be much in duty, and yet much above duty; much in it in point of performance, much above it in regard of dependance.

21 Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?

22 Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?

23 Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonorest thou God?

24 For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles, through you, as it is written.

The apostle proceeds, to the end of this chapter, to convince the Jews, that they were equally in a sinful and wretched condition with the despised Gentiles, and therefore stood in need of Jesus Christ to justify them by his grace, as well as they: and because the Jews were so exceeding apt to dote upon, and rest in their external privileges, he did in the foregoing verses, recount and reckon up the several privileges which they enjoyed: "thou art called a Jew, thou makest thy boast of God," &c. But now in the verses before us, he takes occasion to aggravate their sins committed, from their high privileges and prerogatives enjoyed, because they sinned against light and knowledge, against the convictions of their own consciences, and contradicted the dictates of their minds, as the Gentiles did: but besides all that, rebelled against the precepts of the written word, which was all in their hands. The law of Moses was near in their mouths, but far from their reins; for thus the apostle expostulates the case with them, thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that undertakest to be a teacher of, and a guide unto the ignorant and blind Gentiles, wilt thou not practise thine own instructions; but condemn thyself out of thine own mouth? "Wilt thou, O Jew! (as if the apostle had said) be guilty of theft, adultery, sacrilege, rapine and murder, sins which the very heathens condemn, and all this while, call yourselves the only people of God? Verily, the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you Jews, who pretend to be the favorites of heaven, whilst you do the works of hell."

Learn hence, 1. That it is much easier to instruct and teach others, than to be instructed and receive instruction ourselves. Learn, 2. That it is both sinful and shameful to teach others the right way and to go in the wrong ourselves. It is a double fault in a private person, when his actions run cross to his profession; but it is an inexcusable, if not an unpardonable fault in the teacher, when the crimes which he condemns in others, may be justly charged upon himself: thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Learn, 3. That the name of God suffers much, very much; yea, by none so much as those who preach and press the duties of christianity upon others, but practise them not themselves. The name of the Lord is blasphemed by such preachers, the wicked profane world taking occasion from thence to wound the name of God with the poisoned arrows and darts of reproach. The sins of teachers are teaching sins. True sin, strictly speaking, cannot injure the name and glory of God: he is above the reach of any mischief that sin can do him: his essential glory is perfect, and can neither be increased nor diminished by the creatures: God can no more be hurt by our sins, than the sun can be hurt by throwing stones into the air, or the moon hurt by the barking of dogs. But his manifestive glory, or the present manifestations of his glory, these are clouded and eclipsed by sin; and therefore God will deal with knowing sinners, especially with such as undertake to be teachers of others, as with those that have blasphemed his name, wounded his glory; trampled upon his honor, and caused his holy ways to be evil spoken of by reason of their wicked and unholy lives. Lord, let all that administer unto thee in holy things consider that they have not only their own sins to account for, but also the sins of their people; if committed by their profligate example.

25 For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision.

26 Therefore, if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?

27 And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

It is sufficiently known what great stress the Jews laid upon circumcision; they taught, that this alone was enough to procure the favor of God, and to free them from hell: "God having, as they said, promised Abraham, that if his children transgressed, he would remember the odor of the foreskins, and deliver them for the merit of circumcision." But all this was a false and vainglorious bustle. Our apostle, therefore, in the words before us, assures the Jews, that circumcision without holiness of conversation, would never free them from condemnation: that a circumcised Jew, who walks not in obedience to the law of God, is in as bad, or worse condition, than any uncircumcised heathens, yea, the uncircumcision, that is, the uncircumcised person that keeps the law shall be accepted of God, as well as if he had been circumcised; and be preferred by God before the circumcised Jews that transgress the law. The sum is, that the obedient Gentile shall condemn the disobedient Jew, and be sooner accepted by God, with whom there is no respect of persons, but, with respect to their qualifications: that no church-privileges, no external prerogatives, nor the highest profession of piety and holiness, without an humble, uniform and sincere obedience, will be any thing available to salvation. And as, then, an uncircumcised Gentile found better acceptance with God than many circumcised Jews; even so, an unbaptized heathen, at the great day, will not change place with many baptized christians. It is a sad, but a certain truth, that the case of the Pagan world will be much easier in the day of judgment, than others that live and die disobedient under the gospel of Jesus Christ. The heathens have abused but one talent, the light of nature: but we thousands, even as many thousands as we have slighted the tenders of offered grace. Lord, what a fearful aggravation doth it put upon our sin and misery, when we fall from the height of mercy into the depth of misery? We must certainly be accountable to thee at the great day, not only for all the light we had, but for all that we might have had in the gospel-day; and especially for that light we have sinned under, and rebelled against.

28 For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh:

29 But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God.

Here our apostle comes close and home to the self-confident Jews, and touches them in the most sensible part. It was the hardest saying that could sound in a Jewish ear, to affirm, that circumcision which is outward in the flesh, profiteth nothing: for they so gloried in it, that they accounted it equal to the keeping of all the commandments of God: now our apostle here takes away the very foundation of this their boasting and glorying, by a plain and true distinction. There is, saith he, a Jew outwardly, that only has the Judge of circumcision in his flesh. Now he is not a Jew in God's account, who is only so by outward circumcision: neither is that circumcision valuable or available, which is only outward in the flesh; but then there is a Jew, who is one inwardly; namely, by the purification of his heart from all filthy lusts, evil affections, and sinful dispositions, and a circumcision of the heart, and in the spirit; that is, a circumcision wrought in us by the spirit of God, and not barely by the letter of the law: and the praise of this is not of men, who cannot discern the heart, but of God, who is the searcher of the heart, and trier of the reins. Learn hence, That although we are very prone to rest upon church-privileges and external performances, as evidences of divine favor, yet they are no testimonies nor signs of the truth of grace. What circumcision, sacrifices, and the temple were to the Jews of old, the same are baptism, the Lord's supper, and public assemblies to professing christians at this day. And as the Jews rested in these externals, without eyeing Christ in them, without desiring to drive holiness and sanctification from them: in like manner, multitudes of professors set up their rest in outward duties, and repose a fleshly carnal confidence in ordinances, without either desiring of, or endeavouring after, any lively communion with Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, in the exercise of faith and love, without any regard to spiritual warmth in religious duties, and being by ordinances rendered more like to the God of the ordinances, which are the most desirable things, next to heaven itself. So that I shall conclude the chapter with the same application to christians now, as the apostle did to the Jews then: circumcision saith the apostle, verily profiteth, if thou keep the law; but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision: for he is not a Jew, &c. In like manner, say I, "baptism verily profiteth, if we perform the conditions of that covenant, which we entered into by baptism; but if we do not, our baptism is no baptism: for he is not a christian, who is one outwardly; nor is that baptism, which is outward in the flesh; but he is a christian, which is one inwardly, and baptism is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in water only; and such shall have praise, if not of men, yet of God."

CHAPTER III.

Our apostle in this chapter proceeds in his grand design and purpose in writing this epistle; namely, to prove all persons, both Jews and Gentiles, to be under sin, and consequently under an impossibility of being justified by works, but only by faith in Christ Jesus. In the former part of the chapter, he answers the objections of the Jews against what he had asserted in the foregoing chapter, and the first objection runs thus;

WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?

2 Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

The sense is this: but you of the Jews will object and say, "If outward circumcision avails nothing, but the inward circumcision is all in all; and if the uncircumcised person, keeping the law, is to be reckoned as circumcised, what advantage then hath the Jew above the Gentile, or what profit is there of the circumcision above uncircumcision?" He answers it, verse 2, saying, the advantage is much every way: but chiefly because unto them were committed the oracles of God; that is, the holy scriptures contained in the Old Testament, the sacraments and seals of the covenant, the prophecies and promises of the Messiah, and the whole revelation of the word and will of God, were then found with them, and in their hands only. Hence learn, 1. Great is that people's privilege and mercy, who enjoy the word of God, the audible word in the holy scriptures, the visible word in the holy sacraments. This enlighteneth the eyes, rejoiceth the heart, quickeneth the soul. This is compared to gold for profit, to honey for sweetness, to milk for nourishing, to food for strengthening. O how many souls are blessing God eternally for the benefit and blessing of divine revelation! The Jews had this special favor, to them were committed the Oracles of God: that is, the writings of Moses and the prophets. But we Christians have a privilege beyond them, the doctrine of Jesus delivered to us by evangelists and apostles; not like the killing letter of the law, but a gospel, bringing life and immortality to light. Observe, 2. The title which St. Paul gives to the holy scriptures; he calls them the oracles of God. St. Stephen calls them, the lively oracles. Acts vii. 38. partly because delivered by a lively voice from God, partly because they should be to us as oracles: that is, consulted with upon all occasions, for resolving all doubts, determining all controversies. Had the church of Rome consulted these oracles more, and councils, &c. less, she had kept the doctrine of faith much freer from corruption than she has done. Observe, lastly, that the original word, here rendered oracles, is the same which profane wretches made use of for the dark and doubtful oracles of the devil: nevertheless, the Holy Ghost doth not disdain, nor decline, to make use of this word, as he also doth several others, though abused to heathenish superstition; which may serve to rectify their mistake, who scruple to make use of words, much more of some things which have been abused to superstition. Verily, there may be superstition in avoiding superstition; and though we cannot be too circumspect in our words and actions, yet we may be too nice and precise in both. Yet note, that though the same word, Λογια, signifies God's oracles and satan's, yet these oracles were not delivered in the same manner: satan delivered his oracles ambiguously and doubtfully, keeping his dark and blind votaries as much as might be in the dark; what he said might bear several constructions, that so, whatever the event or issue prove to be, he, the father of lies, might have the reputation of speaking truth: but God's oracles are plain and clear, free from ambiguity and darkness; the scriptures are not dark, though some places are difficult, and that proceeds from the sublimity of the matter, not from the intention of the writer.

3 For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, that thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

Here follows a second objection: some might say, "true, the Jews had the oracles of God, but some of them never believed them, nor gave any credit to the promise of the Messiah contained in them; therefore, they had no advantage by them." Be it so, saith the apostle: yet shall the unbelief of some make the faith or fidelity of God in his promises, of no effect to others? God forbid! that such a thought should enter into our hearts: but on the contrary, let God be acknowledged true and faithful to his word, though all men should prove liars. Learn thence, 1. That man's infidelity cannot shake the stability of God's word, whether we believe the fidelity of the promises, or assent to the veracity of God in his threatenings, or not; his word standeth fast for ever. The promise shall be fulfilled, the threatening executed: only with this difference, we cannot personally find the comfort of the promise without faith, but we shall experimentally feel the terror of the threatening, whether we believe it or no. Learn, 2. The wonderful condescending grace of God towards those who have any measures of true faith, though with great mixtures of unbelief. Oh how faithful is God to us (if in truth believers) in the midst of our unfaithfulness to him! the unbelief of men shall not make the fidelity or faith of God of no effect. Learn, 3. That as God is a God of truth, so all men are false and liars, compared with God: as God cannot lie, neither deceive, nor be deceived, so every man is fallible and false: that is, under a possibility of deceiving, and being deceived. Let God be true, but every man a liar. Learn, 4. That a good man under afflictions, is very careful to justify and clear God from dealing unjustly with him in any of his severest dispensations towards him. The apostle here quotes Psal. li, 4. That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and clear when thou art judged. As if David had said, "I know the men of the world, when they see me afflicted, will be ready to judge hardly of God for it; therefore, to stop their mouths, to clear the justice of God, that he may overcome, when he is judged for dealing rigorously with me, I do freely confess my sin unto him with all the aggravating circumstances of it, that all the world may justify him, how great soever my sufferings may be from him." A child of God, under the rod of God, desires nothing more than to justify him in all his severest dealings with, and dispensations towards him.

5 But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man.)

6 God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world?

A third objection here followeth, namely, "that if the unrighteousness of men, that is, both of Jews and Gentiles, tends so visibly to commend, that is, to illustrate and recommend the righteousness of God, namely, his wisdom, grace, and favour, in appointing this way of justification by faith in Christ; how can it be right in God to punish them for this unrighteousness, which tends so highly, to illustrate the glory of his gospel-grace?" The apostle tells us, that in making this objection, he spake as a man; that is, as natural and carnal men are ready to think and speak: but, says he, God forbid that we should entertain such a thought, as if God either were, or could be unrighteous; for then how shall God judge the world, for their unrighteousness? Learn hence, 1. That although the unrighteousness and wickedness of men be overruled by God, to subserve the purposes of his glory; yet is God just in punishing all unrighteousness and wickedness whatsoever. God is never intentionally, but is sometimes accidentally glorified by the sin of man. There never was such an hellish wickedness committed, as crucifying Christ; nothing, by which God ever reaped greater glory, than by the death of his Son: yet is the wrath of God come upon the Jews to the uttermost, and that most justly, for their committing of that wickedness. Learn, 2. That the righteous God neither doth, nor can do any iniquity or unrighteousness whatsoever; is God unrighteous? How then shall God judge the world? God is judge of all the world, and cannot but do right; because the universality of his power puts him above all possibility of error in the exercise of his power. The very reason why God cannot exercise his power beyond the limits of justice, is because his power is altogether unlimited; he can do whatsoever he will do; and whatsoever he will do, is for that reason just; shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?

8 And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.

We must by no means understand these words as spoken by the apostle himself in his own name, as if he had told lies for upholding of the truth; and that the truth of God had abounded to the glory of God through his lies; but he speaks in the person of a profane objector. Thus some man (as if the apostle had said) may possibly plead for his sin: "the truth of God hath gained by my lie, the faithfulness of God is made more manifest by the unfaithfulness of men: therefore, why should I be judged and condemned as a sinner, when the glory of God will shine more bright upon the occasion of my sin? The free grace of God discovered in the gospel, will be manifested, say some, and magnified in the pardoning of our sin; let us, therefore, sin our fill, that the immeasurableness of divine goodness may appear, and the abundance of pardoning mercy may abound." The apostle rejects this doctrine and practice, of doing evil that good may come, with the greatest abhorrency and utmost detestation, affirming, that their damnation is just, who either fasten this doctrine upon the apostles, or affirm it themselves. Learn hence, That no person must venture to do the least of evils: no, not for the sake of the greatest good. True, Almighty God can bring good out of evil, by the same word of his power, by which he brought light out of darkness, and something out of nothing: but to do any thing really evil for obtaining the greatest good, is dangerous and damnable. Sin, or that which is sinful, ought not to be chosen, whatever we choose. Learn, 2; That nothing is more just and righteous than their damnation, who will adventure to do evil, that good may come: a good intention will not excuse, never justify a bad action in the sight of God: he will condemn evil-doers, though they do evil, that good may come. Learn, 3. That the apostle pronounces their damnation just, who laid these slanders to the apostles' charge, as if their doctrine did allow of this damnable practice, to do evil that good might come, "their damnation is just, who thus slanderously report and affirm, that we say, let us do evil, that good may come." Whence note, that it is a just thing with God to damn those men that raise or spread abroad reports of his ministers' doctrine, as giving liberty to licentious practices: verily, the slander of a minister's regular doctrine is more than ordinary slander. The original word here rendered slander, signifies blasphemy; the word which God makes use of to set forth his own reproaches by. Behold God's resentment of his ministers' wrongs. The slander and contempt cast upon our office and doctrine, is esteemed blasphemy in God's account: "as we be slanderously reported or blasphemed; and as some affirm that we say, let us do evil, that good may come; whose damnation is just."

9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin;

Here the apostle starts another objection in the name of the Jews: some of them might say, "are we not better than the Gentiles? do we not excel them in outward privileges? Is not the knowledge of the law found with us, and the oracles of God committed to us?" True, says the apostle, the Jews are better than the Gentiles in respect of outward dispensations, but not in respect of inward qualifications. Jews and Gentiles are alike by natural corruption; alike under sin by actual transgression, and so stand in need both alike of justification by faith; and the gospel-righteousness is no less necessary for the one, than for the other. To prove what he had said, namely, that the whole race of mankind, both Jew and Gentile, were under sin, and void of all true righteousness and goodness, and consequently standing in need equally of justification by Christ; the apostle produces several texts out of the Old Testament, and particularly out of the xivth Psalm, which speaks fully of the original corruption, and universal depravation of all mankind, in the following words:

10 As it is written, there is none righteous, no, not one:

11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

13 Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips;

14 Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness:

15 Their feet are swift to shed blood:

16 Destruction and misery are in their ways:

17 And the way of peace have they not known;

18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.

Observe here, how the apostle proves his assertion; namely, that both Jew and Gentile were under the guilt both of original and actual transgression, from the testimony of David, Psal. xiv. where the state of corrupt nature is described, and the natural condition of all men declared, till they are either restrained or renewed by the grace of God: there is none righteous, no not one. Which words are true in several respects: 1. There is none originally righteous, no not one; none righteous in their first plantation in the world, until they are transplanted into the body of Christ, wrought and fashioned by his Holy Spirit. 2. There is none efficiently righteous, no not one; none have a righteousness of their own making, but of God's. The righteousness of justification and sanctification both are from Christ, not from ourselves; we are his workmanship, not our own. 3. There is none meritoriously righteous, no not one; none that can deserve or demand any thing as a due debt at God's hand; but the most rigorous and holy saints are but unprofitable servants. 4. There is none perfectly and completely righteous, no not one; but inchoatively only; none righteous in a strict and legal sense, but in a gospel and qualified sense only; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, in the account of God; and, as such, shall be accepted and rewarded by him. Observe, 2. How the apostle proves the corruption of mankind in general, by an induction of particulars. He surveys him in all the principal faculties of his soul, and members of his body; his understanding, will, and affections; his eye, hand, tongue, and feet all corrupted and depraved; their mouth is full of cursing, and bitter speeches: their heart an open sepulchre, gaping after, and devouring the good name of their neighbours, and belching out filthy, ill-scented, and unsavory words against them. "They seek not God in any thing they do, and there is no fear of God, no respect of God before their eyes." The apostle shuts up all with this; because want of the fear of God before our eyes, is the fountain from which all other evils do proceed and flow. The fear of God is the bridle and curb that restrains from sin; where that is wanting, all iniquity abounds; where that is present and prevalent, it keeps the soul close to God, Jer. xxxii. 32. "I will put my fear in their hearts, and they shall not depart from me." We usually depart far, yea, run fast from those we fear; but the true fear of God will make us cleave close unto him, because love is intermixed with it, and renders it a delightful fear.

19 Now, we know, that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.

Observe here, Lest the Jews should think to elude or evade the force of the foregoing testimonies concerning man's corruption and depravation, as not belonging to them, but to the Gentiles only; he tells them, that what the law, that is, the books of the Old Testament, do thus say, it says to those that are under the law; that is, to those that are subjects of it, and obliged by it; to such as are under the instruction and direction of it, as the Jews are known to be; and if so, then every mouth must be stopped; Jew and Gentile both must own themselves before God, obnoxious to his wrath, without being able to say any thing for themselves. Learn hence, that the holy law of God brings such plain evidence and conviction with it, that no man can have a word to speak against it: when God spreads before men the purity of his laws, and impiety of their own lives, every man must sit down silent, and lay his hand upon his mouth, not having one word to object why sentence should not be executed, because they have all transgressed.

20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.

Here we have St Paul's conclusion drawn from all the foregoing premises: "seeing all mankind, since the fall, are disabled, by their innate corruption, and actual transgression, to so fit the law, either natural or written; it must necessarily follow, that by the works of the law can no flesh, that is, no person, either Jew or Gentile, be justified before God; all the efficacy which the law has, being to discover sin, and condemn for sinning: by the law is the knowledge of sin. By the law we apprehend our malady, but by the gospel, we understand our remedy." Learn hence, That no son of Adam, since the breach of the law, can stand justified before God by his best obedience to the commands of the law: by being justified, understand that gracious act in God, whereby we are acquitted, and finally discharged from the guilt and punishment of all our sins. By the law here, and by the deeds of the law, we are to understand ceremonial and moral law both, especially the latter; for by the moral law, is the knowledge of sin: it is the moral law that forbids theft, adultery, &c. Besides, it is evident that the antithesis, or opposition, runs all along, not between ceremonial works and moral works, but between works in general, and faith: the law of works, and the law of faith are opposed to each other, ver. 27. But why can no flesh, that is, no person, be justified by the deeds of the law? Answ. 1. Because he is flesh, that is, depraved by original corruption, and obnoxious to the curse of the law, by actual transgression. Now, that which condemns, cannot justify: an after-obedience to the law, can never atone for a former disobedience. 2. Because the best obedience we can perform to the law, is imperfect. Now, he that mixes but one sin with a thousand good works, can never be justified by his works. He that would be justified by his works, must not have one bad work amongst all his works; for that one will lay him under the curse and condemnatory sentence of the law, Gal. iii. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them. Nothing that is imperfect can be a ground of justification before God, because the design of God, is to exalt his justice, as well as his mercy, in the justification of a sinner. Again, 3. No flesh can be justified by the works of the law, because all that we do, or can do, is a due debt which we owe to the law: we owe all possible obedience to the law as creatures; and by performing our obligations as creatures, we can never pay our debts as transgressors. But now, our surety, Christ Jesus, who has given satisfaction for our violation of the law, was under no obligation to the law, but what he voluntarily laid himself under upon our account. And if so, let us eternally bless God with the highest elevation of soul for the gospel-revelation, by sending his own Son to justify and save us, by working out a complete and everlasting righteousness for us: and let us plead with him incessantly for the grace of justifying faith, which is as necessary in its place as the death of Christ. One renders God reconcileable unto poor sinners, the other actually reconciled.

21 But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets;

22 Even the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference;

23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God:

Our apostle having proved negatively, that by the works of the law righteousness and justification is not to be had for any person, be he Jew or Gentile; he comes now to prove the affirmative part of his assertion; namely, that God hath manifested another way of justification in the gospel, to wit, by faith in Jesus Christ. "For saith he, now, that is, since the coming of Christ, since the dispensation of the gospel: the righteousness of God, that is, the righteousness which God appoints, approves, and accepts for a sinner's justification, is without the law, that is, without performing the works of the law, either natural, ceremonial, or moral; and is manifested to be the righteousness which is by faith in Christ; which all that believe and obey the gospel, shall be admitted to the participation of, both Jew and Gentile; for there is no difference; that is, no difference between Jew and Gentile, as to the way and means of their justification." And the reason assigned by the apostle, why there is, and can be, no other way of justification but this, we have in the next verse, namely, because all have sinned, the whole race of mankind, not one mere man excepted; and so will fall short of obtaining the glory of God and eternal life, if they seek it not in this way. Learn hence, 1. That there is no standing or appearing before God for any creature, in a creature's righteousness. There is much unrighteousness in our righteousness, and therefore we cannot stand justified before God in it. Besides, the wisdom of God has appointed another righteousness, or the righteousness of another, even the righteousness of Jesus Christ, to stand before him in: but now the righteousness of God is manifested, even the righteousness of God which is by faith in Jesus Christ. Learn, 2. The necessity and excellency of faith; the righteousness of God is unto all, and upon all that believe: faith is the bond of union, the instrument of our justification, the spring of our consolation, being justified by faith, we have peace with God, Rom. v. 1.

Render we then unto faith the things which are faith's, as well as unto Christ the things that are Christ's. Learn, 3. That, in reference to, or in respect of, our justification before God, there is no difference among believers, ver. 22. For there is no difference; that is, no difference as to the way of justification, between Jew and Gentile, male and female, bond and free; but all, without the righteousness of faith in Christ, must die, and be damned to all eternity. There is now a difference amongst believers, with respect to the degrees of sanctification, and with respect to their measures of consolation, and will be hereafter, with respect to the degrees of glorification. Some saints have more grace and comfort on earth, and shall have higher degrees of glory in heaven, than others; but the justification of all believers is alike. There is the same sin in all, not for measure and degree, but in respect of guilt and obligation to punishment: there is the same price paid, by way of satisfaction to divine justice, for all; namely, the death of Christ: there is the same righteousness imputed to all, the same spirit of holiness imparted amongst all, and the same mansions of glory designed for all; thus there is no difference. And there is no difference amongst believers, in respect of truth of grace, but much in respect of strength of grace; no difference amongst them in respect of God's promises, but much difference with respect to their performances; no difference in respect of God's covenant, but much difference in respect of God's counsels, as also in respect of God's dispensations, no difference in respect of God's acceptance, but much in respect of their application; no difference as they are a body, in respect of their head, but much difference as they are members of that head. And if there be no difference amongst believers (as such) before God, why should there be so much difference amongst themselves, as there is oftentimes here in this world? You are all dear, truly dear to God; why should you not be so to one another? Why should not one church and one communion hold you now? Ere long, perhaps, one prison may, one heaven shall certainly hold you all.

24 Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:

25 Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God:

26 To declare, I say, at this time, his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

Observe here, 1. A glorious privilege vouchsafed to believers, which the scriptures call justification, whereby they are judicially acquitted and discharged from the guilt and punishment of all their sins, and accounted righteous before God. Observe, 2. The efficient cause of our justification. It is God that justifies: who can forgive the crime, but the person against whom we have done the wrong? Observe, 3. The moving or impulsive cause, namely, the free grace of God: bring justified freely by his grace. Observe, 4. The meritorious cause, the bloodshedding and death of Christ; through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. Observe, 5. The final cause; to declare his righteousness, not his clemency and mercy only, but his justice and righteousness, especially that attribute which disposes and inclines him to punish sin and sinners. Observe, 6. The instrumental cause of justification, faith; whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, &c. Some of the papists, especially Cajetan and à Lapide do call faith causa applicans in our justification: verily, an unapplied Christ justifies none, saves none. Learn thence, 1. That in order to a sinner's being saved, he must be justified, that is, discharged of, absolved from, the guilt of all sin, upon the account of a complete satisfaction given to divine justice for sin. Learn, 2. That not all and every sinner, but only repenting and believing sinners are justified by God. Learn, 3. That when the Lord justifies a believing sinner he doth it freely; being justified freely by his grace. It is an act of mere grace; there is nothing in the creature that can merit or deserve it: then it would be debt, and not grace. Learn, 4. That God's free grace and Christ's full satisfaction were consistent, and both concurring in the believer's justification; we are justified freely by God's grace; yet, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: him God having set forth to be a propitiation. The word propitiation is an allusion to the mercy-seat, which covered the ark wherein the law was; this typified Christ, who fully covers our sins, the transgressions of the law, out of God's sight. When therefore the apostle saith, that God hath set forth Christ to be a mercy-seat to us through faith in his blood; we have reason to believe the blood of Christ, as our sin-offering, doth make an atonement for us, and renders God propitious to us. Learn, 5. That Almighty God, in the justification of a believing sinner, is not only gracious and merciful, but just and righteous, in the most exalted degree: to declare his righteousness for the remission of sin. Where note, that the design and end of God in exacting satisfaction from Christ, was to declare his righteousness in the remission of sin; but the apostle would have us take notice, that our justification is an act of justice as well as mercy, and that God, as he is a just God, cannot condemn the believer, since Christ has satisfied for his sins. O blessed be God! that pardon of sin is built upon that very attribute, the justice of God, which is so affrighting and dreadful to the offending sinner. This attribute, which seemed to be the main bar against remission, is now become the very ground and reason why God remits. Hence saith St. John, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins: faithful with respect to his own promise, and just with respect to his Son's satisfaction. Who then can lay any thing to the charge of God's elect, when justice itself doth justify them? Behold here the sweet harmony of the divine attributes in justifying and pardoning the believer! One attribute is not robbed to pay another; neither is one attribute raised upon the ruin of another; but justice and mercy both triumph. And well might the justice of God triumph, for never was it thus honored before, to have such a person as the Son of God stand at its bar, and such a sum as the Son's blood paid down at once, by way of satisfaction, to its due demands. O glorious and all-wise contrivance! whereby God made sufficient provision for the reparation of his honor, for the vindication of his holiness, and for the manifestation of his truth and faithfulness, and for the present consolation, and eternal salvation of all repenting and believing sinners to the end of the world.

27 Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay, but by the law of faith.

The apostle having laid down in the foregoing verses, the nature of justification exactly in the several and respective causes of it declares in this verse, what is the consequence of this doctrine, namely, the excluding of all self-confidence and boasting in ourselves, or in any works done by ourselves: where is boasting then? Learn thence, That man is naturally a very proud creature, prone to boast of, and glory in, any excellency, either real or supposed, belonging to himself. Learn, 2. That God has taken care to give a check to this insolent pride of man, and to cut off all occasion of boasting from him, 1 Cor. i. 29. that no flesh should glory in his sight. Whilst God intended to give man glory, he took a course to cut off all glorying from man. Learn, 3. That the course which the wisdom of God has taken to hide pride from man's eyes, and to cut off all occasion of boasting from him, is by denying him justification by his own works; and ordaining, that the meritorious cause of justification should not lie in himself, but in another. Grace must have all the glory; not the law of works, but the law of faith justifieth and saveth all believers.

28 Therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also:

30 Seeing it is one God which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.

Observe here, 1. The conclusion drawn by the apostle, from all that he had been discoursing of in the foregoing chapters: namely, that God's way of justification of a guilty sinner is not by works, done by him, but by faith in the Mediator, who hath satisfied the justice of God for him; therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. Learn thence, That justification from our past sins is by faith alone, without respect to any works of ours, done either before or since conversion. Observe, 2. How the apostle doth extend his proposition universally to all sorts of persons, Jews and Gentiles: that is, the whole race of mankind; affirming, that God will justify circumcised believers, and uncircumcised believers, one and the same way, even by the way of grace and faith: it is one God which justifieth the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith. Where note, the argument is drawn from the unity or oneness of God, which is not to be understood so much of the unity of his essence and nature, as of his will and purpose; yet as God is one and the same unchangeable God in his nature, so is he as immutable in his will and purpose, having therefore determined and declared his way of justifying all sinners to be one and the same to all nations, both Jew and Gentile, even by faith alone in his Son Christ Jesus; no other way is to be expected from that God who is unchangeable in his purpose. Learn thence, That God's way and method of justifying all sinners, Jews and Gentiles, great and small, is and ever will be the same, namely, by faith alone, without works. What false notions soever men may entertain in their minds about it, and when the pride of men has arraigned the wisdom of God never so much, the apostle's conclusion will remain like a rock unshaken, ver. 28. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law.

Observe here, the wise and holy caution which our apostle uses to take away the calumny and reproach cast upon him, by the adversaries of the doctrine of free justification by faith: as if this would render the law of God void and altogether useless: do we then make void the law of God? As if he had said, "There may be those that will say so, but untruly: for we establish the law: because we acknowledge, that without exact obedience and conformity to the law, both in our natures and in our lives, as a rule of living, there can be no salvation." Learn hence, That the doctrine of justification by faith alone, doth not overthrow but establish the law. Here note, That it is the moral, not ceremonial law, which the apostle speaks of. The ceremonial law is utterly abolished by the gospel; but the moral law is not abolished, but established by the gospel; or, if abolished, it is only as a covenant, not as a rule. Christ has relaxed the law in point of danger, but not in point of duty; for the law is holy, and just, and good, and is not disannulled, but established by the gospel: because by the gospel we obtain grace, in some measure, to fulfil the law, and yield a sincere obedience to it: which, for the sake of Christ's perfect and spotless obedience, shall find a gracious acceptance with God. Therefore, with the highest elevation of soul let us bless God for Jesus Christ, and for the gospel revelation, which has so fully discovered, and clearly revealed to us the only way of justification by faith in the Son of God, who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood. To whom be glory and dominion for ever and ever.—Amen.

CHAPTER IV.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, our apostle laid down a positive and peremptory conclusion, that a man is justified by faith without the works of the law. In this chapter he undertakes to confirm the truth of that conclusion, by instancing in the patriarch Abraham, the father of the faithful, who did not find justification and acceptance with God by virtue of his circumcision in the flesh, or any other works of obedience performed by him to the law, but by virtue of his faith, which was imputed and accounted to him for righteousness: from which instance of Abraham's justification by faith, the apostle infers the justification of all believers with him. For who doubts but that the children are justified after the same manner that their father was? This being the design and scope of the chapter, let us observe the force of the apostle's argument, verse the first.

WHAT shall we then say that Abraham, our father as pertaining to the flesh, hath found?

2 For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God.

As if the apostle had said, "what shall we say? Shall any one affirm, that Abraham our father found or obtained righteousness by, or according to the flesh; that is, by being circumcised in the flesh, or by any works of righteousness which he had done? surely no: for if Abraham were justified by circumcision, or any other works of his own, he hath whereof to glory: that is, ground of boasting in these works by which he was thus justified. But manifest it is, that he had not whereof to boast and glory before God; therefore he was not justified by circumcision, nor any works of his own." Learn hence, That no righteousness of our own, no services we can perform, are sufficient to procure our justification in the sight of God; for if we are justified by our works, it must be by works either before faith, or after faith. Not before faith; for the corruption of nature and man's impotent condition thereby, will give check to any such thought. Surely, unrighteousness cannot make us righteous, no more than impurity can make us clean. Nor do works after faith, justify; for then a believer is not justified upon his believing, but by his works after his believing; and faith is not the justifying grace, but only a preparation to those works which justify; which is contrary to the whole strain of the apostle throughout the epistle, who ascribes justification to faith in the blood of Christ without works. In short, no righteousness in man is perfect; therefore, no righteousness of man can be justifying: there is nothing that a man doth, but is defective, and consequently, has matter of condemnation in it: now, that which is condemning, cannot be justifying; that which falls short of the holiness of the law, can never free us from the condemnatory sentence and curse of the law. Now, all works after faith fall short of that perfection which the law requireth. Learn, 2. That the design of God, was to justify us in such a way as to strip us of our own. Not of works, lest any man should boast, says the apostle often. We are justified by faith, to exclude boasting, which would not have been excluded by the law of works.

3 For what saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

4 Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the un-godly, his faith is counted for righteousness.

Observe here, 1. The account which the scripture gives of Abraham's justification; it was by faith alone: he believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness: that is, he firmly believed the promise of God, that he would give him a son, in whom all the families of the earth should be blessed. And by means of his faith, he was reckoned or esteemed righteous before God, and not by means of his works. Observe, 2. The apostle's argument, to prove that Abraham was justified by faith, and not by works; had he works of perfect holiness, then in strict justice a reward might have been expected by him as a due debt, and not given him in a way of grace and favor. For to him that worketh, that is, with a design and intent to obtain justification by his works, is the reward reckoned not of grace, but of debt; he having performed all that was required in order to his being righteous before God. But to him that worketh not; that is, who worketh not to the intent and end forementioned: namely to procure justification by working, but seeks that in a way of believing; his faith is counted for righteousness. To him that worketh not, but believeth, &c. We must understand it absolutely; for he that believeth, worketh: but secundum quid, after a sort, he is said not to work; because he worketh not with a design to stand righteous before God by his works. Again, by him that worketh not, we are not to understand an idle, lazy believer that takes no care of the duties of obedience; no, an idle faith is an ineffectual faith, and can never be a saving faith; but the meaning is, he worketh not in a law sense, to the ends and intentions of the first covenant, to make up a righteousness to cover himself by his own working; being convinced of his utter inability to work out his own righteousness by the law, and seeing all his endeavours to obey the law, fall short of righteousness; he is therefore said in a law sense not to work, because he doth not work so as to answer the purpose and end of the law, which accepts of nothing short of perfect and complete obedience. And whereas it is here said, that God justifieth the ungodly; the meaning is, such as have been ungodly, not such as continue so. The apostle describes the temper and frame of their hearts and lives before justification, and not after it; as it found them, not as it leaves them. True, Christ justifies the ungodly, yet such as continue ungodly are not justified by him: we must bring credentials from our sanctification, to bear witness to the truth of our justification.

6 Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works.

7 Saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.

Observe here, That to the example of Abraham, the apostle subjoins the testimony of David, Psal. xxxiii. who describes the blessedness of that man to whom God imputeth righteousness, to wit, the righteousness of the Mediator, without any works brought before God to be justified by, saying, "blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered, and iniquity not imputed." Sin, in respect of the offence, is remitted; in respect of the filth or turpitude of it, is covered; in respect of the punishment, not imputed. This heap of words, serves only to amplify and set forth the abundant grace of God in the act of pardoning sin. Learn hence, 1. That to pardon sin, is God's prerogative; he forgiveth iniquity, and covereth transgression. 2. That pardon of sin is a covering of sin: not such a covering of sin, as God cannot see it in a justified person, to chastise him for it; but so covered, as not to punish him with wrath and condemnation for it. Learn, 3. That God's act in pardoning and covering sin, is extensive and perfect, full and final: iniquity, transgression, and sin, is forgiven, covered, and not imputed. Learn, 4. That transcendent is the blessedness of those whose iniquity is pardoned, and their transgression covered. Blessednesses, says the original, belong to the man whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered, and to whom the Lord will not impute transgression.

9 Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? For we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

Here the apostle moves the question, namely, whether the forementioned blessedness of pardon of sin, and justification by faith, belongs to the circumcised Jews only, or to the uncircumcised Gentiles also? which question carrieth with it the force of a strong affirmation, that seeing faith was imputed to Abraham for righteousness, many years before he was circumcised; therefore the uncircumcised Gentiles, as well as the circumcised Jews, shall by faith be made partakers of the same blessedness, unto which Abraham was entitled before he was circumcised. Learn hence, That God has appointed one and the same way and method for the justification and salvation of all persons, circumcised and uncircumcised, Jew and Gentile, honorable and ignoble; namely, justification by faith in the blood of his Son, without which no church-privileges, or spiritual prerogatives whatsoever, will intitle them to real blessedness. "Cometh this blessedness on the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also?" Abraham believed unto righteousness before he was circumcised; therefore, the Gentiles by faith shall be accounted righteous, though they never be circumcised.

11 And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being circumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also.

12 And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

Here the apostles declare the reason why, and the end for which Abraham was circumcised, seeing he was justified by faith in the promised Messiah, long before circumcision. He tells us, that Abraham received circumcision, as a sign and seal of the covenant made with him, and to his seed, Gen. xvii. and as an obligation that the righteousness of faith was the true way for a sinner to become righteous; which righteousness Abraham had obtained whilst he was uncircumcised, that so he might be the father in a spiritual sense, of all believers, both Jews and Gentiles, who imitated him in his faith, and in the holiness and obedience of his life. Note here, 1. The person instituting the sacrament of circumcision: God, and not Abraham; he received circumcision; that is, by the appointment of God he was circumcised. Sacraments must be of divine institution, not of human invention. The church can make no sacraments; her duty is, with care and caution to administer them. There is a four-fold word requisite to a sacrament. A word of institution; a word of command; a word of promise; a word of blessing. The elements are cyphers: 'Tis the institution makes them figures. Divine institution is as necessary to a sacrament, as the royal inscription is to current money. Note, 2. The nature of sacraments in general, and of circumcision in particular. They are signs and seals; "he received the sign of circumcision: a seal of the righteousness by faith." The circumcision, 1. Was a sign and token of the covenant which God made with Abraham and the Jews. It was a commemorative sign of God's covenant with Abraham: A representative sign of Abraham's faith and obedience towards God: A demonstrative sign of original sin, and the depravity of human nature: a discriminating and distinguishing sign of the true church and people of God from all the rest of the world: an initiating sign, by which all strangers, that were received into the commonwealth of Israel, were admitted into the Jewish church: and lastly, It was a prefigurative sign of baptism, which, in the christian church, was to succeed in the room of circumcision. 2. Circumcision was not a sign only, but a seal also. A seal of the righteousness by faith; it was a seal, both on God's part, and on Abraham's also. A seal on God's part, to confirm all the promises made to Abraham and his seed. 3. A seal on his and their parts, to bind them to renounce the service of all other gods, and to oblige them to the observation of the whole law. Note lastly, the character and description here given of true believers; they are such as walk in the steps of faithful Abraham. They have not only Abraham to their father, but they walk in the footsteps of their father's faith. As Abraham readily obeyed the call of God, so do they: as Abraham left his idolatrous country and kindred, and though he had opportunity of returning, yet never returned more; so do the faithful sons and daughters of Abraham leave all known sins, and no temptations can prevail with them to return to the delightful practice of them. Did Abraham break through all impediments, difficulties, and discouragements whatsoever? So do and will all those that tread in the faith of their father Abraham, surmount all diffaculties, bid defiance to all dangers, that they may yield a ready, cheerful, and persevering obedience to the commands of the God of Abraham: few of the children of Abraham's flesh, but all the children of his faith, do thus walk in the steps of their renowned father.

13 For the promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.

That is, the great promise which God made to Abraham, and his seed, that they should possess that rich and pleasant part of the world, the land of Canaan, under which also heaven itself was typically promised and comprehended, was not made upon condition of their performing perfect obedience to the law, but they were to obtain it by faith; that is, by trusting to, and depending upon the gracious promise of a faithful God. Note here, the argument couched for justification by faith without works, which is the apostle's grand scope, design and drift; it runs thus: "if the promise made to the father of the faithful was accomplished, not by legal obedience, but by the righteousness of faith; then it follows, that all his children are justified by faith, as Abraham their father was. But the promise of the earthly inheritance, and under it, of the heavenly one, was accomplished, not by the law, but by the righteousness of Abraham's faith: therefore, justification is not to be expected by the works of the law, but by faith alone."

14 For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect,

That is, if they which seem to be justified by the works of the law be heirs of this promised inheritance; then faith, that is, the way of justification by faith, prescribed by God, is to no purpose, for to what end should we by faith seek righteousness in another, if by our legal obedience we can find it in ourselves? Here then lies couched another argument, to confirm the apostle's doctrine of justification by faith: thus, that only justifies, unto which a gracious promise of justification is made; but no such promise is made to any man for his weak and imperfect keeping of the law, but for his believing there is; therefore, by the law there can be no justification, but by faith only.

15 Because the law worketh wrath; for where no law is, there is no transgression.

Here the apostle suggests another reason, why no justification can be executed by the law, because it condemns, rather than justifies. The law worketh wrath: that is, it discovers the wrath of God due to our transgression, and then pronounces condemnation upon the transgressor; for were there no law, either natural or revealed, there would be no transgression, and, consequently, no condemnation. Here observe, 1. the use of the law; it discovers sin, it convinces of sin, it condemns for sin, it denounces the wrath of God due unto sin. And note, 2. The apostle's argument for the use of the law; he infers an utter impossibility of being justified by the law. That which condemns, cannot justify; but the law of God condemns the sinner for his transgression; therefore, it can never be the instrument and means of his justification.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that also, which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all.

The apostle here assigns a double cause, why the wisdom of God has appointed justification and salvation to be obtained in the way of faith: namely, 1. That it might be of free and undeserved grace and favor; for to be justified by faith, and by grace, are all one with the apostle. And, 2. That the promise might be sure to all the seed: that is, that God's promise might stand firm and sure to all the believing seed of Abraham, not only to all the children of the flesh, to whom the law was given, but to all the children of his faith, even Gentiles as well as Jews; he being the father of all that believe, whether Jews or Gentiles. Learn hence, that if our justification and salvation did depend upon our performing perfect obedience to the law, it would never be sure, but always uncertain, because of our impotency and weakness to keep and observe it. The apostle, chap. viii. 3. tells us, that the law is weak through the flesh; though the truth is, the law is not weak to us, but we are weak to that; the law has the same authority for commanding that ever it had, but we have not the same ability for obeying. 'Tis our wickedness that is the sole cause of the law's weakness: had every man the same integrity, the law would have the same ability that ever it had, both to justify and save us.

17 (As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not, as though they were:

Our apostle, in this and the following verses, enters upon a high commendation of Abraham's faith, magnifying and extolling the same, for and upon account of sundry excellencies which are found in it. And here, 1. He takes notice how Abraham's faith was strongly acted and exercised on the Almighty power of God: "he believed in God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which are not, as though they were;" that is, the Lord having promised to make Abraham the father of many nations, when he had no seed, nor was ever likely to have any; he believed the thing to be both credible and possible, because God had spoken it, how improbable soever. And although with respect to generation, he looked upon Sarah's body, and his own, as good as dead; for she was barren and past bearing, and he was an hundred years old, and past all hopes of having a child; yet he exercised his faith on the promise and power of God, who quickeneth the dead, that is, his own dead body and Sarah's barren womb; and called those things which be not, that is, the Gentiles, which were not then a people, as if they were. Learn hence, that it is a noble act and exercise of faith, to believe God on his bare word, and to assent to truth, though never so improbable. As whatever God doth is good, because he doth it; so whatever God says is true, because he speaks it; and accordingly faith, which is an assent of the understanding to what God reveals, depends upon the veracity of God, for making good his own word, and fulfilling his own promise. Faith has a threefold excellency: it assents to the truths of God, though never so improbable: it puts men upon duties, though seemingly unreasonable (witness Abraham's offering up Isaac;) and it enables to sufferings, be they never so afflictive. But from believing plain contradictions and impossibilities, as the church of Rome would have us in the point of transubstantiation; faith desires there to be excused. Observe here, 2. That as Abraham's faith exceedingly honored God; so God highly honors Abraham's faith, making him like himself a father of many nations. As God is an universal Father, not of one, but of all nations, so was Abraham; as God is their spiritual father, not by carnal generation, so was Abraham: God made faithful Abraham like himself, a father, not of this or that nation only, but universally of all believers, among all nations, believing after his example. Thus Abraham's faith honors God, and God honors Abraham's faith, styling him the Father of the Faithful throughout all generations.

18 Who against hope, believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, so shall thy seed be.

19 And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb.

20 He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God:

21 And being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform.

Here St. Paul farther expatiates in the commendation of Abraham's faith, telling us, That against hope he believed in hope; that is, he had a strong hope, a firm faith and trust in the promise and power of God; against all natural grounds of hope; namely, that he should certainly have a son, and a seed like the stars of heaven for multitude. He farther adds, That he considered not the deadness of his own body, nor the barrenness of Sarah's womb: neither staggered at the promise through unbelief; that is, he regarded not any difficulties which lay in the way of his faith, he admitted no doubts or questions touching the promise or power of God; but without all disputing, depended fully upon God for the performance of his own promise, and so gave God the glory of his omnipotency and faithfulness. Observe here, 1. What was the ground of Abraham's faith; namely, the special promise, yea, the absolute promise of God, that he should have a son. Observe, 2. The height and measure of his faith: "he was strong in faith, and staggered not through unbelief;" he was fully persuaded of God's all-sufficiency; it is a metaphor taken from ships that come into the harbour with full sail. Thus was it with Abraham, there was not any sail of his soul but what was filled with the wind of assurance. As a ship with full gale and strong sail is carried to the haven against winds and waves, so Abraham, by the strength of his faith, overcame all waves of doubts and difficulties beating upon his mind. Observe, 3. What were the fruit and issue, the end and event of Abraham's faith, it brought glory to God: he was strong in faith, giving glory to God. All faith glorifies God truly, but strong faith glorifies him abundantly: it gives him the glory of his power and faithfulness, goodness and truth. Quest. 1. But how could Abraham's body be said to be dead, when he had several children afterwards by Keturah? even six sons, forty years after Sarah's death.—Ans. Abraham's and Sarah's bodies received now a blessing, or new generative faculty from God, which rendered them capable of begetting and bearing children, when by nature they were not so. Quest. 2. Was Abraham's faith so strong as to exclude all doubting? Did not he distrust when he said, "shall a child be born to Abraham that is an hundred years old: and Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?" Gen. xxi. Ans. These words are not words of doubting, but inquiring; they proceeded from a desire to be further informed how these things could be. But Abraham laughed, and Sarah also at the mention of a son. True, they did both laugh, but not both alike; Abraham's laughter proceeded from admiration and joy, but Sarah's from diffidence and distrust: and accordingly we find Sarah reprimanded, but not Abraham reprimanded, for laughing: "Abraham staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God."

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.

23 Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him:

24 But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead.

Our apostle having, in the former part of this chapter, declared the manner of our justification, from an instance of Abraham, which having at large pursued, lest we should think that was Abraham's personal privilege, and did not concern us, he applies in the verses before us Abraham's example unto us, assuring us, that as Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness, because he depended upon the almighty power of God in the promise, and also looked by faith to the Messiah promised, who was to come of his seed; so, says the apostle, was this written for our sakes as well as Abraham's, for our comfort and encouragement, to assure us that faith shall be imputed to us also for righteousness, if we firmly trust in God, through the merits and mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ. Where observe, the apostle's argument fully overthrows the Socinian doctrine, which teaches, that the godly, under the Old Testament, were not justified in this same way with us under the New; whereas the apostle fully proves, that Abraham, and all the children of Abraham, who walk in the steps of him their father, are justified alike: and accordingly it was not thus written of him for his sake alone, that his faith was imputed to him for righteousness, but for the benefit of us also; to whom the like faith shall be imputed for justification, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus from the dead. Learn hence, that the doctrine of justification by faith, through the imputed righteousness of the Mediator, is no new doctrine, but as old as Abraham. Some are much offended at this word imputed; but as the pious bishops, Downham and Davenant, on justification well observe, it is no less than ten times mentioned, either in the term or the signification of it, in this chapter: their arguments for, and answers to, Bellarmine's objections against the imputed righteousness of the Mediator, run thus: "if Christ's righteousness be not imputed, it is not accepted; if it be not accepted, it is not performed, and so there will be no redemption by Jesus Christ: without this, we should make Christ little, very little, in the justifying of sinners: and why is Christ called the Lord our Righteousness, and how are we said to be made the righteousness of God in him? And why is faith so infinitely pleasing to God, but because faith brings to God a righteousness which is highly pleasing to him, even that of the Mediator? for there is no standing before God for any creature in a creature-righteousness"—the popish objections run thus: objection, 1. If Christ's righteousness be imputed to us, then may we be reputed redeemers of the world, as well as he was. Ans. It may as well be said, the debt may be accounted the surety, because the surety's payment is accepted for the debt. Objection, 2. If Christ's righteousness be imputed to us as ours, then we ought to be accounted as righteous as himself. Ans. It may be as well argued and concluded, that the debtor is as rich a man as the surety, because the surety pays the debtor's debts. Objection, 3. If Christ's righteousness be properly imputed to us, then our unrighteousness was properly imputed to him, and he may be strictly and truly called a sinner. Ans. Just as if we should say, "if the acceptance of the surety's payment acquits the debtor, then the surety is as bad an husband, and as much a bankrupt as the debtor himself." Objection, 4. But if Christ's righteousness be ours, no need of any righteousness of our own. Ans. We plead for the meritorious righteousness of Christ to answer the demands of the law, and for a personal righteousness of our own, to answer the commands of the gospel; let us render to all their due; let us render unto Christ the things that are Christ's, to faith the things which are faith's, and to good works the things which are theirs. Let us awfully adore the wisdom of God, who has made Christ unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. To relieve our ignorance and folly, he is our wisdom; to discharge us from guilt, and free us from condemnation, he is our righteousness; to relieve us against the filth and pollution, the power and dominion of sin, he is our sanctification; and to rescue us from our miserable captivity of Satan, he is our redemption. Blessed be God for the benefit of imputed righteousness to such as live in the practice and power of inherent holiness. True, our sanctification and holiness, when most perfect, cannot justify us before God; but it will evidence our justification before men, and be a witness to our own consciences, that we are accepted in the beloved.

25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

In this one verse we have an abridgment of the whole gospel, the death and resurrection of Christ declared, and the benefit and advantages of both assigned. 1. For his death; he was delivered for our offences. Here note, 1. The person delivered; he, that is, Christ Jesus the righteous; the Lord our righteousness. Note, 2. The person delivering, not expressed, but necessarily implied and understood; Judas delivered him, the Jews delivered him, God the Father delivered him, and Christ himself delivered himself. All these did one and the same act, but not for one and the same end: Judas delivered him for gain, the Jews for envy, the Father delivered him out of love, and Christ delivered himself in great compassion to a lost world. Note, 3. Unto what he was delivered, namely, unto death, even the death of the cross. This in God was an act of the highest justice, in Christ an act of wonderful obedience, in the Jews an act of the highest wickedness. Note, 4. For whom, and for what he was delivered: for us and for our offences; it notes the viceroyalty of his sufferings, not barely for our good as the final cause, and for our sins as the meritorious cause; but for us, in our room, place and stead, dying under an imputation of guilt, and dying as the sacrificed beast for the expiation of that guilt: the original word here for offences signifies great falls, grievous offences, and heinous crimes. This sacrificed lamb was delivered and died to expiate the guilt of great sins, and to make atonement for the greatest sinners. Note, 5. It is here said, that Christ was delivered, rather than die for our offences, to lead us to the consideration of the first cause of his sufferings for us: namely, the determinate counsel of God, pursuant to which there was a concession or permission given to wicked instruments to shed his blood; his own father delivering him up to death for our offences. Learn hence, that our sins were not only the occasion, but the moving and impulsive cause of Christ's sufferings. He died as a sacrifice to atone an offended Deity; as the sacrifices of old were brought to the altar, and there slain, so Christ substituting himself in our room and stead, was brought to the altar of his cross, and there died as a victim or expiatory sacrifice for our sins. Thus, he was delivered for our offences. Observe next, Our Lord's resurrection asserted, he was raised again, and its end assigned for our justification. Christ as our surety was under the arrest of death; but having given satisfaction by his sufferings, our discharge was published to the world by his resurrection; as by dying in our stead, he bare the curse of the law; so by rising again as a common person, we receive our acquittal from the hand of a judge. His death was our payment; his resurrection our discharge; "he was raised again for our justification." Learn thence, that Christ's resurrection was the cause of our justification; not the meritorious cause, for that was his death and bloodshed; but the declarative and perfect cause of our justification. His resurrection was a declaration of our justification, the justice of God thereby declaring itself satisfied, by its prisoner being released. His resurrection is also the perfective cause of our justification. The work of redemption wrought for us by his death, is perfected, and made effectual by his resurrection. This makes our redemption complete, which otherwise had been partial and imperfect; nay, none at all. 'Tis upon Christ, as raised, that our faith must be settled: had he not been raised from the dead, faith in his death had had no foundation, for it had been an unaccountable thing to believe in one that lay under the power of death. By Christ's resurrection, the efficacy of his death was declared to all the world: therefore, says the apostle, chap. viii. "Who shall condemn us, when Christ hath died for us? yea, rather is risen again." As our redemption was not in its glory till Christ's resurrection; so neither is our faith in its full strength and vigor, till it eyes him." Who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification."

CHAPTER V.

The apostle having in the foregoing chapters asserted, and by many arguments demonstrated the necessity of a sinner's justification by faith alone in the Lord Jesus Christ: whom God the Father, in infinite mercy and compassion to us, set forth to be a propitiation for us, delivering him to death for our offences, and raising him again for our justification: in this chapter he declares the sweet fruits and benefits, the blessed effects and advantages, which flow from the foregoing privilege, and redound to all such as are in a justified condition; viz. Peace with God, perseverance in grace, patience under affliction, joy in tribulation, hope of glory, &c. But let us consider them distinctly.

THEREFORE, being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The first blessed effect and sweet fruit of our justification by faith, is peace and reconciliation with God. Pardon and peace go together and accompany one another; a sinner being discharged from guilt, and thereby from his obnoxiousness to God's wrath, is instantly brought into a state of friendship and reconciliation with God; for there is no middle state betwixt his favor and his wrath. Learn hence, 1. That peace is proclaimed in heaven betwixt God and every justified person whatsoever, the enmity betwixt God and such a soul being taken away: peace, I say, is proclaimed in the sinner's conscience: a person may be in a state of peace, and yet want the sense of peace. Again, there is a twofold peace with God; one which is opposite to God's hatred as an enemy: the other opposed to God's paternal anger as a father. Now the apostle here speaks of the former, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God;" that is, God has no more hostile enmity against us, and will not satisfy his justice upon us, by punishing of us; but if we offend him, we shall certainly fall under his frowns and chastisements, and feel the effects of his heavy displeasure as an angry father! With this agrees that of the learned and pious Bishop Davenant: Deus absolvit justificatum ab omni pena satisfactoria, sed non ab omni pena medicinali & castigatoria. Learn, 2. That our reconciliation with God is settled upon a sure foundation by Jesus Christ; "we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus;" that is, through him as a Mediator betwixt God and us; he made peace by the blood of the cross, Col. i. 20, that is, by his blood shed upon the cross; his meritorious satisfaction brought us into a state of peace and reconciliation, and his prevailing intercession keeps us in it: "being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

2 By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

A second benefit which flows from justification by faith, is our admission to grace and favor with God: this is a privilege beyond the former; a traitor may be pardoned by his prince, and yet not admitted into the presence of his prince; as Absalom's crime was forgiven, but he must not see his father's face: but by Christ's mediation, every justified person meets with divine acceptance; yea, he is not only brought into a state of grace and favor, but he stands and abides in it. No sufferings from God, no sufferings from man for God's sake, no temptations, no tribulations nor persecutions, can cause God to cast him out of his grace and favor; having access by faith into it, he shall stand and abide in it. True, he may fall under his father's rod, but he shall never fall from his father's love: "through Christ we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand." A third benefit follows, "we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." Here observe, 1. The happy union and connection between grace and glory; grace is glory begun, and glory is grace consummated; grace is glory in the bud, glory is grace in the fruits; grace is the lowest degree of glory, and glory the highest degree of grace. Happy soul, that is partaker of the first fruits of grace! thou shalt ere long reap the crop of glory! Observe, 2. A justified person has the hope of future glory, and always may, and sometimes can, rejoice in the hope; "we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God;" he hopes for the glory of God, and well he may, for it is purchased for him, it is promised to him; he has it already in the first-fruits and earnest of that: it is prepared for him, and he is preparing for that; and he rejoices in the hope of his glory, believing it to be great and glorious, sure and certain, never decaying, everlasting.

3 And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

5 And hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us.

Here the apostle mentioneth a fourth benefit flowing from justification by faith; and that is, glorying in their present sufferings. He told us before, that justified persons, being at peace with God, rejoiced in hopes of future glory; but says he, that is not all, they glory in their present tribulations also. Here note, 1. What sort of sufferings they are which the saints glory in; they are tribulations, that is, such trials and persecutions as did befall them for the profession of the gospel: in these a child of God may rejoice, yea, boast and glory, as a soldier doth of his marks, wounds, and scars, received in the wars, but not in those sufferings, afflictions and trials which we bring upon ourselves, as punishments for our sins; these we have no more reason to glory in, than a corrected child has to glory in his whipping; "what glory is it when we are buffeted for our faults?" Note, 2. To what a height and heroic pitch the spirit of a justified believer may be raised under sufferings for Christ; he may glory in tribulation: it is an high strain of spiritualness in bearing affliction, when a christian can say, I love to bear: though I love not that which I suffer, and that which I bear, yet I love to bear what I suffer. But it is a higher pitch than this to say with the apostle, "I rejoice in my sufferings," Col. i. 24. For joy is a degree beyond love; yet it is a degree higher still to take pleasure in reproaches and distresses for Christ's sake, 2 Cor. xii. 10., for pleasure is a degree beyond joy; but to glory in tribulations, is beyond them all; it is more than to love, more than to rejoice, more than to take pleasure in them. O the power of faith in Christ, and love unto him, to support and uphold the soul? yea, cause it to glory under the sharpest sufferings and tribulations for him! Note, 3. That it is not in the tribulations themselves that believers glory, but in the sweet issue, happy fruits, and gracious effects of them; finding that by the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit tribulation worketh patience; that is, exerciseth and increaseth patience, and patience begetteth and giveth experience of God's gracious presence with us, of his assistance of us, and of his faithfulness towards us, in and under all our afflictions: and experience of these things worketh in us hope of reward. Here observe, how one grace generates and begets another: graces have a generation one from another, though they have all but one generation from the spirit of Christ. Observe also, that it is not tribulation in its own nature, but when sanctified by the blessed Spirit, that by a happy gradation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope: for when affliction is not sanctified, but meets with a stubborn spirit, Lord, what dreadful effects doth it produce! Then tribulation excites impatience, impatience causes perplexity, perplexity despair, and despair confusion. Note, 4. The effect and property of the believer's hope. It maketh not ashamed: his hope will not make him ashamed, neither will he be ever ashamed of his hope: frustrated hopes fill men with confusion and shame: the justified person shall not find his hopes of glory frustrated, but exceeded; and the reason is added, why the christian hope will not deceive or shame him, namely, "because the love of God is shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost;" that is, the Holy Spirit doth in time of tribulation, testify his love to the hearts of the people, which causes them to glory in tribulation. Learn hence, that in time of affliction, especially of persecution for the sake of Christ, good men have a more sensible feeling of God's love shed abroad in their hearts by the blessed Spirit, both to prepare them for trials, and to support them under them. St. Peter calls this a joy unspeakable; it has the very scent and taste of heaven in it, and there is but a gradual difference betwixt it and the joys of heaven: no sooner doth the Holy Spirit shed forth the love of God into the believer's heart, by clearing up his interest in the promise, and his title to eternal glory, but the soul is prepared to rejoice in affliction, yea, to glory in tribulation; and it will be as impossible to hinder it, as it is to hinder a man from satisfaction when he is most delighted and pleased:

"we glory in tribulation, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost."

6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

In this verse, the apostle sets forth the efficacy of Christ's love towards us before justification: he had a love towards us when we were sinners, which prevailed with him to die for sinners; "when we were yet without strength, Christ died for the ungodly." Note here. 1. Man's condition by nature described, a state of enmity, ungodly; and a state of impotency, without strength. We were without strength, and so wanted help; ungodly and so refused help. Man is but an impotent and an obstinate creature; without power to resist justice, and without affection to desire mercy: so weak, that he trembles at the appearance of a worm, and yet so wicked, that he lifts up his head against heaven. The state of unregeneracy is both a state of enmity and a state of impotency. Note, 2. The way and means found out for our recovery, the death of Christ; "when we were yet without strength, Christ died for us." Though he found the whole race of mankind buried in the ruins of their lapsed state, yet he did not leave them so, but died for them. Note, 3. The seasonableness of the means interposed for our recovery: it was in due time, that Christ died: that is in the fulness of time appointed by God the Father, and determined in his decree and purpose. Here we may remark, that Christ came not in the beginning of time, in the infancy and morning of the world (though it was then promised that he should come) nor yet did he stay till the last period and end of time: but came as it were in the middle of time, which is called the fulness of time, Gal. iv. 4. and here due time. Christ came not for our recovery as soon as ever we were fallen, that mankind might be the more sensible of the badness of their condition: had we been instantly cured as soon as we complained, we should neither have apprehended the danger of our disease, nor esteemed the kindness of our Physician: neither did he stay till the last period and end of time before he came, that the faith and expectation of his church might not be put upon too long and severe an exercise: the patriarchs believed in Christ that was to come; the apostles in Christ then present: and Christians now believe in him that long since did come, and is gone again. So that the apostle might well say here, that in due time Christ died.

7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.

Here the apostle amplifies, extols, and magnifies the love of Christ in dying for us, when we were enemies to him; by comparing his love to us, with our love to one another: he intimates to us, that among men it is very rare and seldom known that one man will lay down his life to save another's; but if so, it must be for a very extraordinary friend, for a person of uncommon goodness, and of eminent worth; for, says he, scarcely for a righteous man will one die. As if he had said, such a thing may be, but it is scarcely ever known, that a person will lay down his life for another, though he be a very righteous, innocent, and truly honest man: perhaps for a good man, that is, for a very kind and bountiful benefactor; for some person of rare charity, and extraordinary goodness; for a man that is a public blessing and common good to the whole community; some person, from a sense of strong obligations, would even dare to die. The scope of the apostle is this: to set forth the transcendency of Christ's love in dying for the ungodly, to show that it is beyond all human example, and that there can be no resemblance, much less any parallel of it; he loved us, and gave himself for us. Had he only as an advocate spoken and pleaded for us, his condescension had been admirable, and his love unspeakable. But to die, yea, to die for us, to be not only our Mediator, but Redeemer; not only our Redeemer, but our Ransom; here is love beyond comparison: blessed Jesus! was ever love like thine?

8 But God commendeth his love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

Observe here, How the scripture distinctly represents the love of God in giving Christ to die for us, as well as Christ's love in dying for us: God commended his love; declared, expressed and made manifest his love to us; Christ's death is often represented in scripture, as an instance of the great love of the Father towards us; because his wisdom did contrive this way for our redemption; and he has graciously accepted of his Son's sufferings in our stead. Verily, the giving heaven itself, with all its joys and glory, is not so full and perfect a demonstration of the love of God, as the giving of his Son to die for us; especially if we consider one endearing circumstance of this love of God which he commended towards us; namely that it warmed the heart of God from all eternity, and was never interrupted in that vast duration. Our salvation by Christ is the product of God's eternal counsel, Acts ii. 23, that is, the fruit of his everlasting love; before the world began, we were in the eyes, yea, in and upon the heart of God. In a word, well might the apostle say, that God commended his love toward us, forasmuch as in common esteem, he expressed greater love to us, than to Christ himself: for God, in giving him to die for us, declared to us, that our salvation was more dear to him, than the life of his own Son. God repented that he made man, but never that he gave his Son to redeem man. Learn hence, that the death of Christ for sinners, is an evident demonstration of the love of God the Father, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, "God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.

10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

As if the apostle had said, "He that loved us when we were enemies, will not damn us now we are his children. He that reconciled us to himself by his Son's death, that is, for the sake of his Son's sufferings, and satisfaction, will certainly save us from wrath to come by his life, or for the sake of his prevailing intercession;" "if when enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son." Here note, that this word (if) is not a word of doubting, but of argumentation. The apostle supposes a known truth, or a principle yielded by all christians, that the death of Christ was to reconcile sinners unto God. Learn hence, that Christ has reconciled God and us by the satisfaction which his death has made to the justice of God for our sins; and reparation being made, the enmity ceases on God's part, if the terms of reconciliation be accepted on our part. Our reconciliation with God, when enemies, was effected, 1. By the sacrifices of the death of Christ; which was the price that purchased it, 2. By the application of that benefit to us through faith: and, 3. By Christ's potent and eternal intercession; whereby our state of reconciliation is confirmed, and all future breaches prevented: for if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, even Christ the righteous, 1 John ii. 2. We dare not say, that God could not have reconciled us any other way but this; but we may safely say, that no way like this was so expressive of his love to us; it was the most obliging and endearing way imaginable, to reconcile us to himself by the death of his Son.

11 And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.

As if the apostle had said, "and moreover, we are not only reconciled to, but we glory and rejoice in, God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have received the atonement or reconciliation." Here note, The christian's great duty to rejoice, the cause of, that his joy, his reconciliation with God, and the means by which he obtains reconciliation with God; through our Lord Jesus Christ: that is, through the death of our Lord Jesus Christ, and through faith in his death. Hence learn, that our rejoicing, as to reconciliation with God depends upon our believing; it is none, if our faith be none; little, if our faith be little; great, if our faith be great. No man can rejoice in an unknown good; let us therefore give all diligence to clear up to ourselves our interest in this atonement: Christ thought it worth his blood to purchase it; surely then it is worth our pains to clear it, in order to our rejoicing in it. He that seeks not reconciliation with God, is an enemy to his soul; and he that rejoices not in that reconciliation, is an enemy to his own comfort.

12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.

The doctrine of original sin is not more difficult to be understood, than it is necessary to be known; the apostle here declares the manner how sin and death entered the world; namely, by the fall of Adam the first man; "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." Note, 1. An unhappy parent; namely, Adam: by him sin entered into the world. 2. An unhappy posterity; namely, the whole world, proceeding from and coming out of the loins of Adam, in whom all have sinned. 3. An unhappy portion; sin and death: sin entered by Adam, and death entered by sin. This was the legacy which Adam left to all his posterity. Now the sad and mournful truth which the scripture contains, is this: "That our first parent, by his transgression, hath entailed a miserable inheritance, an unhappy portion of sin and death upon all his posterity." Adam's sin becomes ours.

1. By meritorious imputation: God treated with him not as a private person, but as caput gentis, as the root and parent of all mankind. Hence a comparison is often made between the first and second Adam; the grace of the one, with the sin of the other; the life conveyed by the one, and the death transmitted by the other. By Adam we were cast, by Christ we were cleared; cursed in Adam, crowned in Christ. Now this comparison would be wholly insignificant, if Adam had not been looked upon as the representative of us all. 2. The sin of Adam is derived to us by way of inhesion: we have received from him a depravity of nature, and evil disposition, a propension to all mischief, an aversion to all good. The sin of Adam transmitted to us, doth not only cause guilt upon our persons, but filth upon our natures; not only lays a charge to us, but throws a stain upon us. 3. We make Adam's sin our own by imitation, by treading in the steps of his disobedience. Every sin we commit in defiance of the threatenings of God, is a justifying of Adam's rebellion against God; and accordingly, we die by our own folly, as well as by his fall; our destruction is of ourselves, by our actual rebellions; and we shall at the great day charge our sin and misery upon ourselves, not on God, but on satan, not on instruments, not on our first parents.

13 For until the law sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law.

The apostle having asserted the doctrine of original sin in the former verse, he prosecutes and pursues it in this and the following verse: asserting, that it is evident all have sinned, because sin was always in the world; not only after the giving of the law by Moses, but also before, even from the beginning of the world to that time. As if the apostle had said, there was certainly a law given before there was a law written: a law given to Adam, before a law written by Moses; now this law was either the law of nature written in Adam's heart, or the positive law of God given to Adam, against which law men were capable of offending before the law of Moses was written; otherwise sin would not have been imputed to them, for sin is not imputed where there is no law." Learn hence, That God having created man a rational creature, capable of moral government, is by immediate resultancy his King and Governor, and has ruled him from the beginning by a law, yet not barely by a law, but by a covenant, with promises and threatenings annexed, rewarding him for his obedience, and punishing him for his rebellion.

14 Nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression—

The apostle had asserted, that sin was in the world before the written law of Moses: here he proves it thus: "death, the wages of sin, did reign in the world, and had power over all mankind from Adam to Moses; therefore sin was in the world from Adam to Moses." By "them that have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression;" infants are generally understood; the guilt of Adam's sin is imputed to them, else death could have no power over them. The argument runs thus: death is a punishment of sin, but infants die who never sinned actually, therefore they die for Adam's sin: sin brought mortality into the nature, and the wages of sin is death: they brought a sinful nature into the world with them, which God gave the Jews of old an intimation of, by appointing the sacrament of circumcision, signifying that infants brought something into the world with them, which was early to be cut off; he also signifies the same to us christians, by appointing the ordinance of baptism for children, which he calls the laver of regeneration; Now a laver supposes uncleanness; what is pure, needs no laver. Learn hence, That infants, as soon as they live, have in them the seeds of death: sin is the seed of death, the principle of corruption. God doth infants no wrong when they die: their death is of themselves, for they have the seeds of death in themselves. All death is the wages of sin, and therefore can be no injustice to the sinner; thus death reigned from Adam to Moses, yea, even to this day; and like an insatiable tyrant, will continue to reign and slay universally, and beyond number, from the infant to the aged, from the dunghill to the throne, sparing neither age nor sex, neither great nor small, neither sacred nor profane.

—who is the figure of him that was to come.

From hence to the end of the chapter, the apostle enters upon a comparison betwixt Adam and Christ, whom he here calls a figure or resemblance of him that was to come, that is, of Christ. As Adam was the root of sin and death to all his natural seed, so Christ is the root of holiness and life to all his spiritual seed. As by the first Adam, sin, and by sin death came upon all men; so by the second Adam came righteousness, and by righteousness life on all believers. As the first Adam merited death, so the second Adam life for all his offspring. "Thus Adam was the figure of him that was to come."

15 But not as the offence, so also is the free gift; for if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift of grace, which is by one man Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many,

16 And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

17 For if by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive the abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.

The apostle having noted the parity and resemblance between Christ and Adam in the foregoing verses; here he observes the disparity and difference betwixt them, and that in several advantageous particulars: 1. He compares the sin of Adam with the obedience of Christ, and shows that the sin of the one was not so pernicious, as the obedience of the other was beneficial; Christ's obedience being more powerful to justification and salvation, than Adam's sin was to death and condemnation: for if the transgression of Adam, who was but a mere man, was able to pull down death and wrath upon all his natural seed; then the obedience of Christ who is God as well as man, will be much more available to procure pardon and life to all his spiritual seed. 2. There is a further observable difference betwixt Adam and Christ, as in respect of their persons, so in respect of their acts, and extent of their acts. Thus Adam by one act of sin brought death, that is, the sentence of death upon the whole world (all mankind becoming subject to mortality for that one sin of his;) but it is many sins of many men, which Christ doth deliver from, in the free gift of our justification; absolving us, not only from that one fault, but from all other faults and offences whatsoever. Learn thence, that the obedience of Christ extends itself not only to the pardon of original sin in Adam, but to all personal and actual sins whatsoever. 3. The apostle shows the difference betwixt them two, that is, the first and second Adam, as in respect of the effects and consequences of their acts; if by means of one man, and by one offence of that man, the whole race of mankind became subject to death, then much more shall they who are redeemed and justified by Jesus Christ, be made partakers of everlasting life, wherein they shall reign with him in glory. From the whole, note, the infinite wisdom, transcendent grace, and rich mercy of God to a miserable world in providing a salve as large as the sore; a remedy as extensive as the malady, a sovereign antidote in the blood of the second Adam, to expel the poison and malignity of the sin of the first Adam; O happy they! who having received from the first Adam corruption for corruption, have received from the second Adam grace for grace.

18 Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life.

19 For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners; so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

Observe here, how the apostle informs us of a truth, which all the writings of philosophers never acquainted us with; namely, the meritorious imputation of Adam's sin to all his posterity; that all mankind sinned in Adam, and became obnoxious to death, and all other calamities and miseries, as a punishment for their sin. Yea, the writings of Moses himself, though they declare to us the sin of Adam, and that his sin was punished with death; yet that by his disobedience all his race and posterity were involved, and became miserable, is a truth, which we are peculiarly beholden to the gospel, and particularly to this text and context, for the more full discovery of. And the account of that matter seems to stand thus: the rebellion of the first man against the great Creator, was a sin of universal efficacy, that derives a guilt and stain to mankind in all ages of the world. And the account which the scriptures give of it is grounded on the relation which we have to Adam, as being the natural and moral principle of all mankind; as the whole race of mankind was virtually in Adam's loins, so it was presumed to give virtual consent to what he did; when he broke, all his posterity became bankrupts; there being a conspiracy of all the sons of Adam in this rebellion, and not one subject left in his obedience; add to this, that Adam is to be considered as the moral as well as the natural principle of mankind. In the first covenant made betwixt God and him, Adam was considered not as a single person but as a caput gentis; and contracted not for himself only, but for all his descendants, by ordinary generation; his person was the root and fountain of theirs, and his will the representative of theirs: from hence, his numerous issue became a party in the covenant, and had a title in the benefits contained in it upon his obedience, and was liable to the curse upon the violation of it: upon this ground it is, that the apostle here in this text and context, institutes a parallel betwixt Adam and Christ; "that as by the disobedience of the former, many were made sinners: so by the obedience of the latter many were made righteous." As Christ in his death did not suffer as a private person, but as a surety and sponsor representing the whole church: in like manner, Adam in his disobedience was esteemed a public person, representing the whole race of mankind; and by a just law it was not restrained to himself, but is the sin of the common nature. But adored, for ever adored, be the wisdom and goodness of Almighty God, in providing a remedy which bears proportion to the cause of our ruin, that as we fell in Adam our representative, so we are raised by Christ the head of our recovery, which two persons are considered as causes of contrary effects! The effects are sin and righteousness, condemnation and justification. For as the disobedience of the first Adam is meritoriously imputed to all his natural posterity, and brings death upon all; so the righteousness of the second Adam is meritoriously imputed to all his spiritual progeny, to obtain life for them. As the carnal Adam, having lost original righteousness, derives a corrupt nature to all that descend from him; so the spiritual Adam, having by his disobedience, purchased grace for us, conveys a vital efficacy unto us. The same Spirit of holiness which anointed our Redeemer, doth quicken all his race, that as they have borne the image of the earthly, they may bear the image of the heavenly Adam.

20 Moreover, the law entered that the offence might abound: but where sin abounded, grace did much more abound;

21 That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord.

"The law entered that sin might abound; "that is, before the law was written, we became obnoxious to death by one man's obedience, without much sense of it; but after the law was given by Moses, sin did more clearly and conspicuously appear to be sin. Its odiousness and ugliness was more manifest to the conscience of the sinner. As the sinner has abounded in sin, in a way of commission, so sin doth by the discovery of the law abound in the sinner's apprehension, in the sight and sense of it, upon the conscience of the sinner. Nevertheless, "as sin abounds, grace doth much more abound." As the exceeding sinfulness of sin is manifested by the law, so the superabounding grace and pardoning mercy of God is rendered graciously conspicuous in and by the gospel: that as the power of sin appeared in making us liable to temporal and eternal death, so might the power of grace appear in beginning in us a spiritual life here, and bringing us to eternal life in glory hereafter. In short, when the apostle says that "the law entered, that sin might abound," he doth not mean to make it abound, by encouraging the sinner to the commission of it, but by impressing the conviction of it upon the conscience of the sinner. A man without the law looks upon himself as a small sinner; but after he has viewed his sins in the glass of the law, he sees himself a great and mountainous sinner: as a star which a child thinks to be no bigger than a spark: but a man that views it through an instrument, computes it to be bigger than the globe of the earth. Lord, help us to see our sins in the glass of thy law, yea in the glass of thy Son's blood: and then we shall be sensible what an infinite and immense evil sin is; namely, the stain and blemish of our natures, the disease and deformity of our minds, the highest infelicity of the creature, and the boldest affront that can be given to the majesty of the great and glorious God. Learn from the whole, that the riches, the abounding riches, the superabounding riches of God's pardoning grace, are manifested in the remission of our sins, and in the justification of our person: "as sin abounded, grace doth much more abound." Now, the superabounding riches of pardoning grace do thus shine forth: 1. In the nature of the mercy, which is the richest and sweetest of all mercies. No mercy sweeter than a pardon to a condemned sinner, no pardon like God's pardon to a sinner condemned at his bar. 2. In the peculiarity of the mercy. Remission is not a common but a crowning favor; it never was, never shall be extended to fallen angels: and, it is to be feared, that the far greater part of mankind refuse the terms and conditions upon which pardoning grace and mercy is offered and tendered to them. 3. In the method in which pardoning mercy is dispensed; namely, through the blood of Christ, that all-sufficient sacrifice and satisfaction; by which method, "God has more commended his love to us," than if he had pardoned us without a satisfaction; for then he had only displayed his mercy: but now he has declared his justice, yea, caused mercy and justice to meet and kiss each other, to meet in triumph together. 4. The superabounding riches of pardoning mercy appear in the latitude and extent of that act of grace. Lord, who can understand his errors! yet the blood of thy Son cleanseth from all sin, small and great, secret and open, old and new, original and actual; all pardoned without exception. O how well might the Psalmist say, "With the Lord there is mercy, and with him there is plenteous redemption," Psal. cxxx. Lastly, the riches of pardoning grace do shine forth, as in the peculiarity, so in the perpetuity of remission. As grace pardons all sin, without exception, so the pardons it bestows are without revocation: the pardoned soul shall never come into condemnation; "as far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us," Psal. ciii. 10. As the east and west are the two opposite points of heaven, which can never come together; so neither shall the pardoned sinner and his sins ever meet any more. "God is said to cast them behind his back" that is, he will never behold them more, so as to charge them upon the pardoned sinner, in order to his condemnation. May our faith then, both in life and death, triumph in the assurance of this blessed truth; "that where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; and as sin has reigned unto death, even so so hath grace reigned through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord," who lives for ever in heaven, to apply by his prevailing intercession, what he impetrated and obtained for us here on earth, by his meritorious satisfaction. To this Jesus, who is the faithful witness, and first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth, who hath loved and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings, and priests unto God; unto him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

CHAPTER VI.

The design and scope of our apostle in this chapter, is to show that the doctrine of justification by faith in Christ Jesus, which he had so strenuously asserted in the foregoing chapter, is so far from being a doctrine leading to licentiousness, that it greatly tendeth to promote holiness; and obligeth all the professors of christianity to the greatest strictness in conversation, answerable to the dignity and obligations of their christian names.

WHAT shall we say then? shall we continue in sin that grace may abound?

2 God forbid: how shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?

Thus the apostle begins this chapter with an objection, which some licentious persons might be ready to make against what he had delivered in the close of the foregoing chapter: namely, that where sin abounded, pardoning grace and mercy did much more abound. If say they, the riches of grace be thus manifested in the pardon of sin, let us then take the more liberty to sin, because grace so exceedingly abounds in the pardon of it. The apostle rejects such an inference with the greatest detestation and abhorrence, saying, God forbid, &c. As if he had said, "O vile abuse of the most excellent thing in the world? What! did Christ shed his blood to expiate our guilt? and shall we make that a plea to extenuate our guilt? God forbid! surely there is forgiveness with God, that he may be feared, not that he may be the more abused." In the words, observe, 1. An objection supposed, as if the doctrine of the gospel did countenance licentiousness, and encourage any to sin, or to continue in sin. 2. Observe with what abhorrency and indignation such a doctrine and proposition is rejected by our apostle. What! shall we continue in sin, because pardoning mercy doth abound! God forbid, that such a direct blasphemy against the holy doctrine of our Saviour should be maintained by any professor. Observe, 3. The confutation which he gives of this bold and impudent assertion; "how shall we that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Dead to sin, that is, by our baptismal engagement, vow, and obligation; every christian; at his first entrance upon the profession of christianity, doth take upon himself a vow of solemn obligation to die to sin, and to live no longer therein. From the whole learn, that to take any encouragement to live in sin, from the consideration of God's rich mercy and free grace towards sinners, is an absurd, abominable, and blasphemous impiety, contrary to all ingenuity, gratitude, and love, both to God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ his Son.

3 Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?

"To be baptized into Christ," is by baptism to take the name of Christ upon us, to be incorporated, ingrafted, and implanted into the church of Christ, being made visible members of his mystical body by baptism: "to be baptized into Christ's death," imports, our being conformed to him in the likeness of his death; our being engaged to die unto sin; as Christ died for sin. Learn hence, That the death of Christ was a lively representation of the death of sin; and believers are to imitate his death, in their dying daily unto sin. Did Christ die for us a painful, shameful, and accursed death? such a death must sin die in us. Was his death for sin free and voluntary? so must we die to sin. Was his death an universal crucifixion, did no life, sense, or motion, remain with him? thus must we imitate the likeness of his death, by an universal mortification of every known sin, which occasioned his dying. In a word, did Christ die and rise again, never to die more? so must we die unto sin, and walk in a newness of life. How shall we that are dead unto sin, live any longer therein? Thus it appears the indispensable duty of all christians, to transcribe the copy of Christ's death in their hearts and lives.

4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life,

To urge christians to farther measures and degrees of mortification of sin, and living unto holiness, the apostle uses here a double argument, one from our baptism, the other from the resurrection of Christ. Observe, 1. The argument to move us to die unto sin, drawn from our baptism; "we are buried with him by baptism unto death." The apostle alludes, no doubt, to the ancient manner and way of baptizing persons in those hot countries, which was by immersion, or putting them under water for a time, and then raising them up again out of the water; which rite had also a mystical signification, representing the burial of our old man sin in us, and our resurrection to newness of life. Learn hence, that the ordinance of baptism lays every baptized person under the strongest engagements and highest obligations to die unto sin, and walk in newness of life. The metaphors of burying and rising again, do imply and intimate thus much: burial implies a continuing under death; this is mortification a continued act, a daily dying unto sin; and rising again supposes a person never more to be under the power of death. Observe, 2. Another forcible argument to encourage us to die to sin, and walk in newness of life, is drawn from the resurrection of Christ; "as he was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so should we also walk in newness of life." Here note, 1. The proposal of a pattern and exemplar to us; "Christ was raised from the dead." 2. The author and efficient cause of Christ's resurrection; "he was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father;" that is, by the glorious power of the Father; yet not without his own power as God: so Christ told the Jews, John ii. "Destroy this temple of my body, and in three days I will raise it up again." Note, 3. The conformity or similitude on our part: as Christ arose, so should we arise out of the grave of sin and walk in newness of life. Learn hence, That Christ's resurrection is a powerful motive, and lays a Christian under strong obligations and engagements to arise from sin, and walk in newness of life. Christ's resurrection is both a pattern and a pledge of our resurrection; a pattern after which we are to conform in our rising from the grace of sin. Did Christ rise early and speedily? so should we: he arose early in the morning of the day, so should we in the morning of our youth; he arose voluntarily and cheerfully, so should we, rejoicing at our spiritual liberty and freedom from sin's bondage and thralldom; he arose with a resolution never to die more; so should we arise, with desires and endeavours, that spiritual death may never more have dominion over us. And if Christ's resurrection be thus a pattern of our resurrection now, it will be a pledge of a blessed resurrection at the last day. Observe lastly, The duty which every baptized person lies under an obligation to perform, in conformity to Christ, into whose death they are baptized; and that is, "to walk in newness of life." Where note, For our encouragement, the account which the scripture gives of the properties of the new life, which such as are buried and risen with Christ, do assuredly live: and here we find it is the most noble life, the most delectable life, the most profitable life, the most holy and heavenly life: holy in its principle and motive, holy in its aim and end, holy in its rule and actings. In a word newness of life is a preparation for, and an introduction into, eternal life, and must needs be the most excellent life; for it is a life from God, it is a life laid out for God, yea, it is the life which God himself lives; and none must expect to live with him in heaven hereafter, that do not walk in newness of life here; but if we have our fruit unto holiness, our end will be everlasting life.

5 For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection:

Observe here, 1. A supposition, "if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death;" namely, by dying unto sin: if as Christ died, we die; he a natural, we a spiritual death: he for sin, and we to sin; he by way of expiation, suffering, and satisfying for sin; we by way of mortification, killings, and crucifying of sin. Learn thence, That all baptized persons ought to labor for, and endeavour after, a conformity to the death of Christ, in their dying daily unto sin. As he died a painful and shameful death for us, such a death should sin die in us; living a dying life, and dying a lingering but a certain death. Observe, 2. The apostle's inference drawn from the foregoing supposition; "if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection;" that is, we are under an obligation to imitate his resurrection, by rising from the death of sin, unto newness of life. Did he rise early out of his natural grave? so must we out of our spiritual. Did he arise to a new life? so must we arise and walk in newness of life. Did he arise never to die more? so must we that are dead to sin, live no longer therein. Observe, 3. How the power enabling us thus to die unto sin, and to live unto holiness, is derived from Christ by virtue of our implantation into him by faith: "if we have been planted together, &c." As the grass liveth, groweth, and fructifieth by the juice drawn from the stock into which it is planted; so christians being taken out of the old rotten stock, degenerate Adam, and planted into the noble stock, Christ Jesus, are, by virtue derived from him, raised to newness of life, into whom they are ingrafted. Learn hence, That we experience the power of Christ's death and resurrection, in enabling us to die to sin, and live unto God, only by virtue of a real implantation into Christ, by an operative and lively faith. "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin.

By the old man we are to understand our corrupt and derived nature, so-called, because it is as old as Adam, and derived from Adam; born and bred with us. This old man, or our corrupt and vicious nature, must be crucified, to show our conformity and likeness to Christ in his crucifixion. The cross bringeth pain, shame and death: the like must sin undergo in the work of mortification. By the body of sin, we are to understand the whole stock mass of corruption, compacted as it were into one monstrous body, prepared with all its members to commit actual sins. Called a body, because composed of many sinful passions and lusts, as the body is of many members, and also because they are executed by the body. And farther, because sin had a real substance in us, as if it were a body; not that sin is a substance, but the gravity of a substance. Now this body of sin must be destroyed, not as to actions only, but as to affections and inclinations also; It is not enough that we scratch this old man's face, but we must stab his heart and desire, in purpose, in endeavours: we must seek the death and destruction of all sin, "that henceforth we may not serve sin;" that is, that henceforward we should renounce the service of, and all relation to sin. Where note, 1. That before regeneration, we are all servants of, yea, slaves to sin; so many lusts, so many lords reigning in us, and tyrannizing over us. Note, 2. That it is one thing to sin, and another thing to serve sin; to serve sin, is to yield willing obedience, to indulge ourselves in any presumptuous act or course of sin. It is not the presence, but prevalency of sin, that destroys and damns the sinner; it is not the flesh being in us, but our being in the flesh, that displeaseth God. O! happy for us, if sin's dominion be taken away, though its life be prolonged for a season.

7 For he that is dead is freed from sin.

"He that is dead," that is, spiritually dead unto sin, in conformity to the death of Christ, "is freed from sin;" that is, not only from the guilt, but from the dominion and slavery of sin. Learn hence, That freedom from the bondage and tyranny, from the dominion and slavery of sin, is the privilege of all those that are crucified with Christ, and dead to sin. Freedom from sin consists in two things: 1. In dispossessing the soul of every evil habit and disposition. 2. In renouncing a sinful course of life and conversation. If sin be weakened in the heart, the fruit of that will appear in the life: the strength of sin lies in the love of sin; if that be broken, the power of sin is shaken.

8 Now, if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him.

Observe here, 1. A supposition, or presupposed condition; the thing supposed, is the baptized person's being dead with Christ; "if we be dead with him," that is, by the exercise of daily mortification: if we have fellowship and communion with him in his death, that as he died for sin, we daily die unto sin: then followeth, 2. The inference or conclusion, "we shall also live with him;" that is, we that have had fellowship with him in his death, shall have communion with him in his resurrection: we shall live with him a life of grace and glory, of regeneration and glorification, the one to newness of life, the other to everlasting life. Hence learn, that all those that are dead with Christ, have no reason to doubt but that they shall also live with him. But who are the persons that may be said to be dead with Christ? Ans. 1. All such as own the obligations which their baptismal vow and christian profession puts upon them, and solemnly lays them under; namely, to keep the whole gospel, even as they who were circumcised were obliged to keep the whole law. 2. Such as make conscience of it daily, endeavour to perform it, and obtain the success of their endeavour to perform it, and obtain the success of their endeavours in such a degree, that the reign of sin is broken, though sin itself be not totally destroyed. These may be said to be dead and crucified with Christ, having by the assistance of his Spirit, in some measure crucified the flesh with its inordinate affections and lusts; and if they here live like him, so they shall also live with him: "Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him."

9 Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

Here the apostle declares both the death which Christ once died, and the life which he now liveth. Observe, 1. The death which Christ died; "he died unto sin once," that is, either, 1. He died for sin once, namely, to expiate the guilt of sin, and to make atonement for sinners; or else, 2. He died unto sin; that is, to destroy, conquer and subdue sin in the hearts and lives of his children and people, by the aids and assistances of his Holy Spirit. Observe, 2. The life which Christ now lives after his resurrection; he liveth unto God, and dieth no more. Here note, 1. The perpetuity and immortality of his life; he dieth no more. Christ has done his work, in taking away the guilt and power of sin: let us look to it, that we do ours. Note, 2. The perfection and blessedness of his life. He liveth unto God; or liveth for ever with God; by which phrase is expressed that eternal and indissoluble union which the Son hath with the Father; he is one with him, and lives for ever in the enjoyment of him. Learn hence, That the due consideration of Christ's resurrection from the dead, will mightily promote the spiritual life in us. Thus it doth these three ways: 1. As it evidences the truth and verity of the christian religion, that Christ is no impostor or deceiver. In the judgment of the world, Christ died as a malefactor; but God justified him, acquitted and freed him from that imputation by raising him from the dead. 2. Christ's resurrection shows the perfection of his sacrifice and satisfaction, that nothing more is needful to take away sin; when the surety is let out of prison, the debtor may be assured that his debt is paid. 3. Christ's arising is a pledge and assurance of our resurrection, and so promotes holiness in us, by obliging us to live as the candidates of heaven, as the children of the resurrection, as becomes the heirs of such glorious hopes.

11 Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin; but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Here we have the two parts of our sanctification described, namely, mortification and vivification, dying unto sin, and living unto God. 1. Mortification, or dying unto sin; "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin;" that is, look upon the death of Christ, and your death with Christ, as a strong argument against the reign and power of sin, account yourselves dead unto sin. Now deadness argues three things. 1. Disability. Such as are dead, are disabled from working. Proportionable to the measure of our death unto sin, will be our disability to fulfil the lusts of it. Sin in a regenerate man is no more able to do all its will, than a crucified man is able to do what he will. 1 John iii. 9. "He that is born of God cannot commit sin;" not as others do, and as he himself formerly has done. 2. Deadness to sin argues disaffection towards sin, as well as disability; when we die to sin, our love to sin dieth. 3. Deadness argues liberty and unsubjectedness: he that is dead is free from sin, as the woman by death is freed from her husband, and the christian that is dead with Christ unto sin, "stands fast in that liberty wherewith Christ hath made him free." Observe, 2. The other part of our sanctification here declared, and that is, living unto God. This likewise consists in three things: 1. In having our sensitive appetites in subjection, and under the subjection and dominion of reason; when we are governed like men, by reason and conscience, not like beasts by sense and sensual inclinations. 2. In having reason illuminated by faith, guided and directed by divine revelation. And 3. When this faith inclines and enables us to live unto God, when faith begets in us a resolution to obey God, and to persevere in our duty to him. This is to be dead unto sin and alive unto God. Observe, lastly, Christians are said to be dead unto sin and alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Which phrase imports, that Christ is the root and principle of our spiritual life by faith, in whom we are enabled to live unto God, as the scion ingrafted into the stock, lives by the juice and nourishment it receives from the stock: so christians are alive unto God, in, by and through Jesus Christ, receiving from him that virtue, whereby their spiritual life is begun, carried on and maintained, and shall in due time be perfected and completed. From whence we learn, That Christ is not only an head of authority, but an head of influence to his church and members. "He strengthening them, they can do all things," but without him they can do nothing; that is, without interest with him, and influence of grace derived from him.

12 Let not sin, therefore, reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof:

Observe here, The duty which the apostle exhorts the Christians to; and that is to prevent the regency and dominion of sin: "Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies." But when is sin said to reign? Ans. When the bent and tendency of the heart is toward sin, and all the faculties of the soul are on sin's side, and wholly take its part; when sin is not opposed, or but slightly opposed; when sin is committed industriously, and temptations to sin prevail easily; when persons sin without any sense of sin, with small remorse and check for sin; then sin is in its throne, and reigos imperiously. But why doth the apostle say, Let not sin reign in your body rather than in your soul? Ans. Because sin and lusts do gratify the body exceedingly; that is, the sensual appetite, the brutish part of man: and farther, because they were acted and executed by the body, or outward man, called therefore the deeds of the body. But why doth the apostle here call it a mortal body? "Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies." Ans. 1. To put us in mind that the mortality of our bodies is the fruit and punishment of our sins, that sin having brought in death upon us, our bodies must die for sin. 2. To show the vanity and transitoriness of the delights and pleasures of sin, which do gratify a mortal body, which after all its pamperings must perish. 3. The apostle may probably call it a mortal body, to show that our conflicts with sin shall endure but a little while; ere long this mortal shall put on immortality. It may encourage us to be violent in the conflict; ere long we shall be victorious in the conquest. From the whole note, 1. That sin is a great and mighty king, which has a regal power over the enslaved sinner. Sin has the love of an husband, the power of a king, and the worship of God in the sinner's heart. Sin is a raging and commanding king, has the sinner's heart for its throne, the members of the body for its service, the world, the flesh and the devil for its grand council, lusts and temptations for its weapons and armory; and its chief fortifications are ignorance and sensuality, and fleshly reasonings. O deplorable degradation? That man, who was created God's subject, is by his shameful apostacy, become the vassal and slave of sin and satan. Learn, 2. That all baptized persons, who are dead with Christ unto sin, are strongly obliged to take care that sin reigns not in them, nor gets any dominion over them, by the desires and interests of this mortal body. And the obligations which christianity lays upon us, not to suffer sin to reign over us, are many and great; namely, the precepts, promises and threatenings of the gospel, the assistances of the Holy Spirit, the sense of baptismal and sacramental engagements. Happy we, if by the help of these, sin is dethroned, its empire dissolved, and it no longer "reigns in our mortal bodies, that we should obey it in the lusts thereof."

13 Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; but yield yourselves unto God; as those that are alive from the dead; and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

As if the apostle had said, "Sin, which has such a kingly and commanding power, will be calling upon you to give up the members of your bodies, and the faculties of your souls, as instruments or weapons for its service. But yield not you consent thereto; turn a deaf ear to the voice of sin, and hearken to the call of God, who commands you to yield yourselves unto him, and your members as instruments for his service." Here note, 1. A negative exhortation, "Yield not your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin." Let not sin or satan have an eye, an ear, a tongue, a foot, a hand, nay not so much as a little finger, devoted to their service; how strongly soever they may solicit and move for it. Note, 2. A positive injunction, "but yield your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." Learn hence, That christians ought not to suffer any members of their body to be employed in the service of sin, but to yield them all up unto God, in obedience to his will. Here are two opposite masters, God and sin; the one a tyrant and usurper, the other a rightful Lord and Master: and here also are two opposite employments, unrighteousness, by which is meant all sin, whereby we deal unrighteously with God, our neighbour and ourselves; and righteousness, whereby we give to God, to others, and ourselves, their respective dues. Now the apostle calls loudly upon us to render unto God the things that are God's: to yield every member of the body to him, and employ it for him; for the members of the body were all created by him, and redeemed for him, and shall be glorified with him. O let us then take heed of abusing any members of our body; let us not employ so much as a little finger or hair of our heads in the service of sin; for it is the Lord's: and let every one take heed of dishonoring God with his bodily members, lest he provoke God to deny him the comfortable use of the members of his body. When Jeroboam stretched out his hand against the prophet of God, he presently lost the use of his hand. O! how suddenly can God wither an hand or arm, that is stretched out to do mischief! it is a righteous thing for God to smite an abused eye with blindness, an abused ear with deafness, an abused foot with lameness, a swearing or forswearing tongue with paralytic deadness. Lord, how justly mayest thou recal thy favors, when we fight against thee with them? "Yielding the members of our bodies as weapons of unrighteousness unto sin!"

14 For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law but under grace.

Our apostle having, in the foregoing verses, exhorted them to take care that sin get not any dominion over them by obeying its motions, yielding to its inclinations, and employing the faculties of the soul, and any of the members of the body in the service of sin; in this verse he gives them an encouraging promise, that though sin may rebel, yet it shall reign no more in a regenerate person: and that if they did pray and watch against it, strive and contend with it, though it would have a being and existence in them, yet it should not have a regency and dominion over them; because they were not under the law, or covenant of works, which gave the knowledge of sin; and required exact and perfect obedience, but gave no strength to perform it; but under grace, under a gospel covenant, which administers strength to resist sin, and to overcome it: "Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace." Here observe, 1. The privilege of every regenerate and gracious person; Sin shall not have dominion over him. Learn hence, That sin should not, and shall not reign over those who are in a state of grace, and under the powerful influence of the Holy Spirit of Christ: De jure, it should not; de facto; it shall not reign. Sin shall not reign in us, nor have dominion over us. 1. Because of the mischievous influences of it, both with reference to God, and in relation to ourselves; it plucks the sceptre out of God's hands, and puts it into satan's. The throne of the heart is never empty, it is the design of sin to dethrone God and set up itself. And no less mischievous is sin to ourselves; for its servitude is base and burdensome, painful and shameful; the devil is a sure but a sad paymaster: he plagues them most who have done him most service. 2. Because of the unsuitableness of sin to our renewed state, we are not our own, but Christ's; his by purchase, his by conquest, his by covenant; now if after such engagements we suffer sin to reign and have dominion over us, we rescind our baptismal vow, ratified by our personal consent. 3. The reason of the foregoing privilege, why sin shall not have dominion over us, "because we are not under the law, but under grace." Quest. 1. But are not believers now under the law, though they live under the gospel? Ans. Yes: they are under the rule and direction of the law, but not under the curse and malediction of the law; they are not under the law as a covenant of life, but they are under it as an eternal rule of living. The law of God now binds the believer to the observation of it, as strictly as it did Adam in paradise; but upon the unwilling violation of it, he doth not incur the curse, Christ having redeemed us from the curse of the law, by being made a curse for us. Quest. 2. But were not those that lived under the law of old, in a sort, under grace as well as we? Ans. Yes, they were, but not in the same degree; good men then had help and assistance in the course of holiness and obedience, when they lived under the law; but they had it not by the law, but by the gospel, which was preached to them as well as unto us, Heb. iv. 2. This administers strength to subdue sin, and power to overcome it. Learn hence, That the gospel is a manifestation of the Spirit, and furnishes believers with sufficient helps against the power of sin, and with well grounded hopes of obtaining victory over it. The grace of the gospel gives hopes of victory over sin several ways: 1. Because it was the end of Christ's death to slay sin. 2. Because of the new nature put into us, which is to help us against sin. 3. By assuring us of the spirit's help, which is to assist us in the mortifying and subduing of sin; it inspires the Spirit's operation that we begin, carry on, and accomplish the work of mortification. 4. Because the gospel furnishes us with promises, and thereby gives us assurance of success: so then if from all these encouragements we bid a confident defiance unto, and make a courageous resistance against sin, it shall never have a final and full dominion over us, because "we are not under the law, but under grace."

15 What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

Here the apostle starts an objection, which some licentious persons might be ready to make: "If we are not under the law which condemns sin, but under the covenant of grace which allows the pardon, and promises the forgiveness of sin, why may we not then go on in sin, and continue in sin, forbidden by the law, seeing we are not under the law?" The apostle rejects such a suggestion with his usual note of detestation, God forbid. From hence we may learn, That it is an high abuse of the covenant of grace, to suppose or imagine, that it countenances any licentiousness, or allows any liberty to sin. The design of the new covenant is to recover from sin, not to encourage any to continue in sin. Learn, 2. That such doctrines and inferences are to be abhorred, which from the grace of God, in mitigating the law, would infer an utter abrogation of the law, denying that it hath a directive regulating power over a believer. True, we are delivered from the curse and condemnatory sentence of the law, from the severity and rigorous exactations of the law: but to refuse obedience to the law, under pretence of christian liberty; to sin because we are not under the law, but under grace; is a turning the grace of God into wantonness, and to use our christian liberty as an occasion to the flesh.

16 Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey? whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

Two things are here intimated by the apostle; 1. That all men really are, and ought to be reputed servants to that master whose works they do, and whose commands they obey: "Whom ye obey his servants ye are." Learn thence, That we may infallibly know whose servants we are, and what master we serve, Christ or satan, by examining and inquiring whose commands they are, which we execute and obey. 2. The apostle intimates that every person or servant shall receive a reward suitable to the master he serves, and proportionable to the work he does. If satan be our master, sin is our work, and death our wages; if we be the servants of God, obedience is our work, and eternal life will be our reward: "There is a reward for the righteous," and wages for the works of iniquity. The devil's drudges shall have full pay, but no content; the wages of sin is death; there's pay, such as it is, woeful pay, a black penny. God's servants, though they do not work for wages, yet they shall not work for nothing! "Verily there is a reward for the righteous;" a reward of mercy, not of merit; a reward of grace, not of debt: and accordingly the apostle says here, "His servants ye are whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." But why doth he not say of obedience unto life, as well as of sin unto death? then the antithesis had been more plain and full. Ans. Because though sin be the cause of death, yet obedience is not the cause of life, but only "the way to it: Via ad regnum, non causa regnandi."

17 But God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you.

We must not understand these words, as if the apostle blessed God, because they were once slaves to sin and satan: but thanks God, that the time of that bondage was past and over: as if he had said, "God be thanked, that though formerly ye were the servants of sin, yet since your conversion, you are become obedient to the precepts of christianity, having obeyed from the heart, that form of doctrine, or (according to the original) being cast into the mould of that doctrine, which was delivered to you. Learn hence, That to be turned from the service of sin, to the sincere obedience of the gospel, is a mercy that we can never be sufficiently sensible of, and bless God for. God be thanked, that although ye were the servants of sin, ye are no longer so. Learn, 2. That the doctrine of the gospel has a divine efficacy attending and accompanying it on the hearts of believers: it has a transforming power to change and fashion men's minds into the likeness of it, as the mould doth the metal that is cast into it: the doctrine of the gospel is the mould, and the heart is the metal, which when melted and cast into the mould, receives its form and figure. O happy they! who having all their days sat under the dispensation of the gospel, are able at last to say, We are transformed and changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord.

18 Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

19 I speak after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness, and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness.

Our apostle goes on to put the Romans in mind of their past state by nature, and of their present state by grace; they were once the servants of sin, but now free from sin, and made by Christ servants of righteousness: all believers are made free by Christ for service, not only free from serving; to be free to serve is infinitely better than to be free from service; such as are by Christ freed from sinful servitude, are best fitted for, and obliged to most spiritual service. Learn, hence, That such as are recovered from sin in God, should show the reality of their change, by being as zealous in the ways of holiness, as before they were earnest in the ways of sin. Shall we not do as much for God as for sin and satan! Is not he a better master, his work better service, and his wages a better reward? Lord, shall we not with as much zeal and vigor serve thee, as ever we served our lusts, those imperious exactors of our time and strength? O, had we the faculties and powers of angels, yet would our service for thee fall infinitely short of our obligations to thee! Observe next, How the apostle doth not barely urge the necessity of serving Christ in our regenerate state, but does enforce the proportion which our service now ought to bear to the disservice formerly done in our carnal state: As ye have yielded your members servants to iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness." Observe lastly, The great indignation and gracious condescension of Christ, that he should accept those members of ours as instruments of his service, which have been employed in the devil's service. "O blessed Jesus! wilt thou come into that vile heart of mine, which was once the seat of satan, where he has ruled, and every unclean lust been harboured? O Holy Spirit! shall that body be thy temple to dwell in now, which has been so often defiled with lots and vomit heretofore? Shall that tongue ever praise him in heaven, which has blasphemed him by oaths and horrid imprecations here on earth!" One would have expected, that Christ should rather have said, "Vile wretch! Satan has had the use and service of thy body, and all its members, from thy childhood and youth, unto this day; thy will has been his throne, thy memory his storehouse, and all thy members his tools and instruments to sin against me; thou didst indeed dedicate all these to my service and glory in thy baptism, but thou hast employed all these in satan's service for many years past: however, if now thou art willing to yield those very members unto righteousness, and to holiness, which formerly were servants unto uncleanness, I will both accept them, and reward thee for them.

20 For when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness.

That is, you were free de facto not de jure; when you were sin's servants, you were void of righteousness, that had no part of your service then; therefore sin should not have one jot of your service now: as righteousness had no part of your service in your carnal state, so there is no reason why sin should have any service from you in your gracious state. Learn, that such sinners as are now become servants to God, ought to be as free from sin, as before they were free from righteousness; it will evidently appear so, if we consider the great and good Master which we serve, the nature of our present work, the certainty and transcendency of our future reward, the obligations we lie under as creatures, as new creatures, by the law of creation, by the favor of redemption, by the promise and hopes of glorification; all this should engage us to the love and practice of universal holiness.

21 What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death.

Here the apostle puts them in mind of the several mis-chiefs and inconveniences which did at end their former vicious course of life; namely, unprofitableness, What fruit had ye?" Dishonourableness, "whereof ye are now ashamed?" Perniciousness, "The end of those things is death." Behold the complexion of sin's face, in this glass, it being for the time past unprofitable, for the time present shameful, for the time to come deadly; most men consult their profit, their honor, their pleasure, their safety; but sin disappoints us in them all. Observe, 1. The unprofitableness of sin for time past; What fruit had ye then? Are ye any thing the better for it? Verily, not at all; there is no solid benefit, no real profit to be got by sin; those sins which we think to be advantageous to us, when all accounts are cast up, will be found to be quite otherwise; all the gain of sin will turn to loss at last. Observe, 2. The dishonourableness and disparagement which sin brings along with it at present, "Whereof ye are now ashamed." Learn thence, That sin is really matter of shame and blushing, rendering us odious to God, infamous to others, loathsome to ourselves: it is a dishonor to our natures, a reproach to our reason and understanding: it doth therefore debase and degrade us, because it pollutes and defiles us, and is a reproach which we voluntarily bring upon ourselves. Observe, 3. The perniciousness of sin, or the fatal consequences of it. "The end of those things is death," natural, spiritual, and eternal: the latter is principally meant, which consists in lively apprehensions of the happiness invaluable which they have lost, and in a quick sense of the pains intolerable which they lie under, and this accompanied with despair of all future relief. Now, when misery and despair meet together, they make a man completely miserable. Good God! make sinners, all sinners thoroughly sensible of the manifest inconveniences of a wicked life; that it brings no present profit or advantage to them, that it will not bear reflection, but causeth shame; and that it is fatal in its event and issue! O then, let no profit tempt us, no pleasure entice us, no power embolden us, no privacy encourage us, to enter into any sinful way, or adventure upon any wicked word: for what fruit can we expect to have of those things whereof we are now ashamed, the end of which things is death?

22 But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

As the former verse represented to us the manifold inconveniences of a wicked life, so this verse acquaints us with the manifest advantages of a holy and religious course of life: and this, first, as to the present benefit and advantage of it, "Ye have your fruit unto holiness!" Secondly, In respect of the future reward of it, "And the end everlasting life." Here observe, 1. The description which the apostle makes of the change from a state of sin to a state of holiness: Ye are "made free from sin, and become the servants of God;" intimating, that a state of sin is a state of servitude and slavery; and indeed it is the vilest and hardest slavery in the world, it being the slavery of the soul, which is the best and noblest part of ourselves; it is the subjection of our reason to our sensual appetites, and brutish passions, which is as uncomely a sight as to see beggars ride on horseback, and princes walk on foot. Farther, It is a voluntary slavery, the sinner chooseth his servitude, and willingly puts his neck under this yoke. Again, the sinner makes himself a slave to his own servants, to those who were born to be subject to him, I mean his own appetites and passions, choosing rather a life of sense and to gratify his lusts, than to obey his reason. Observe, 2. The present benefit of an holy and religious life; ye have your fruit unto holiness. What fruit? Ans Inward peace and contentment of mind at present, length of days, health and prosperity in this world, solid joy and comfort at the hour of death, a good name and reputation among men after death; and it derives a blessing upon our posterity which we leave behind us. Observe, 3. The future reward and recompence of an holy life in the world to come: the end everlasting life; by which the apostle expresses both the happiness of our future state, and the way and means by which we are prepared and made meet to be partakers of it. 1. The happiness of our future state is expressed by the name everlasting life, which imports both the excellency of this state, it is a state of life; and the eternity, or endless duration of it, it is a state of everlasting life. 2. The way and means by which we are prepared and made meet to be partakers of this happiness, and that is, by the constant and sincere endeavours of a holy and good life: holiness in this life is the certain way, yea, the only way to happiness in the life to come. This appears from the will of God, who has connected the end and means together; from the justice of God, who will reward every man according to his work; from the indecency and unsuitableness of the contrary. Without meetness and fitness for heaven, there could be no happiness in heaven: heaven would not be a paradise, but a purgatory; not a place of happiness, but of the greatest uneasiness to a wicked man; therefore let us have our present fruit unto holiness, that our end may be everlasting life.

23 For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The apostle having all along throughout this chapter exhorted us to die daily unto sin, and to live unto God, concludes with a motive drawn from the different rewards and punishments in another world; eternal death will be the punishment of sin and sinners, and eternal life the reward of holiness and holy persons. Observe, 1. The punishment of sin and sinners; the wages of sin is death. Where note, The offence committed, sin; the punishment inflicted, death; the justice and proportion between the sin and the punishment, it is a stipend, or wages, a metaphor taken from soldiers, who at the end of their service receive their pay and stipend. Learn hence, That death is the punishment of sin, it is finis operis, though not operantis, the end of the work, though not the end of the worker. Quest. What death is that which is the punishment of sin? Ans. Both temporal and eternal: the former consists in the separation of soul and body from the presence of God, and in an imprisonment with devils and damned to all eternity. Quest. What sin is that which is punished with death? Ans. Consider sin in its demerit and desert, and so death is the punishment of every sin; consider it in its issue and event, and so it is the punishment only of that sin which is aggravated with impenitency: all sins are venial with respect to the mercy of God, and the repentance of a sinner: but the wages of every sin that reigns in us, and is not forsaken by us, is eternal death. Observe, 2. The reward promised to holiness, and insured to holy persons; the gift of God is eternal life. Here note, The happiness of holy persons: 1. In the Lord or Master whom they serve, God or Christ Jesus. 2. Happy is the reward of their services, eternal life. 3. Happy in the manner of their reward, it is a free gift, not wages; a metaphor taken from kings, who bestow upon such soldiers as have signalized themselves, over and above their stipend, coronets and laurels, as badges of their favor; unto which our apostle alludes, calling eternal life a donative, a freely dispensed favor, which may be considered in our eternal destination thereunto before all time, in our conversion and sanctification in time, which we may call the embryo of eternal life; and in our coronation and glorification, when at the end of time full possession of eternal life shall be given unto us: in all which instances heaven appears to be a free gift, not procured by any merit of ours, but by the mediation of Christ our Lord; "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

CHAPTER VII.

The apostle having in the foregoing chapter, declared how believers are freed from the power and dominion of sin, he proceeds in this chapter to declare that they also are freed from the yoke of the Mosaic law, that being dead to them, and they to it; and the apostle's argument runs thus: dead men are not held under the law, but they are freed and delivered from it. But as many as truly believe in Christ are dead to the law, and therefore are freed and delivered from it: that is, from the rigorous exactions of the law, and from the curse and malediction of the law; not from the guidance and direction of it, as a rule of life.

KNOW ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth.

As if the apostle had said, "you Jews, who study the law, and are well acquainted with it, cannot but know that the law of God hath power over a man to require of him exact, perfect, and perpetual obedience, and to accuse, condemn, and bind him over to the curse for the least breach and violation of it; and all this as long as he liveth under the law, and is not freed from the maledictions of it by faith in Christ." Learn hence, 1. That the law of God, in the force and strength of it, and as considered in itself, is a very hard lord and master, exacting perfect, personal, and perpetual obedience to its commands, and binding sinners over to the curse for the least transgression and violation of it. Learn, 2. That Jesus Christ has freed all believers from the rigor of the law, from the curse of the law, and from the irritation of the law; that is, from the power which is in the law, to stir them up to sin through the corruption of their own hearts and natures. Blessed be God! we are by Christ freed from, and dead to the law, as a covenant of life; but we are not under it, and may we all our days sit under the shadow of it with great delight, as an eternal rule of holy living.

2 For the woman which hath an husband, is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth: but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 So then if while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God.

Here the apostle doth exemplify and illustrate the foregoing assertion, namely, that believers are freed from the law, by a similitude taken from the law of marriage: as death freeth husband and wife from the law which bound them to each other, and empowereth the survivor to marry to another person; in like manner the death of Christ was the death of the law, as a covenant of works, holding us under the bond of the curse of it; and so his dying gave a manumission or freedom from that bond, and a capacity of espousal unto Christ; that so living in conjugal affection and obedience to him, we may be made fruitful by his Spirit, doing such things as are agreeable to the will of God, and tending to the glory of God, Ye are dead to the law by the body of Christ; That is, through the offering up of Christ's body upon the cross. Learn hence, 1. That he that is under the law, is as strictly bound to the rigor and curse of the law, as a married woman is bound to her husband during his life. Learn, 2. That one great end of Christ's death was to purchase our freedom from the law, that we might be capable of being espoused to himself. For whilst we were under the curse of the law, we were not in a capacity of being married unto Christ. He or she that is a slave to another, is not capable to be disposed of in marriage until made free. In like manner we were in bondage to the law, as well as in slavery unto sin and satan; but Christ has bought out our liberty, and thereby put us into a capacity of being espoused unto himself. Behold what manner of love the Redeemer has showed unto us, that we should be called his spouse and he our husband! he loved us, but not for any advantage he could have by us; for we had nothing but sin and shame to present him with. Nay, he must purchase us, and that with his own blood, before he could be united to us. Oh incomparable love! Oh fervent desires! Learn, 3. That though believers are freed from the rigor and curse of the law by the death of Christ, yet have they not an undoubted liberty, but are still under government, under an head and guide. As a wife is under a government of her husband, so are believers under the guidance and government of Jesus Christ, who in special manner guideth them by his word and Spirit; and there being said to be dead to the law, signifies no more than the law's not having dominion over them, in regard of the curse and condemnation of it.

5 For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sin, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death.

6 But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.

As if the apostle had said, "when we lived under the dispensation of the law, and were married to the law, we brought forth fruit suitable to that state and condition. But now being freed from the law, and married unto Christ, it is meet and right, equal and fit, that we should bring forth fruit answerable to our more excellent state and condition: that now we serve God, with new hearts and lives by the Spirit of Christ, according to the law of grace, and not carnally in the bondage and terror of the old law, called here the oldness of the letter." Learn hence, 1. That all sincere and serious christians, who are dead to the law, and espoused unto Christ, ought to bring forth fruit unto God suitable to their noble estate, and most honorable condition. Freedom and deliverance from the rigor and curse of the law ought to bind us more strongly to God, to love and serve him, to glorify and obey him. Learn 2. That all true believers, who are freed from the rigor and curse of the law, ought to serve the Lord in true holiness both of heart and life, and to yield a new and universal obedience to him. This the apostle here calls the newness of the Spirit, to intimate to us, that new obedience is the work of the Holy Spirit in us, as the author of all grace and sanctification. And whereas the newness of the spirit is opposed to the oldness of the letter; that is, the ministry of the law, which of itself is a dead letter, discovering sin, but not discovering how sin may be either pardoned or subdued; we may gather, that the law of God, and indeed the whole word of God, without the Spirit, is but a dead letter, unable to work grace and holiness in us, or to excite and quicken us unto newness of life. Whenever then we place ourselves under the word, let us pray with David, "Lord open thou mine eyes, that I may see the wondrous things of thy law."

7 What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, thou shalt not covet.

Observe here, 1. The objection (which the apostle answers) that some were ready to make against the holiness of the law. He had affirmed at ver. 5. that, "the motions of sin were stirred up by the law." "If so, say some then the law may seem to be the cause of sin; God forbid; says the apostle. The thought of such a conclusion ought to be abhorred. Hence learn, 1. That the holiest doctrines and truths of God are subjects to be perverted and abused, and to have absurd inferences and conclusions drawn from them. 2. That the ministers of Christ must be able and careful, not only to propound the truth soundly, but to defend it solidly, against all cavils, and wicked objections whatsoever, and to declare their utter detestation and utmost abhorrence of any such opinion as reflects dishonor upon the holy law of God. Observe, 2. The apostle's argument to confute this wicked notion of the law's being the cause of sin: I had not known sin, but by the law. As if the apostle had said, "That which forbids sin, discovers and condemns sin, cannot be the cause of sin; but so doth the holy law of God: it makes sin manifest in and to the conscience of the sinner; therefore the law is not sin, no exciter to it, or cause of it." Learn hence That the law of God is so far from being the cause of sin, that by it men come to a more clear, full, distinct, and effectual knowledge of sin; I had not known sin, but by the law. That is, not so clearly and effectually, so as to be duly humbled for it, and turned from it. The light of nature shows a difference between good and evil, but the law of God represents sin as the evil of evils. In it, as in a glass, we behold the foul face of sin, and are convinced by it of the monstrous evil that it is. Observe, 3. How the apostle produces his own experience in this matter, and gives a particular instance in himself, that he had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet: that is, he should not have understood that the first irregular motions of the heart, the first inclinations and desires of the soul towards sin, (though not consented to by the will) were evil, had he not, by a more attentive consideration of the tenth commandment, found that they were so. Learn hence, 1. That lust or concupiscence of sin; that is, original lust, the first motions of corrupt and rebellious nature, whereby our inclinations are towards evil, though our wills do not fully consent to evil. Learn, 2. That so holy and spiritual is the law of God, that it discovers the sin of nature, and condemns the first motions and inclinations of the soul to sin, even to the pit of hell. All the wisdom of the heathen, yea, of the wisest and most learned persons in the world, was never able to discover the first motions arising from our rebellious natures to be sin; only the holy law of God makes them known, and discovers them to be sins. "I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Such is the holiness of the law of God, that it requires not only the purity of our actions, but also the integrity of all our faculties.

8 But sin taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead.

Observe here, A concession or grant made by the apostle, that although the law was not the formal cause of sin, yet sin was an accidental event of the law, through the depravity and corruption of our natures; lust or concupiscence in us being stirred up more strongly, and breaking forth more violently in us, by being prohibited and restrained by the law. As things forbidden us are the more desired by us; the more the law would restrain sin through our corruption, the more it enrages sin: as the more you could dam up a torrent, the higher it swells. Thus, "sin takes occasion by the commandment to work all manner of concupiscence in us." Learn hence, That such is the depravity and perverseness of our present natures, that there is found within us a propensity and inclination to all sin; and although the law of God doth not give the least countenance to sin, yet sin takes occasion, from the restraints of the law, to grow more impetuous, and is the more irritated by being prohibited; and consequently it is not from ourselves, but from God's restraining grace, that those evil inclinations, which are in our hearts do not break forth in our lives. The apostle adds, Without the law sin was dead: that is, without the knowledge and due consideration of the law, sin is comparatively dead: that is, the corruption of nature lies hid, and is not so much known to be sin; nor had it so much power to terrify the conscience, and to stir up inordinate affections, as after the law is known and duly considered. Learn hence, That such as either know not the word and law of God, or do not duly consider it, have very little sense of inward pollution. But their corruption lies, as it were dead in them, and they in that without touching the conscience, or laying the soul under sensible apprehensions of its sin and danger: Without the law sin is dead. Sin in the conscience is like a lion asleep in his den; it awakes not, stirs not, terrifies and accuses not, till the law of God rouses it; and then the sinner sees himself under the curse, and liable to perdition.

9 For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died.

As if the apostle had said, "Formerly, when I lived a Pharisee, and had the law in my hand, but did not consider in my heart what exactness and perfection it required in my life, I contented myself with an outward observation of it, and concluded my state to be good and safe: but when I came to a right understanding of the word and law of God, and to be convinced by it, that the inward lustings and inordinate desires of the heart were sins, then I found myself a guilty creature, obnoxious to wrath, and in a state of death." Here note, 1. The good opinion the apostle had, and all unregenerate men have of themselves before conversion: I was alive once. By life understand liveliness, confidence and assurance of his good estate and condition; he was full of vain hope; false joy, and presumptuous confidence. Learn hence, That natural and unregenerate persons are usually very full of groundless confidence and cheerfulness, without the least suspicion of their bad estate and sad condition: I was alive without the law once. Note, 2. The apprehension and opinion which St. Paul had, and others will have of themselves, when they came under the regenerating work of the Spirit, by the ministry of the word and law of God: When the commandment came I died. Death here stands opposed to life before, and denotes the sorrows, fears, and tremblings which seized upon his soul, when he was convinced of the badness of his condition: it stabbed all his carnal mirth, joy, and jollity, at the very heart: I died. Note, 3. The cause and reason of this wonderful alteration and change of judgment in the apostle; it was the commandment and law of God: When the commandment came, that is, close and home to my heart and conscience with a divine efficacy. The commandment was come before to him by way of promulgation, and he had the literal knowledge of it; but now it came in the convincing power and spiritual application of it. Accordingly, sin revived, that is, the sense of sin was more lively imprinted upon his soul; and now he died, all his vain hopes gave up the Ghost now, and his sin and guilt stared in the face of his conscience. Learn hence, that there is a mighty efficacy in the word or law of God to kill vain confidence, and quench carnal mirth in the hearts of men, when God sets it home upon their consciences: "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died."

10 And the commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

Observe here, 1. The natural end and use of the commandment or law of God. It was ordained unto life; that is, it was given for a rule of life, and promised eternal salvation to the perfect fulfilling of it. But no man since the fall being able perfectly to fulfil the law in his own person, can be justified by the law in the sight of God. However, the proper end for which the law was ordained, was to give life to them that should perfectly keep it. Observe, 2. The contrary use which the apostle found the law to be of, with reference unto himself. What was ordained to life, he found to be unto death: that is, through his own corruption and transgression, it became an occasion of death to him, by binding him over to punishment, and rendering him obnoxious to the wrath of God. Thus the word of God, the sweet and saving word of God, that word which God had ordained to bring men to life and salvation, is found to some the savor of death unto death; but the fault is not in the word, but in themselves.

11 For sin taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.

As if the apostle had said, "sin, or the corruption of my heart and nature, being stirred up by the commandment which forbids lust, and condemns it, enticed me, and persuaded me, and prevailed over me, to yield to the lusts of my own heart, and then condemned me, and slew me for yielding to them." See here the true and genuine nature of sin: it first deceives, and then destroys: it deceived me, saith the apostle, and then slew me. Sin doth perfectly besot the creature, and renders it injudicious: it befools and deceives us, it pollutes and defiles us, it doth debase and degrade us, and, without repentance, damns and destroys us. God keeps us from being hardened in sinning through the deceitfulness of sin; let no prophet tempt us, no pleasure entice us, no power embolden us, no privacy encourage us, to adventure upon any known sin; for its embraces are deadly, it leads to death, and ends in death; after it has deceived us, it certainly destroys us, "sin taking occasion, deceived me, and slew me."

12 Wherefore the law is holy; and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

Observe here, What care and holy caution the apostle uses to vindicate and clear the holy law of God from all fault and blame, charging his guilt, not upon the commandment, but upon the corruption of his own heart, which took occasion to be stirring in him, and by the commandment slew him, affirming nevertheless, that the law of God in itself, and in its own nature, is holy, just and good. Here note, that the apostle adorns the law with the most excellent eulogy and commendation. It is holy, 1. As it enjoins all acts of piety towards God; namely, adoration of his majesty, imitation of his purity, resignation to his providence, obedience to his commands. 2. It is just, as it directs us in our duty to others in every capacity and relation wherein we stand, and obliges us to walk by that rule of equity, to do to others as we would they should do unto us. 3. It is good to the man that keeps it, commanding nothing but what is influential upon his well being both here and hereafter. Could we set aside the authority of the Lawgiver, yet all the precepts of the law, for their moral goodness, deserve our esteem, and choice, and entire observation; nothing being required of us but what is our duty and interest as men, and which tends to the perfecting and ennobling of our natures: well then might our apostle determine, that "the law is holy, the commandment holy, and just, and good."

13 Was then that which is good, made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

From what the apostle had said in the former verse, he moves an objection to this verse: "seeing the law was holy, and just, and good, how comes it to be unto death?" "Was that which was good made death unto me?" To this he replies, both by way of negation, God forbid; for to find fault with the law, is to find fault with God himself! and also by way of affirmation, asserting, that sin is the true cause of death. The commandment indeed condemns, or is death to the sinner, yet not of itself, but because of sin; as we say of a condemned malefactor, it is not the judge, but the law, that condemns him; or, strictly speaking, it is not the law, but his own guilt, that condemns him; the judge is but the mouth of the law, to denounce the sentence that guilt deserves. And hereby sin appears to be what really it is, sinful, exceedingly sinful, masculinely and vigorously sinful, excessively and out of measure sinful, extremely and beyond all expression, nay, beyond our comprehension, sinful. Learn hence, 1. That the law of God, in the whole, and in every part thereof, is holy and good, both in itself and in its own nature, and relatively in its institution with respect to man: for it was ordained unto life, ver. 10. Learn, 2. That this good and holy law violated and transgressed, condemns and kills, and assigns a person over unto death. Learn, 3. That though the law condemns man's sin, and man for his sin, yet still the law is good and not to be blamed; the law is to be justified by man, even when it condemns man: as man had no reason to break the law, so he has no cause to find fault with the law, though it binds him over to death for the breaking of it. Learn, 4. That it is not the law, but sin, that worketh man's death and ruin. Sin aims at no less, and will end in no less; for the wages of sin is death. Yet, 5. Sin certainly worketh man's death and destruction by that which is good, to wit the law; for when sin hath used man to break the law, it then makes use of the law to break man; that is, to undo him by condemnation and death for breaking of it. Lastly, from hence it follows, that sin is therefore exceedingly, yea, unmeasurably sinful, poisonous and pernicious, because it kills men, and not only so, but it kills men by that which is good, to wit, the law. That which was appointed for life, becomes the occasion of death; consequently sin is the most villainous, virulent, and deadly thing that ever was in the world. "Ah! sinful sin, hyperbolically and out of measure sinful, thou art a contempt of God's sovereign authority, a contrariety to his infinite holiness, a violation of his royal and righteous law, and the highest affront that can be offered to the majesty of the great and glorious God. Thou hast made man like a beast, like the worst of beasts: worse than the worst of beasts; yea, sin is worse than the devil himself, than hell itself. Sin made the devil what he is: a devil and hell never had an existence till sin had one: God was never angry till sin made him angry. Oh! sin, it is thou that makest hell to be hell; and the more sin the more hell. Well might the apostle then say here, "Sin that it might appear sin, worketh death in me, and is become exceeding sinful."

14 For we know that the law is spiritual:—

Still observe, How the apostle goes on to assert the purity and spirituality of the law of God: The law is spiritual; spiritual in the author of it, God, who is an Holy Spirit; spiritual in the matter of it, requiring spiritual obedience to be paid unto it, requiring perfect purity both of heart and life. Learn hence, That the moral law of God is in the nature of it purely spiritual, perfectly holy, being breathed forth by the Holy Spirit of God, and requireth perfect purity both of heart and life, and perfect conformity to it, both in the inward and outward man. Hence some derive the word which we translate law, from a root which signifies to behold and consider, to contemplate and look about: intimating thereby that the holy and spiritual law of God is diligently to be observed and considered, looked into and meditated upon; it being so perfectly pure and holy, that it requires not only the purity of our actions, but also the integrity of our very faculties, our hearts and natures.

—But I am carnal—

So may, 1. every unregenerate man truly say, I am carnal, having not only flesh in me, but prevailing in me, sin having a regency and dominion over me: he fights under the banner of corrupt nature, acting in a willing, ready, and full subjection to sin, and compliance with it; he is carnal, being under the power and unbroken strength of carnal lusts, and sensual propensions, and following them in the daily course of his life. 2. I am carnal, may a regenerate person truly say, 1. With respect to that exact purity and spirituality both of heart and life; which the holy law of God requires: the law is spiritual, but I, alas! compared with that spiritual law, am but a lump of corruption, coming infinitely short, God knows of that uprightness and spirituality which the law of God requires. 2. A regenerate person may truly say he is carnal, that is, in part so, having much, too much carnality in his carnal affections found with him, and carnal infirmities cleaving to him: such as are truly acquainted with the spirituality of the word and law of God, and also well acquainted with their own hearts, do see sufficient cause to complain of carnal corruption abiding in them and cleaving to them. I am carnal, have said, and may say the holiest of saints, with respect to the perfect measure and degrees of holiness. Thus that holy and blessed martyr, Mr. Bradford, complains, styling himself the hard-headed, unbelieving, earthly-minded Bradford; yet was a man of a very tender spirit, full of faith, fruitful in good works, and exceedingly mortified to the world. Dost thou groan under the burthen of indwelling corruption? know, that the whole spiritual creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together with thee until now: but blessed be God for the hopes of a deliverer and a deliverance, —Sold under sin.

This phrase is borrowed from bondmen or captives, some of which are sold, others sell themselves into captivity. The unregenerate man, with Ahab, sells himself to work wickedness. This denotes wilfulness and obstinacy; such a person doth voluntarily prostitute himself to the lust of satan: a regenerate person doth not, with Ahab, sell himself, but is sold, like Joseph by his brethren, and Samson by his wife; being rather passive than active: he is sometimes sin's captive, but never sin's slave; he is never sin's willing servant, but sometimes its unwilling prisoner. The holiest and best of saints, though not held in wilful slavery, thralldom and bondage unto sin, yet corruption holds them too much, though in part unwillingly, under the tyranny of sin; they do not yield to sin, as good subjects yield to their lawful prince, voluntary obedience; but as captives yield to a tyrant, paying him involuntary subjection. His soul is betrayed, says one, by corruption to temptation, and by temptation to corruption.

15 For that which I do, I allow not; for what I would that I do not; but what I hate, that do I.

These words are an argument to prove what the apostle had asserted in the foregoing verse: namely, That he was held under the power of sin unwillingly, because he did not allow or approve of any evil which he did contrary to the holy law of God, but did hate and abominate it, was displeased with it, and with himself for it. An unregenerate man's judgment and conscience is sometimes against sin, which makes him afraid to commit it; but a gracious person's will, heart, and affections, are all set against sin: indeed there is a regenerate and an unregenerate part in the christian's will (he is sanctified totus, but not totaliter) so far the will is renewed, it hates all sin, and meditates the ruin and destruction of it. And observe, It was not this or that particular evil, but all evil which the apostles hated. A wicked man may hate a particular evil, as Absalom hated Amnon's uncleanness; but to hate all sin, is the character of none but a regenerate person. Observe, lastly, That a good man sometimes, through the power of corruption, and the prevalency of temptation, doth that evil which is disallowed and disapproved by him: yea, which is very odious and hateful to him: he loathes in part what he doth, and afterwards loathes himself for the doing of it; and when he doth evil, allows not of the evil that he doth.

16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law, that it is good.

17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

Note, 1. How readily the apostle consented to the equity and holiness of God's law; he did love the law of God, which made holiness his duty: I consent, says he, to the law, that it is good; he assented to it in his judgment, he complied with it in his will, he clave to it in his inward affections. So far as a person is regenerate, his heart doth correspond with God's law: but may not an unregenerate person consent in his judgment to the law of God, own it to be good, approve it to be holy? Did not Herod hear the word with gladness, and the stony ground receive the word with joy. Ans. They may in their judgments approve, yet not in their hearts like and love the law of God: at the same time, that they commend it with their mouths, they cast it behind their backs. Note, 2. How the apostle disclaims, though not disowns, the evil done by him: "It is no more I, but sin that dwelleth in me." As if he had said, "My corrupt affections sometimes overpower me against the approbation of my judgment, and the inclination of my will: But it is not I (according to my better part, from which I am denominated,) but sin dwelleth in me." Learn hence, That if we disclaim the evil done by us, as being contrary to us, contrary to the habitual frame and disposition of our hearts, contrary to the deliberate purpose and settled resolution of our wills, Almighty God will not charge our failings upon us to our condemnation, but mercifully distinguish between the weakness of the flesh, and the willingness of the spirit; between us, and sin that dwelleth in us. Sin will remain and dwell, but it must not reign and rule: it is a busy inmate in a gracious heart, but it is a lordly master, yea, an imperious tyrant in a sinner's heart. Happy he that can in truth and sincerity say, "It is not I, but sin that dwelleth in me."

18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

Observe here, 1. The apostle's proposition; "I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing:" That is, in my corrupt and unregenerate nature, there is nothing truly and spiritually good; and this I myself am sensible of, and privy to, and very well acquainted with. Learn thence, That good men are intimately acquainted with themselves, privy to their own corruptions, sensible of the indwelling presence of sin in themselves, which calls upon them to be humble, and excites them to be watchful: "I know that in me dwelleth no good thing." Observe, 2. The confirmation of the foregoing proposition; for to will is present with me; that is, to will what is good, to purpose good, and to desire that which is good, is present with me; but I want ability to perform that good I purpose. Learn hence, That though to will that which is good is ready and at hand with God's regenerated children, yet through that corruption which still abides in them, they are sometimes disabled for doing that good which they purpose, design, and desire to do; and that little good they do, is very brokenly and imperfectly done. A mortal father may soon beget an immortal child, as an imperfect saint can perform any thing perfectly good: there can never be more in the effect, than there is in the cause: a weak grape cannot make strong wine: whilst we are saints on earth, though we may and ought to aspire after, yet we shall not be able to attain unto, the sinless perfection of the saints in heaven: a real christian is one that is continually laboring after the attainment of that which he knows in this life he shall never attain unto; namely, perfection in grace: in heaven we shall have no occasion to complain, that "how to perform that which is good, we find not."

19 For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

Here the apostle repeats what he had before asserted; namely, That he did not always do that good which he desired to do, but sometimes being overpowered by the flesh, did what the law prohibits, and what he would not do. And farther adds, That it was no longer himself, (choosing and approving the action in his mind) that did this, but sin dwelling in him, which sometimes hurried him to the commission of it, against the inclination and law of his mind. Here note, 1. That the corruption of nature in the soul of man, is a real but a distinct thing from the soul itself. A dweller in an house, is really distinguished from the house he dwells in. Sin is not a substance, but the pravity and depravity of our faculties. Note, 2. That the corruption of our own hearts and natures, is the root and cause of all that evil that is done by us. Note, 3. That the habitual bent, the settled purpose, and determinate resolution of a Christian's will, is against all sin; and he doth not sin with the full consent of his will. Although there are not two distinct persons, yet there are two distinct principles in a regenerate man. Sin and he are distinguished. In a good man there is a conflict between sin and grace, but in an unregenerate man there is no combat between the flesh and the Spirit, for he is all flesh: the flesh and he are one; the combat is not between grace and sin, but between one sin and another, and between one faculty and another: Light in the understanding opposes lust in the will: whereas the conflict in a gracious person is not between his judgment and his will, but betwixt the regenerate and unregenerate part in his will. Sin, like a preternatural bias clapped upon the soul, sometimes carries it away from the mark which the christian aims at. However, though a good man be overcome in praelio, yet not in bello; though grace is sometimes foiled in the combat, yet it keeps the field, maintains and recovers its ground. The saint will not throw down his weapon till he lays down his life, and grace shall at length be finally victorious.

21 I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me.

As if the apostle had said, "I verily find sin, having an impelling power and impulsive virtue in it, like a law in my members, thwarting and contradicting the inclinations of my mind, and the resolutions of my will, that when I would do good, evil is present with me, to oppose and hinder me from the doing of it." Note here, A double burden which the apostle complained of; 1. Of the presence of sin at all times, evil is present with me. It follows me, as if he had said, and is as inseparable from me as my shadow. This he calls a law, because of its mighty power and efficacy and because of its constant residence in his nature. 2. Of the operation of it, especially at some particular and special times and seasons. When I would do good, then evil is present with me. As if he had said, "when I address myself to any holy duty, and heavenly employment, when I desire and design to draw near to God, and would hope for the sweetest fellowship and communion with him, then, alas! then to my great sorrow, is evil present with me. Ah, when I promise myself most comfort and communion in the enjoyment of my God, how do I then find a dead heart in the best season, a dead and drowsy spirit when I would be most spiritual in the duties I perform!" From whence learn, that the holiest and best of saints in this their imperfect state, do sensibly feel, and sadly bewail, the working of sin and corruption in them; and that in the very seasons and opportunities of their communion with God: when I would do good, then evil is present with me.

22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man.

If by the inward man we understand the mind and understanding of a man only, then the unregenerate person may be said to delight in the law of God, with Ezekiel's hearers, Ezek. xxxiii. 32. with Herod, Mark vi. 20. with the stony ground, Matt. xiii. 20. That is, they delight and satisfy themselves with the bare hearing of the word, and with a national and speculative knowledge of their duty; either the eloquence of the preacher whom they hear, or the pleasingness of some truths which they hear, affects them with a sudden joy; they delight to hear the word, but they take no delight to do it. It is neither a spiritual delight, nor an abiding delight, that such men take in the law of God. If by the inward man we understand that which St. Peter calls the hidden man of the heart, the new man, or the regenerate part in man, as being seated in the inward powers and faculties of the soul; then, to delight in the law of God, is to love it for its purity and spirituality, because it makes holiness our duty; to take pleasure in the knowledge of the law, in meditating upon it, and in practising every good duty contained in it, and enjoined by it. Thus David did delight to do the will of God, because the law of God was within his heart. Where there is lex in corde, there will be cor in lege; where the law of God is in the heart, there the heart will be engaged in that obedience which is by the law required, and by the Christian performed. He delights in the law, and the law is delighted by him.

23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

Here observe, That in this and the foregoing verses, mention is made of four laws contending one against another, whereof two are on one side, and two on the other; namely, the law of God, and the law of the mind; the law of the members, and the law of sin. By the law of God is understood the word of God; by the law of the mind, is understood in the regenerate, grace in the heart: in the unregenerate, light in the conscience; by the law of the members, understand original lust and concupiscence; by the law of sin, those corrupt principles according to which lust governs. Learn hence, That there is a conflict or combat between the law of the mind, and the law of the members, and thus both in regenerate and unregenerate persons. This appears, 1. By the testimony of nature speaking in the heathen. Thus Medea, videri meliora proboque, deteriora sequor; their rational appetite displeaseth reason, and leads it captive. 2. By the testimony of scripture, and that 1. As to the unregenerate, witness Herod, Mark vi. 26 who had a conflict between lust and conscience: so had also Pilate upon the occasion of our Saviour's death: conscience bid him spare, popularity bid him kill. 2. As to the regenerate, Gal. v. 17. "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, &c." 3. By the testimony of experience; who finds not every day within himself a contest of contrary motions and inclinations? A Christian's bosom is like Rebecca's womb, it has twins of two contrary natures: a smooth Jacob and rough Esau, flesh and spirit. But wherein consists the difference between that conflict which is found in the natural and spiritual, the regenerate and unregenerate man? Ans. 1. The conflict in an unregenerate person is not between grace and sin, but between one lust and another; the struggle is, which lust shall be in the throne, as rebels in a kingdom, having cast off the authority of their lawful prince, every one anathemes at the sceptre, and would command and rule. Thus every lust is ambitious of superiority, and usurps a regency in the soul: so that though the sinner oft changes his master, yet not his servitude, he is a slave still. Now, from this contrariety of lust rebelling in a carnal heart, he is necessitated to oppose the lust which he favors less, to gratify another which he favors more. Thus the conflict is between sin and sin, not between grace and sin, 3. As an unregenerate man's combat with sin is betwixt one lust and another, so it is only between one faculty and another. Thus light in the understanding opposes lust in the will. The judgment and conscience of a sinner says, "Oh do not that abominable thing which the soul of God hates." But then lust in the will votes for it, and is angry with conscience for being so bold as to oppose it. Whereas, the conflict in a regenerate person, is betwixt grace and sin, not betwixt sin and sin; and not betwixt the understanding and the will, but betwixt the regenerate and unregenerate part in the same will. And although grace be foiled in a particular combat, yet it keeps the field, and the christian will not throw down his weapon, till he lays down his life.

24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

These words are a sad and sorrowful complaint of the present and too great prevalency of indwelling sin and unsubdued corruption: and in them observe, 1. The person complaining, St. Paul. 2. The matter of the complaint, not of affliction, but of sin: not of a death, but of a body of sin and death; which he carried about with him. 3. The manner of the complaint, it is with vehemence and affection, it is vox anhelantis, the voice of one that pants and breathes after deliverance; not of one that doubted, much less desponded of a deliverer and a deliverance. As if the apostle had said, 'Oh how am I tired and wearied with continual conflicts and strivings with indwelling sin? How do the remains of unsubdued sin, and (as yet) unmortified corruption, oppress and afflict me? who will deliver me? and when shall deliverance be enjoyed by me?' Learn hence, that there are sad remains of indwelling sin, and unsubdued corruption, in the very best and holiest of God's children and servants in this life, which they sadly complain of, sensibly groan under, daily watch against, continually conflict with, and shall, in God's time, be fully and finally delivered from.

25 I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord—

Here the apostle espies a deliverer, the Lord Jesus Christ; one that had delivered him from the condemning and reigning power of sin, and would ere long deliver him from the presence, as well as prevalence of sin. And whereas the apostle styles Christ Jesus not his Lord, but our Lord, that is, the Lord of all believers; it gives us the consolation and joyful assurance, that the happy hour is at hand when we shall be everlastingly freed from the indwelling presence of sin, from all temptations to sin, from all inclinations to offend, yea, from all possibility of sinning: when we shall obey God with vigor, praise him with cheerfulness, love him without measure, fear him without torment, trust in him without despondency, serve him without weariness, without interruption or distraction, being perfectly like unto God as well in holiness, as in happiness, as well in purity as in immortality. Lord strengthen our faith in the belief of this desirable happiness (when and where nothing shall corrupt our purity, nothing shall disturb our peace) and set our souls a longing for the full fruition and final enjoyment of it.

—So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh, the law of sin.

Here the apostle acknowledgeth two principles in himself, grace and sin, a sweet and bitter fountain, from whence do flow suitable streams. The law of the mind inclined to serve the law of God; but the law in his members disposed him to obey the law of sin. The habitual bent of a good man's heart is to serve the law of God; he loves it, and delights to obey it. Yet sometimes, contrary to his firmest resolutions through the power of temptation and indwelling corruption, he is carried aside contrary to his covenant and his conscience; but he laments it, it is his grief, his shame, the sorrow of his heart, the burden of his soul, that ever he should be so false and unworthy. In fine, if a good man, at a particular time, does the evil that he hates, he always hates the evil which he does. Blessed be God, sin shall never hurt us, if it does not please us. As God will not finally judge us, so we ought not censoriously to judge one another, or injuriously to judge ourselves by a single act, by a particular action, but by the habitual and constant bent of our resolutions, and the general course and tenor of our conversation. Blessed be God for the covenant of grace.

CHAPTER VIII.

This chapter is a summary of evangelical duty, and a magazine of christian comfort: we cannot wish to be more holy than to do what is here enjoined, nor more happy than to possess what is here promised. For sublimity of matter, for variety of evangelical truths, for admirable support and comfort to believers, this chapter is not inferior to any part whatsoever of the holy scriptures. Here the believer's union with Christ, and exemption from condemnation, the Spirit's agency, in freeing from the dominion of sin, the law's inability to justify and save, the incarnation and satisfaction of Christ, are set forth and declared. In short, the whole chapter is consolatory; there is a vein of heavenly comfort running through the whole body of it. With this it begins, and with this it ends. It begins with no condemnation to believers, ver. 1. It ends with no separation from the love of God, ver. 38, 39. Let the sincere and serious christian study, weigh, digest, believe, and apply, what is laid down in this chapter, and let him walk dejectedly if he can. This chapter before us, may be divided into three parts: The first contains powerful supports for such as groan under the burthen of indwelling sin. The second contains consolations under sufferings and afflictions. The third abounds with high and holy triumphs over both sin and sufferings, to the end of the chapter.

THERE is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit.

Observe here, 1. The apostle doth not say, there is no corruption in them that are in Christ Jesus, but there is no condemnation to them. Perfection in holiness is the saint's aim in this life, his attainment only in the next. 2. He doth not say there is no correction belongs to them, but no condemnation: corrected they may be, condemned they never shall be; yea, they are therefore corrected that they may never be condemned. 3. The apostle doth not say, there is nothing that deserves condemnation, nothing damnable in them, but no actual condemnation belonging to them. 4. He doth not say, there is no condemnation to this or that particular believer, to himself, and such as had attained to the like measures and degrees of grace with himself; but he extends the privilege to all believers indefinitely, there is no condemnation to them: that is, to any of them that are in Christ Jesus. 5. He says not, there shall be no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, but there is now none; he hath everlasting life, and is already passed from death to life. 6. Our apostle doth not say, there are not many condemnations belonging to them, but not any: neque deus, not one either from law or gospel; for the gospel has its condemnatory sentence as well as the law; yea, the highest and sorest condemnation, is that which the gospel denounces, John iii, 20. This is the con- damnation, &c. Learn hence, 1. That it is a great felicity and happiness, not to be obnoxious to condemnation. 2. That this felicity and happiness is the portion of all those, and only those, that are in Christ Jesus; not by external federation, and visible profession only, but by virtue of a personal implantation into him by faith. Learn, 3. That such as are thus in Jesus Christ, obey not the inclinations of corrupt nature, but the holy motions of the blessed Spirit of God. Learn, 4. That an uniform and constant course of holy walking in the paths of sincere obedience, is both the indubitable mark and character, and also the indispensable duty and obligation of all such as are freed by Christ from condemnation.

2 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

If by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus be meant the doctrine of the gospel, which is called the ministration of the Spirit, then the note is, that the gospel or new covenant is a law, that it is the law of the Spirit in Christ Jesus, and that it sets the sincere Christian at liberty from the slavery of sin, and the condemning power of the law. If by the law of the Spirit of life be understood a real and vital principle of regenerating grace, working a new and heavenly life in the soul with great power and efficacy; thence we learn, 1. That the holy and blessed Spirit of God is a Spirit of life. 1. Essentially and formally in himself: as the Father hath life in himself, so the Spirit hath life in himself also. And, 2. Effectively or casually, with respect to us. He is a quickening, or life giving Spirit, being the original spring and fountal cause of that spiritual life, which is in a gracious soul. Learn, 2. That every person before the Spirit of life takes hold of him, is under the law of sin and death. Learn, 3. That such as are truly regenerate, are made free from the law of sin and death. 4. That it is by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, that any soul is made free from the law of sin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh,

That is, when mankind could by no means be freed from sin and death, God sent his own and only Son to be a sacrifice for sin, that our liberty might be fully accomplished. Observe here, 1. The impotency and weakness of the law declared: there is something which the law cannot do, it cannot justify, it cannot save, because it requires that which the fallen creature can never perform, and cannot make reparation for what the fallen creature has done. Learn hence, That the moral law of God, though an holy and excellent law, and designed by God for holy and excellent ends; yet having now to do with fallen man is, become weak, altogether unable to justify and save. Observe, 2. The reason of the law's impotency and weakness assigned: It is weak through the flesh; that is, through our corrupt and depraved natures. Its weakness doth not arise from itself, but from us; the law properly is not weak to us, but we are weak to that. The law retains its authority of commanding, but we have lost our power of obeying. No mere man, since the fall, was able perfectly to observe the law of God: none ever could keep the law of God perfectly, but the first Adam; none ever could and did keep it perfectly, but the second Adam. Observe, 3. The way and means which the wisdom of God found out for relieving the law's impotency, and for the fallen sinner's recovery; "He sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ was God's own Son, the Son of himself, his natural Son, co-equal, co-essential, and co-eternal with the Father, partaking of his father's essence by an eternal and ineffable generation. Learn, 2. That Jesus Christ was sent, and sent by God the Father: he was sent, therefore, he had a being before his incarnation; for that which was not, could not be sent; he was sent by the Father, therefore he was, and is a person, and a person really distinct from the Father; the one sends, and the other is sent. But what doth God's sending Christ imply? Answer, His appointing and ordaining of him before all time to the work and office of a Mediator; his qualifying and fitting him in time for that great work and office: and his authoritative injunction of him to take upon him our nature, and in that nature, to make satisfaction for our sin. Learn, 3. That Christ, God's own Son, was sent in the likeness of sinful flesh, not in the likeness of flesh: it was real flesh that Christ assumed, but like unto sinful flesh; he was dealt with and handled, treated and used, just as guilty and sinful men are, accused of gluttony, winebibbing, sorcery, blasphemy, and what not; arraigned, condemned, executed for an impostor, deceiver, blasphemous, and breaker of the law. Thus though no sinner, yet was he a reputed sinner, and appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh. Learn, 4. That the end for which Christ was sent by God, was through the sacrifice of his death to condemn sin, that is, to expiate and take away the guilt of sin; so as that it shall never be charged upon believers to their eternal condemnation: for sin, he condemned sin in the flesh. Blessed be God, condemning sin is condemned by a condemned Saviour.

4 That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

Our apostle here assigns another end and cause, for which God sent his Son into the world: namely, to do what the law commanded, as well as to suffer what the law threatened; perfectly to fulfil the righteousness of the law for us, which it was impossible for us to do for ourselves; for the sake of which we are accounted righteous in the sight of God. Learn hence, 1. That our Lord Jesus Christ being made under the law, fulfilled the law; whatsoever the law did or could demand is fully satisfied and fulfilled by Christ. Learn, 2. That Christ having fulfilled the law on our behalf, what ever can be required of us by way of punishment, is discharged likewise. Learn, 3. That though the righteousness of the law be fulfilled for us by Christ, yet the gospel righteousness must be performed by ourselves. Christ has answered the demands of the law for us, but will never fulfil the conditions of the gospel for us. We must repent ourselves, obey ourselves, or Christ's obedience will profit us nothing: none can safely or comfortably pretend to an interest in Christ's obedience, either active or passive, but only such who in their course are actuated and influenced by the spirit, and not by the flesh. "That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit."

5 For they that are after the flesh, do mind the things of the flesh: but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit.

Observe here, 1. A difference of persons mentioned. Those that are after the flesh, and them that are after the Spirit. 2. A difference of properties belonging to these persons; the one minds the things of the flesh, the other the things of the Spirit. They mind them: that is, they relish and savor them, they lay out their thoughts about them, and let out their endeavours after them. Learn hence, 1. That there are but two sorts of men in the world: some after the flesh, and some after the Spirit. 2. That these two different sorts of men have two different objects, which they savor and relish; namely, the things of the flesh, and the things of the Spirit. 3. That all men discover the true tempers of their minds, and the complexion and disposition of their souls, by the respect which they give to either of these objects, by minding the things of the flesh, and the things of the Spirit; that is, by minding them willingly and cheerfully, resolutely and constantly.

6 For to be carnally-minded, is death; but to be spiritually minded, is life and peace.

In the former verse we had a description of those that are carnal, and them that are spiritual. In this verse we have the end of the one, and the issue of the other; the end of the one is death, the issue of the other is spiritual life, joy and peace. Observe, 1. The end and conditions of all carnally-minded persons, so remaining and still continuing, it is death: always demeritoriously, that which deserves death; and sometimes actually, it procures and hastens the sinner's death; but especially it exposeth to an endless and eternal death. Observe, 2. The sweet fruit and joyful issue of spiritual-mindedness, it is life and peace. 1. It is life, it is eternal life initially, and it leads to eternal life ultimately. Grace is the first degree of glory, and glory but the highest degree of grace. 2. It is peace: to be spiritually-minded, lays the foundation of peace with God, with conscience, with the world; the fruit of righteousness is peace, quietness, and assurance for ever.

7 Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

By the carnal mind are meant the rational powers corrupted by our sensitive appetite, or a mind enslaved by sensual lusts. Such a temper of mind is opposite to, yea, enmity against God and goodness. Learn hence, 1. That carnal persons are no better than enemies unto God: there is a perfect contrariety in their affections, inclinations, and actions, to the will of God. They are called haters of God; not that they hate him as a Creator, but as a lawgiver; they hate his holiness, not his goodness. Learn, 2. That whilst men remain carnally minded, there is no breaking off this enmity between God and them; the carnal mind, whilst such "is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be;" not that this impotency and inability will excuse from guilt, because it is not a created, but a self-contracted impotency; not a natural, but a moral impotency: which arises from a perverse disposition of will, is joined with a delight in sin, and a strong aversion from the holy commands of God. Man must thank himself, and not God for his lame hand: that he cannot be subject to the law of God, is occasioned by his natural enmity and contracted hardness of heart against God.

8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

To be in the flesh, is not barely to have the flesh in us, but prevailing in us: to be wholly possessed by the flesh, to be drenched and drowned in sin: instead of fighting under Christ's banner against sin, to fight under the banner of corrupt nature against Christ. Such cannot please God: nay they cannot but displease him, both in their persons and in their actions; for none can please him that are unsuitable and unlike unto him, because all liking is founded in likeness, and all complacency in correspondency. Learn hence, That carnal men neither do, nor can please God, because not renewed by God, nor reconciled to him: "Such as are in the flesh cannot please God."

9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you.—

Observe, He doth not say, the flesh is not in you, but ye are not in the flesh, so as to be acted and influenced, guided and governed, misled and carried away by it. Sincere and serious christians, although they live in the flesh, yet do they not live after the flesh: But ye are in the Spirit, that is, illuminated, inclined and enabled by the Spirit to do the will of God; And the Spirit of God dwelleth in you, as a Spirit of truth to enlighten your understandings, as a Spirit of holiness to renew your will and affections, as a Spirit of love to inspire the soul with divine and unutterable desires after the favor and grace of God: and the phrase, dwelling, imports presence and propriety, fellowship and intimacy, operation and activity, residence and constancy of abode.

—Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

Observe here, 1. That the Holy Ghost is called the Spirit of Christ passively, and by way of reception, as being bestowed upon him, and received by him: also actively, and by way of collation, as being bestowed by him: and conveyed from him. Observe, 2. That all sincere christians have the Spirit of Christ, they have him for the blessing of conversion, they have him for the benefit of communion. He dwells in them by his sanctifying impressions, powerful assistances, quickening and comforting influences. He pours in both the oil of grace, and also the oil of joy and gladness into their hearts. Observe, 3. There are some that have not the Spirit of Christ; such as are carnal and sensual have not the Spirit; such as are censorious and envious have not the Spirit; such as are malicious and revengeful have not the Spirit; such as are implacable, and of an irreconcilable temper of spirit, have not the Spirit of Christ. Observe, 4. That all such as have not the Spirit of Christ, are none of Christ's; they have no spiritual relation to him, they have no special interest in him, and can expect no present consolation or future happiness from him; the proposition is indefinite, and without exception, "If any man, prince or peasant, rich or poor, bond or free, have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of Christ's."

10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead, because of sin, but the Spirit is life, because of righteousness.

If Christ be in you, that is, by his holy Spirit, the body is dead, that is, still subject to death, because of sin which will never cease to be in us till we die: but the Spirit is life, that is, will give life to it again, because of righteousness, or of that justification which is unto life. Learn hence, That Christ in believers is a sure pledge and earnest to them of eternal life, both in body and soul; Christ is in believers two ways. 1. Objectively, as the object is in the faculty, or the things we think of, love and delight in, are in our hearts and minds: thus Christ is said to dwell in our hearts by faith. 2. Effectively, so Christ is in believers by his Spirit, whose gracious influences produce life in them, and likeness unto him. Learn, 2. That the bodies of believers, in whom Christ dwells, are subject to death as well as other men's, and that because of sin, both original and actual: sin brought mortality into their natures, death entered the world by sin, and sin goes out of the world by death; true, they are by Christ delivered from the sting, but not from the stroke of death: "their bodies are dead because of sin." Learn, 3. That believers, though mortal, and subject to death in regard of their bodies, yet they live, and are in a state of immortality, in regard of their souls: the spirit is life: that is, the spirit of the believer is immortal, yet not exclusively, but emphatically; not as if other men's souls did not live after death, but it is a life worse than death: it is a special immortality that the believer is partaker of. Learn, 4. "The spirit is life because of righteousness." If we understand it of Christ's righteousness, that gives us a right and title to salvation; if of our own inherent righteousness, that is a qualification to fit and prepare us for eternal life and salvation; take it in either sense, it teaches us, that without righteousness there can be no hope of eternal life and happiness; we can be neither fit for the employment of heaven, nor for the enjoyment of heaven without it, Col. i. 12.

11 But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

As if the apostle had said, "Although your body must die, yet it shall live again in the morning of the resurrection, and that by virtue of the Spirit of Christ which dwelleth in you, and is the bond of union with him your head; others shall be raised by the power of Christ as their judge, but you shall be raised by virtue of your union with him as your head: they are raised officio judicis, you beneficio mediatoris." Observe here, an happy resurrection promised, and the condition upon which that promise is made and insured. 1. An happy resurrection promised, the same holy Spirit of God that raised Christ shall raise you, because the same Spirit dwelleth in you. Learn thence, That the bodies of the saints are the temple of the Holy Ghost, his dwelling-place, living, dying, and dead; if the Holy Spirit dwells in us here, sanctifying our persons, the same Spirit will not forsake our bodies in the grave, but raise them up to glory and happiness. Death dissolves all other unions, except that betwixt the believer and the Spirit of Christ; but the grave itself cannot separate them. Observe, 2. The condition upon which this promise is made and insured, "if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you." Where note, 1. A blessed relation; the Holy Ghost is called the Spirit of the Father, because the Father is the fountain and original of the Deity, and doth communicate it both to the Son and to the Spirit, to teach us to seek unto the Father, for the gift of the Holy Spirit, he being the donor and dispenser of it. Note, 2. A glorious operation, the Spirit raised up Jesus from the dead. Where observe, that the holy scriptures ascribe Christ's resurrection to all the three persons in the glorious Trinity: the Father raised him, Acts x. 40. Him God raised up the third day; Christ raised himself, John x. 18. "I have power to lay down my life, and to take it up again;" the Holy Ghost raised up Christ, 1 Pet. iii. 18. "He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." Note, 3. A gracious possession, and special inhabitation; He dwelleth in us; in our hearts by the gifts and graces, in our bodies as his living temples, which proves him to be really God, for none but a God possesses a temple; and also to be a distinct person, not an energy or operation, for none but a person, can be said to inhabit or dwell; and should teach us to take heed of defiling our bodies by any uncleanness, which are or ought to be the temples of the Holy Ghost; "for if any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy."

12 Therefore, brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

That is, seeing the Holy Spirit dwelleth in us, quickening our souls for the present, and raising our bodies for time to come, furnishing the one with grace here, and fitting the other for glory hereafter; therefore we ought to live unto God and not to the flesh; we are not debtors to the flesh, to live after the flesh. Where note, that the word flesh is not to be taken in a physical, but in a moral sense: not in a physical sense, for the body of man: every one is a debtor to his own body, he owes it food and clothing, nourishment and provision: the beast must be fed, though not pampered, lest it kick and throw its rider; but flesh is here to be taken in a moral sense for sin, for the progenerate and unsanctified part in man: and then the sense is, that no man owes any thing to the service and satisfaction of his sinful lusts, and inordinate desires; none of us owe sin, satan, or the world, an hour's service; these are not warrantable creditors for any of us to be indebted to. Learn hence, that believers are not indebted, or owe any thing to the flesh, but all to the Spirit; the flesh is a cheater, an usurer, an oppressor; what it calls for, it has no right to demand: but the Spirit is a just creditor, and we are greatly indebted to him, as the author and producer of grace in us, and he is the preserver and increaser of that grace to us which he has begun. O blessed Spirit! we owe all that we are, and all that we have to thee, all that we have in hand, and all that we have in hope; thou hast a right to all, yea, more than all that we can pay thee, so infinitely are we indebted to thee; but for sin and the flesh, we never promised any thing to it, we never got any thing by it, nothing but shame and sorrow from it, and, therefore, we are not indebted to it. Lord, keep us from being debtors to the most cruel and severe creditors in the world, sin and satan; for the more we pay to them, the more we run in arrears with thee, to whose justice we must pay the uttermost farthing.

13 For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

Our apostle here adds a farther reason why a christian should not live after the flesh: before, an argument was drawn a debito, now a damno: he told us in the former verse we owed nothing to the flesh, here he acquaints us what losers we shall be by living to the flesh, If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: which words are a dreadful commination, and severe threatening. In which observe, 1. The persons threatened, ye, the believing Romans, called to be saints, chap. 1. 7. even they are threatened with hell, who were candidates of heaven: he threatens them with death, to keep them from death. Learn thence, that the ministers of God may use arguments drawn from hell torments, to dissuade the holiest and best saints from sin, and to persuade them to duty; if ye live after the flesh, &c. Observe, 2. The threatening itself. Ye shall die. Learn thence, That Almighty God threateneth all those that live after the flesh with nothing less than eternal death and damnation: to live after the flesh, is to have the flesh our governing principle, our work and trade, our scope and end; and to die for living after the flesh is to undergo a temporal, spiritual, and eternal death; an everlasting banishment from the blessed presence of him in whose presence is fulness of joy: "but if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." The former words were a threatening to excite our industry; these are a promise to prevent our dejection. In which, observe, 1. The act specified, or duty enjoined, and that is a mortification; if ye mortify, that is, kill every sin: It is not enough to oppose sin, but we must destroy sin, nothing but the destruction of sin must content us. Note also, the continuance of the act, if ye do mortify, though they had already mortified sin, yet they are called upon to proceed in the work: the axe must be daily laid to the root, and the knife must still stick in the throat of sin, till it drop down dead. Mortification must be continual, and it must necessarily be painful: nothing that has life will be put to death without pain and struggling: the longer we delay to mortify sin, the more painful shall we make it to ourselves. Observe, 2. The proper object of this duty, the deeds of the body, by which all sin is to be understood, relating both to the inward and outward man, though the latter only be mentioned, because the body is that which is manifestatum peccati, it is that wherein sin doth especially show and discover itself. Learn thence, mortification must be universal as well as continual, not one deed, but deeds: not the deeds of the body only, but of the soul also must be mortified; all evil dispositions, depraved habits, corrupt affections, as well as irregular actions, must be watched against, and the whole body of sin become the object of mortification. Observe, 3. The agents in this work, and they are two: 1. The more principal agent is the Holy Spirit. 2. The less principal is the christian himself, if ye, through the Spirit, we can do nothing without him, he will do nothing without us. Learn hence, that in mortifying sin, the Spirit's assistance and our endeavours must concur: mortification indeed, is not the work of nature, yet man must be an agent in it, not in his own, but in God's strength; we have brought sin, that rebel into our own souls, and we must use our own endeavours to cast it out: true, it cannot be done alone by ourselves, but it never will be done without ourselves; we can sin of ourselves; but cannot overcome sin by ourselves; we know how to be slaves, but are unable of ourselves to be conquerors. The believer is principium activum, but the Spirit is principium effectivum. Observe, 4. The reward promised to the performers and performance of this duty; ye shall live: namely, a life of grace and boldness, a life of joy and comfort, a life of glory and happiness. Our life of grace is an evidence and an earnest of the life of glory: grace is a glory in the bud, and glory is grace in the fruit. Learn, that a life of grace and comfort on earth, together with a life of glory and happiness in heaven, is and shall be the assured portion and privilege of all those, who by the Spirit's assistance, and their own concurring endeavours, do mortify sin, and crucify the deeds of the body; if ye mortify, &c. ye shall live: that is, holily, comfortably, and eternally; ye shall live a life of exemplary graciousness, a life of highest delight and pleasure on earth, and of eternal blessedness and glory in heaven.

14 For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

Observe here, 1. A glorious privilege proclaimed, the being the sons of God. 2. A description of the persons to whom that privilege doth belong, they are such as are led by the spirit of God. Learn, 1. That the Holy Spirit of God doth perform the office of a guide and leader to all the children of God, he gives life and motion to them, by infusing gracious habits, (Ezek. xxxvi. 26.) by exciting the soul to act suitably thereunto, and by assisting it in acting; he gives directions and guidance to them, he directs their actions, by enlightening their understandings, by guiding their inclinations, by influencing and inclining their wills; and where he guides he governs. A general that leads an army, orders its motions and marches; as Christ was, so the Holy Spirit is, a leader and commander to the people. Learn, 2. That such as are thus led by the Spirit of God, may know and conclude themselves to be the sons of God, because holiness is a certain evidence of adoption. Such as are led by God's Spirit, are undoubtedly God's children; and such as are not his children, refuse to be led by his Spirit, but live under the uncontrolled activity of their own.

15 For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

Observe, 1. That there is a spirit of bondage, which the children of God do for some time receive, working fear in them. By the spirit of bondage understand those convictions and terrors of conscience which awakened persons labor under, when the law of God charges them home with the guilt of sin; and lays them under dreadful apprehensions of the wrath of God. The spirit of bondage is neither to be slighted, nor yet to be rested in; not to be slighted, because it is preparatory to conversion; and not to be rested in, because it is like a spark of hell kindled in the conscience; it is as a bearded arrow shot into the conscience, which only the hand of God can pluck out. Observe, 2. That the spirit of bondage to God's children is succeeded by, and ends in a spirit of adoption; the signs of such a spirit are a childlike love to God, a childlike fear and hope, a childlike trust and dependance, and a childlike obedience to his commands. Observe, 3. That God's Holy Spirit, after he has once been a spirit of adoption, never again becomes a spirit of bondage to the same soul, "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear." Observe, 4. That one principal work of the spirit of adoption is to enliven and imbolden the soul in prayer, "whereby we cry, Abba, Father."

16 The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

Observe here, 1. That our adoption into God's family is evidenced by the testimony of the Spirit, bearing witness to and with our spirits; here are two witnesses produced to testify the truth of the believer's adoption, namely, God's Spirit and his own; the Spirit testifies by laying down marks of trial in the holy scriptures, by working such graces in us as are peculiar to God's children, and by helping us to discover this work in our own souls more clearly and evidently; our own spirits testify by reflecting upon our primitive conversion, upon our habitual disposition, upon our general conversation; the Spirit testifies our adoption by evidencing to us our sanctification: and all this is done, not by sudden impulses, and immediate inspirations, which is the witnessing of the Spirit that enthusiasts pretend to, but the Spirit witnesses in a way of argumentation. Thus, whoever repents, believes and obeys the gospel, says the scripture, shall be saved; but the Spirit helps us to see that we do so, and accordingly enables us to infer and conclude that we shall be saved. Observe, 2. That a christian may in this life, without a divine revelation, attain a well-grounded assurance of his adoption and salvation; for the Spirit of God both bears witness to him, and bears witness with him, as touching the sincerity of his heart and life. Observe lastly, That there is no safe and secure way to prove our adoption, but by testimonies brought of our sanctification; the privy seal of our adoption must be thus attested under the broad seal of our sanctification; the goodness of our state and condition must be evidenced by the holiness of our lives and conversation.

17 And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.

Our apostle having asserted and insured the believer's adoption in the foregoing verse, doth in this verse infer the certainty of his inheritance: "If children, then heirs." Learn thence, That all God's children, by special grace and adoption are undoubted heirs of a blessed and glorious inheritance. He next declares whom they are heirs of, and whom they are heirs with; they are, "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." 1. They are heirs of God, they do inherit God himself, their Father is their portion; man leaves his heirs what he has, God gives his heirs what he is; he which gives them the inheritance, is the inheritance itself which he gives them, by being not only heirs to him, but heirs of him; they have an interest in all his attributes; his wisdom is theirs to guide and direct them, his power is theirs to sustain and preserve them, his mercy and pity is theirs to relieve and succour them. O happy and blessed privilege of God's adopted ones! they are not only heirs of heaven, but heirs of God himself; they have him for their portion, and exceeding great reward. 2. They are heirs with Christ: as Christ is God's heir, so are they heirs with Christ; Christ is God's heir by nature, as he is the Son of God by nature; whatever is God's is his, and they are heirs with Christ; they are members of him, and shall be heirs with him, 1 Cor. iii. ult. All is yours, and ye are Christ's Eph. i. 11. In him we have obtained the inheritance; we are heirs in his right. O blessed Jesus! how endearing are our obligations to thee! All that we have is from thee, by thee, and in thee: we are chosen in thee, justified by thee, sanctified through thee, and shall be glorified with thee; "For if children, then heirs: heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." It follows.

—If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

Here we see what accompanieth our adoption, namely, present affliction; we are now to suffer, but not alone, we suffer with Christ; "If so be that we suffer with him." This is not a word of ambiguity and doubting, but a word of certainty and assurance, and signifies as much as seeing that we suffer with him. Learn hence, 1. That a state of suffering and affliction on earth is one condition of obtaining our glorious inheritance in heaven; we must suffer that God may be glorified, our graces improved, our love to the world mortified, our longings for heaven increased. Learn, 2. That the sufferings of believers are the sufferings of Christ; they suffer with him, and he with them; they suffer with him in a way of conformity, he with them in a way of tender sympathy; they are sensible of any indignity offered to him, and he is sensible of any injury offered to them: the suffering saint pledges Christ in his own cup. Farther, they suffer with him when they suffer for him, when they suffer in his cause, and for his sake: that is, for doing their duty. Finally they suffer with him, when they suffer by an assistance derived from him, when by his enablement, and by a power communicated from him, they suffer hard things for his name and truth. Learn, 3. That as sufferings go before, so glory shall certainly follow sufferings; "If we suffer with him, we shall be also glorified together." Suffering is the beaten path to glory, and that which makes it so much the more glorious; suffering fits us for glory, and disposes us for the reception and fruition of it; by the cross we are fitted for the crown. Learn, 4. That suffering members shall not only be glorified, but be conformable to their glorified head in glory; as they have here "suffered with him," they shall hereafter be "glorified together," not with equal glory, but with the same kind of glory. Three things are implied in our being glorified together with Christ: 1. Conformity: we shall be like him in glory. 2. Concomitancy; we shall accompany him, and be present with him in glory. 3. Conveyance of derivation; we shall be glorified with him; that is, our glory shall be derived from him; his glory shall be reflected upon us, and we shall shine in his beams. O happy condition of God's adopted and afflicted children; The supports which you have under suffering, the comforts which you have in suffering, the benefits which you have by suffering, and the glory which will follow after suffering, render it not only tolerable but desirable; well may they glory in tribulation, which expect such a glory after it.

18 For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

Observe here, 1. The nature and property of the saints' present sufferings; they are short and momentary: "The sufferings of this present time." If sharp, they shall yet be short; though great, they cannot be long; for their afflictions cannot last longer than their lives; the one shall end when the other ends. O blessed condition of the righteous; your afflictions are only for this present time, the grave will set you beyond the reach of trouble. Ah, wretched condition of the wicked! your sufferings are not only "for this present time," but for eternal ages; your worm will never die, your fire never be quenched, but you shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. Observe, 2. The nature and property of the saints' future glory; it is hidden, it is "a glory that shall be revealed." Learn thence, That the glory which God has prepared for his suffering saints and children, is an hidden glory; it is hidden from the eye of the world, and lies altogether out of their sight and view; and it is in a great measure hidden from the saints themselves; it is now the object of their faith, but ere long it shall be the object of their sight. Observe, 3. The vast disproportion between the christian's present suffering and his future glory and happiness; the one is not worthy to be compared with the other: "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed." Learn thence, That the weight of the saints' cross is not comparable with the glory of their crown; the happiness of their future glorified state doth infinitely outweigh the misery of their present afflicted state, they are not to be named in the same day. Observe, 4. The apostle's judgment or determination about this matter: I reckon, I have cast up the matter, as if the apostle had said, and have had my share of suffering; but I make light of them, they are not worth speaking of, compared with the glory I shall receive as the reward of my sufferings. Learn hence, That such of the saints of God as have been exercised and tried with the heaviest of sufferings, make lightest of them, having the highest account of heaven's glory: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory, &c.

19 For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

20 For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope;

21 Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now:

Observe here, 1. That there is a time indeed a coming, when all the sons of God, all his adopted children, shall be made manifest: how manifest? 1. In their persons: it shall then appear who are God's sons, and who are satan's servants; they shall then be made manifest to themselves, to one another, yea, to the very consciences of the wicked. 2. In their actions, 1 Cor. iii. 13. Every man's work shall be made manifest, of what nature it is, what they have done, whose interest they were in. 3. In their condition; their glory and happiness shall be made manifest: "When Christ their life shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory." Observe, 2. That the creature, or whole creation; expecteth, waiteth and longeth for the time of this manifestation. Some by the creature, and the whole creation here understand the Gentile world; and then the sense is, "That the heathens shall, by the preaching of the gospel, be rescued from their idolatry, unto which they have been long enslaved, and be brought into the glorious condition of Christ's redeemed ones, to whom the glorious inheritance of heaven doth belong." But others, by the creature and the whole creation, understand this visible world, sensitive and rational, animate and inanimate; and then the sense is, "That the whole frame and course of the creation is so ordered and disposed of by God, as that it carries in it a vehement desire, an earnest longing for the full manifestation of God's glory in and towards his children." Observe, 3. The present condition which the creature is subjected to through the sin of man, "It is made subject to vanity;" that is, to corruption and mortality, to servitude and servility; the sin of man did not only stain the glory of man, but marring and spoiled the beauty of the whole creation; all creatures are fallen from their first perfection by the fall of our first parents. Observe, 4. The restlessness and uneasiness of the creature under this vanity and servility, it groans like a man under a burden, or like a travelling woman in labor. Learn hence, That the sin of man is burdensome to the senseless creature; it is in continual labor to serve man's necessity; it is oft-times punished together with man for the sin of man, witness the old world, and Sodom: and as they are oft-times constrained and compelled by men to serve the lusts of men, thus the whole creation groaneth under the burden of man's sin, when he himself groans not; and accordingly, the groans of the creature are upbraiding groans, they upbraid our stupidity and unthankfulness; they are accusing groans, they will witness against us at the bar of God; they are awakening groans, to excite and stir us up to sigh and long for a better state; and they are instructive groans, to teach us our sins, and their vanity. Observe, 5. The expectation which the creature is under of a state of liberty and freedom from that vanity and corruption which they are now subject to for our sin, it has "an earnest expectation" of being delivered from this bondage. But how can the senseless and inanimate part of the creation be said to have an earnest expectation? Not properly, as if the creature was able to put forth such an act directly; for then it must be supposed to have not only life and sense, but reason and grace: but the meaning is, that there is a vehement inclination in the creature to be restored to that first condition which it was in before the fall; and accordingly it is said to "wait for the manifestation of the sons of God;" that is, for that liberty and freedom from servility and corruption, which according to their captivity, the creatures hope for and expect, when the full privileges and dignities of the sons of God shall be manifested. Observe, lastly, that the liberty which God's children are reserved for, and appointed to, is a glorious liberty; that is, a liberty which shall be attended with unspeakable glory: "the creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

"And not only they;" that is, all the creatures in the visible creation, join in this, they groan together; they do not some groan and others sing; some travail in pain, and others in pleasure; but they all groan and travail together in pain until now; that is, until the glorious manifestation of the sons of God; but not only do they groan, but we ourselves also, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, &c. Observe here, 1. A special description of God's adopted children; they have the first-fruits of the Spirit; that is, they have the Holy Spirit in its sanctifying gifts, and graces, and comforts, in some measure, called here first-fruits, because of the smallness of their quantity, the first-fruits were but an handful, a little portion in comparison of the whole crop: yet was it an evidence and pledge that God would give them the full crop. Thus grace is an earnest of glory, it is a pledge of everlasting life: the beginnings of grace here, are certain forerunners of the accomplishment of glory hereafter. Observe, 2. The actions attributed to the forementioned persons; they groan, they wait. 1. They groan: "We who have the first fruits of the Spirit do groan?" they groan under the burden of sin and affliction; the guilt of sin, the pollution of sin, the sad remains of indwelling sin, make them groan; their proneness and inclination to evil, their backwardness and indisposition to do good, make them groan: their too frequent backslidings, their daily infirmities make them groan; their sufferings also from God, and from man for God's sake cause them to groan; but it is added, "We groan within ourselves;" that is, secretly to ourselves; undiscovered by the world, and in a manner peculiar to ourselves, as persons influenced by religion and grace; as christians have joys and comforts, so have they griefs and groans peculiar to themselves. 2. They wait; but for what? 1. For the adoption, that is, for the completing of their adoption, for the last finishing stroke of their sanctification, and for their perfect glorification. 2. For the redemption of their bodies; that is, for their resurrection, for their redemption from mortality and corruption, for the redemption of their whole man, soul and body, do believers wait; their bodies were members of Christ, temples of the Holy Ghost, instruments of, and companions with the soul in holy duties; and accordingly the hour is coming, when the complete redemption both of soul and body shall be fully and finally perfected: but in the mean time they groan and wait for it. Learn from the whole, that all sanctified christians who have received the first-fruits of the Spirit, do groan and wait for a much better state than what they do at present enjoy.

24 For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25 But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

"We are saved by hope;" that is, we are at present supported by hope, our present expectation of our future glorious condition beareth up our spirit under all sufferings, and carrieth us joyfully through all difficulties: or, "we are saved by hope," that is, all the salvation which we have at present is in hope, not in hand: in expectation, not in possession; heaven in hope, is more worth than the whole world in hand: and seeing there is a certainty of hope, there is a certainty of salvation: "We are saved by hope." Observe next, the nature of hope declared; it is an expectation of good things promised but not enjoyed; vision and fruition put an end to hope; none hopes for that he already enjoys: hope is conversant about things unseen as well as faith: faith is the evidence of things not seen, and hope is the expectation of those things: the object of hope is a future good, a possible good, a promised good, a good promised by God, and believed by us. Observe, lastly, the necessary adjunct, and the inseparable companion of hope, and that is patience, and waiting for the good hoped for; "if we hope, &c. then do we with patience wait, &c." Learn hence, that they only hope for eternal life aright, who continue in the pursuit of it with patience and perseverance; there must be found with us a waiting patience, a working patience, a hearing and forbearing patience, with a persevering continuance in well-doing, if we hope for glory and immortality, and eternal life.

26 Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered,

Learn hence, 1. That the holiest and best of saits labor oft-times under great infirmities in the work and duty of prayer, not knowing what to pray for, or how to manage that important affair as they ought. Hence it was that the apostles themselves, being sensible of their own disability in this kind, made their addresses to Christ himself to teach and instruct them how to pray, Luke xi. 1. Learn, 2. That it is the work and office of the Holy Spirit of God to help our infirmities in prayer, or as the word signifies, to help together with us, to set his shoulder to ours, and lift with us at the same burden: the spirit of Christ and our own spirit must both do their part in carrying on this work; if ever we expect the Spirit's assistance, we must exert our own endeavours; more particularly, the Spirit helps us in prayer, by working in us a deep sense of our spiritual wants, by giving us an insight into the promises, and enabling us to plead them at the throne of grace, by creating and stirring up desires in our souls to have our wants supplied by encouraging and emboldening us to come to God in prayer as to a Father, with an humble reverence and childlike confidence. But though the Holy Spirit be our guide and assistant in this duty, yet not so as to give us occasion to think that the words of prayer are immediately inspired and dictated to us by the Holy Ghost: let us have a care that we mistake not an idle and foolish loquacity, a frothy eloquence, and affected language, outward vehemency and boldness of speech, a natural fervency, or an acquired fluency of expression, for the Spirit's help and assistance in prayer. Implore the Spirit's help, and he will help thy infirmities; he will show thee thy sins, to give thee matter of confession! he will show thee thy wants to give thee matter of petition; he will show thee the mercies and blessings of God, to yield thee matter of thanksgiving; he will show thee the church's miseries and necessities, to furnish thee with matter of intercession: thus the Spirit will assist thee, but never expect that he should act without thee. Learn, 3. What is the proper work and office of the Holy Spirit in prayer; it is to make "intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." But how is the Spirit our intercessor? Is not that Christ's office? Answer. Christ is an intercessor for us, the Holy Spirit is an intercessor in us. Christ, in respect of his meritorious sufferings, is an Advocate, Mediator, and Intercessor with the Father for us: the Holy Spirit intercedes in us, by enabling us for, and assisting us in, the duty; by quickening our affections, and enlarging our desires; by setting us a groaning after the Lord. Groaning denotes the strength and ardency of desire, which through the fervency of it puts the soul to pain; and an holy impatience, till it be heard. Lord, how flat and dead are our hearts sometimes in prayer! How much are our Spirits straitened! But if we want words, let us not want groans; let thy Spirit help us to groan out a prayer when we want ability to utter it; for silent groans proceeding from thy Spirit, shall be heard in thine ear, when the loudest cries shall not be heard without it.

27 And he that searcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God.

Observe here, 1. The title or attribute given and appropriated unto God; he searcheth, or knoweth the heart. He was the maker of the heart and is the disposer of the heart, and will judge every man according to his heart; and therefore, he must know the heart thoroughly and perfectly, certainly and infallibly; and it is the joy of an upright person, that God knoweth and searcheth the heart. When the world condemns him for insincerity, he rejoiceth that God knoweth his integrity; and when he has it in the purpose of his heart to do good, but wants power in his hand to accomplish and effect it, this is his consolation, that God accepts it as done, what he did desire and resolve to do, 2 Chron. vi. 8. Observe, 2. The action here attributed to the heart-searching God; he "knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit." That is, he knoweth the workings of the Holy Spirit, and of our own spirits also, in the duty of prayer. It is a great comfort to the children of God, that the Lord knoweth what kind of spirit is working in their hearts, when they are before him upon their knees. Do we labor under difficulty of utterance in prayer? Are we attended with distractions in prayer? Do we at any time forget and leave out in prayer what we intended to put into it. The Lord knoweth what is the mind of our spirits in that matter. God doth not only hear his people's prayers, but he hears their desires, and grants not only the desires of our lips, but the desires of our hearts, which have not been expressed by our lips. Observe, 3. Who the persons are whom the Holy Spirit intercedes for in prayer; they are saints: "he maketh intercession for the saints;" for them exclusively and none but them; for them inclusively, for all and every one of them: the Spirit sanctifies all those in whom and for whom he intercedes; he is first a Spirit of regeneration, before he is a Spirit of intercession; he first puts gracious dispositions into us, and then stirs up holy desires in us. Observe, 4. The qualification necessary to render our prayers acceptable to God, they must be according to God; that is, according to the will and mind of God. And that, 1. In respect of the matter of them, we must pray only for things lawful and warrantable. 2. In regard of the manner of them, we must pray in faith with fervency, and in the name of Christ. 3. In respect of the end of them, and what we propound to ourselves in them, which is the glory of God: notwithstanding Christ's mediation, and the Spirit's intercession, we may ask and not receive; if we ask amiss; that is, for bad ends, that we may consume it upon our lusts.

28 And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

That is, "All dispensations of providence whatsoever, whether they be ordinary afflictions, or extraordinary trials, which do befall the children of God in this life, shall certainly be directed by his wisdom, and overruled by his power and goodness, for the temporal, spiritual, and eternal good of his children and people." Observe here, 1. What those things are, which are especially intended in that comprehensive term, all things. By all things here we are to understand, Omnia tristitia, non omnia turpia: "all the saints' afflictions, and not their sins; for then they might rejoice in their sins and wickedness; which is damnable impiety, as well as in their sufferings for Christ, seeing they may rejoice in that which by God's designation tendeth to their good; but by all things, the apostle means all providential occurrences and dispensations, all stations and conditions whatsoever, be it prosperity or adversity, health or sickness, liberty or captivity, life or death: God's glory and his children's good, shall be certainly furthered and advanced by it. Observe, 2. In what sense all things may be said to work for good, to good men; namely, as they shall promote and further the temporal, spiritual, and eternal welfare of the children of God. If it be good for them to be rich, to be in honor, to be at liberty, they shall be so; if it be better for their souls, and more conducive to their eternal welfare to be low in the world, to be frequently under the rod, to be harassed with afflictions, and assaulted with temptations, they shall have them: nothing that is needful shall be kept from them, only God must be judge what is needful, and when it is needful. He that thinks he can cut better for himself, than God can carve for him, makes himself wiser than God, and hath not only lost his faith, but his wits too. Observe, 3. That all things are said to work together for good; not singly, separately, and apart, but as coadjutors and adjuvant causes, and mutual helps. Afflictions and temptations seem to work against us: but being put into the rank and order of causes, they work together with other blessed instruments, as the word and prayer, to an happy issue. More particularly they work together with God and us, and they work together one with another, for our good sooner or later. Observe, 4. How can all things be said to work for good; particularly evil things? Sufferings from God, and sufferings from man for God's sake? What! must we call evil good, pain pleasure, torment ease, and loss gain? Must we disbelieve our senses, that we may believe the scriptures? Ans. Though affliction, which is evil in its own nature, cannot bring forth good, yet surely God can bring forth good out of evil, light out of darkness, and make his people's troubles the way to their triumph, and every cross providence, a step to the accomplishment of his promise. God suffers evil things to befall us, to keep out worse things, and causes evil things to prepare us for better things; the cross makes way for the crown: for affliction there is glory; for light affliction, a weight of glory, and for light affliction which is but for a moment, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Observe, 5. The character of the persons to whom this privilege doth belong; they are described by their christian affection, they love God, and by their effectual vocation, they are called according to his purpose. They love God and evidence their love to him, by an high estimation of him, by their delight in him, by their desires after him, by their longings for the full fruition and final enjoyment of him. And as they love God, so are they called of God; externally, by the dispensation of the gospel; internally, by the operation of his Holy Spirit: they are called out of darkness into light, out of bondage into liberty, and all this efficaciously and powerfully, yet sweetly and freely; in a way congruous to the will's liberty. Observe, 6. The certainty and evidence of this proposition and assertion, That all things work together for good. It is not built upon conjecture, or bare probability, but upon certain knowledge; we know; partly by divine revelation, God has told us so; partly by experience, we find it so. And when the apostle speaks it out, we know, it is a word of confidence and assurance, it is a word of comfort and encouragement; all the saints of God to the end of the world, as well as the apostle himself, may depend upon it, live in the faith and assurance of it, and draw all that consolation from it, which may render their lives, in some sort, an heaven upon earth. And now, if this be an indubitable and undeniable truth, that whatever sufferings and afflictions a saint meets with shall work together for good; then we may infer, that a suffering condition is not so bad a condition as the world supposes it. The lion of affliction is not so fierce as he is painted. Times of difficulty and trial bring serious thoughts of God in our minds, who are too prone to forget both him and ourselves in affluence and quiet. Blessed be God, the time of affliction is no unprofitable time, nor uncomfortable time neither: it is a thinking time, an awakening time, a teaching time, a repenting time, a weaning time; therefore, blessed is the man whom God correcteth and teacheth.

29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren.

30 Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

St. Paul in these verses, lays before us a chain of the cause of salvation inseparably linked together, the first of which was before all time, namely, God's foreknowledge of us from all eternity, and his predestinating and appointing of us to eternal life: Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate. But what were we predestinated unto? He tells us in the next words. To be conformed to the image of his Son; That is, to be made like unto our Lord Jesus in affection and disposition, in life and conversation, in the temper of our minds, and in the actions of our lives; like unto him in his sufferings, in the cause of his sufferings, righteousness sake and well-doing; in the kind of his sufferings, reproach, hatred, outward violence, and death itself; and in the manner of his sufferings, with meekness and patience; and like unto him in his glory: suffering with him, we shall be glorified together. The second privilege we are partakers of, is in time, namely, effectual vocation; Whom he did predestinate, them he also called. They are called out of a state of ignorance and darkness, of sin and wickedness, of slavery and bondage, unto knowledge, grace and holiness; and the Holy Spirit of God inclines and enables them to obey this call. The third privilege is justification: Whom he called, them he also justified. That is, absolved from guilt, and freed from condemnation: discharging them from their obnoxiousness to wrath, and the severity of divine displeasure. The last privilege we are partakers of, is after time, namely, glorification; Whom he justified, them he also glorified. They are already glorified in Christ their head, they have already the earnest and firstfruits of glory, namely, the Holy Spirit dwelling in them, and they shall ere long partake of the same glory which Christ himself is in possession of; John xvii. "Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me, may be with me, where I am, to behold my glory." But it may be said, that one link is wanting in this golden chain of salvation, namely, sanctification: no mention is here made of that. Ans. Some conceive, that sanctification is couched in effectual vocation; others, that it is included in glorification; for sanctification is gloria inchoata, glorification is gloria consummata; grace is the lowest degree of glory, and glory is the highest degree of grace. Others answer, that the apostle makes no mention here of sanctification, for this reason, because he was now setting down here the causes of salvation. Now, sanctification being the way to salvation, but not the cause of it, the apostle mentions not that here; though elsewhere he sufficiently shows, that none are now justified, nor can be hereafter glorified, that are not here sanctified and renewed. From the whole learn, 1. That there were certain persons, before all time, chosen of God to possess and inherit eternal life. 2. That God's design in choosing of them, was to render them conformable to Christ, in his holiness, in his sufferings, and in his glory. Learn, 3. That those whom God chooseth before time, he calleth, justifieth, and sanctifieth in time, and will finally glorify, when time shall be no more.

31 What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?

What shall we say to these things? that is to the forenamed truths and doctrines, to the forementioned privileges and benefits, what comfort doth arise from them? How shall we live up answerable unto them? Neither the tongues of men or angels is sufficient to declare the comprehensive fullness of the foregoing favor of vocation and justification here, and glorification in heaven. Such love and goodness are beyond expression; it is as much as if the apostle had just said "What boundless love did our God move? No tongue can it express: no angel can this mystery seen, nor tell our happiness." What shall we say to these things? It follows, If God be for us, who can be against us? That is, seeing God is for us, who can safely and successfully, be against us? Learn hence, 1. That at all times, but especially in the time of affliction and distress, danger and difficulty, God ever has been, and will be on his people's side. 2. That those whom God is for, and on whose side he is of, need not fear, either how many or how mighty they be that are against them. God is for his people; that is, he approves and owns them, he assists and helps them, he will succeed and bless them, reward and crown them. Who then can be against them rationally, against them successfully, against them safely? How dangerous is it to be against those whom God is for? "If God be for us, who can be against us?" And if God be against us, who can be for us?

32 He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

Here we have, 1. A proposition laid down containing matter of the highest consolation to us, namely, that God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. He spared not; that is, he did not spare to give him, or part with him; with Abraham, he did not withhold his Son, his only Son from us. Again; he did not spare him; that is, he did not spare to punish him; he did not abate him one farthing, nor spare him one stroke, which divine justice did or could demand. It is farther added, that God delivered him up for us all. Judas delivered up Christ, Pilate delivered him up, and the Jews also; Judas for money, Pilate for fear, the Jews for envy: but none of these delivered him up for us; but God the Father delivered up his Son, and God the Son delivered up himself, as a prisoner, by the sentence of the law is delivered up for execution: and his being delivered up for us, denotes the viceregency of his sufferings, not only for our good, as the final cause, but for our sins, as the meritorious cause, in our room, place, and stead. Learn hence, That the utmost rigor and severity of divine justice was inflicted and executed upon our Lord Jesus Christ in the day of his passion, and that by the pleasure and appointment of God the Father: "he spared not, but delivered up his own Son." Observe, 2. The comfortable inference and conclusion which the apostle draws from the foregoing proposition; "How shall he not with him freely give us all things?" Intimating, that the greatest mercies and best of blessings shall not be denied to us, or withheld from us. If Christ be ours, 1 Cor. iii. 21, all things are yours (that is, all spiritual, temporal, and eternal mercies) and ye are Christ's. For, 1. No other mercy can be so dear to God as his own Son: he was his soul's delight. If, therefore, he spared not the most excellent mercy, he will not withhold any inferior mercy. 2. There is no other mercy we want, but we are intitled to it by the gift of Christ, and it is conveyed to us with Christ: all things, (as to right) are ours, if we be his. 3. If God gave us his Son, when we were his enemies, certainly he will deny us nothing that is good for us, now we are reconciled and made friends. It is our apostle's argument, Rom. v. 9. "If when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."

33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth.

Observe here, 1. The apostle's confident and daring challenge: "Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect?" Where note the universality of the challenge: it is universal in a double respect: 1. In respect of persons accusing, Who shall? He expects none in heaven, none on earth, nay, none in hell; neither sin, nor the law, nor satan, nor conscience, having any thing to lay to our charge, in order to our condemnation. 2. In respect of crimes; he expects no sort of sins, though never to heinously aggravated, and sadly circumstantiated; justifying grace is their full discharge. Learn hence, That it is impossible for any charge or accusation to take place against those whom God doth justify, because there is nothing to accuse them of, none to accuse them to, and nobody to frame or make the accusation against them. Well might the apostle say, who can, who shall, who may, who dare lay any thing to the justified person's charge? Observe, 2. The ground and reason of this confident challenge; it is God that justifieth, who shall condemn? Here note, 1. That there is a very gracious privilege vouchsafed to believers, which the scriptures call justification. 2. That it is God that justifieth the believer's person, and pardons his sins, and none but God; he is the person against whom the offence is committed, and he alone it is that absolves us from the guilt contracted. When the justice of God accuses, when the law of God accuses, when our own consciences accuse, when satan and wicked men accuse, the mercy and goodness, the truth and faithfulness of God, will, for the sake of his Son's satisfaction, acquit and discharge us; for it is God that justifieth.

34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.

The apostle here goes on with the triumphant challenge in the foregoing verse begun, who shall condemn the justified believer? And here observe, 1. The holy challenge of faith, it is ready for all comers, and bids defiance to all accusations. If the law implead, faith says, Christ, in the likeness of sinful flesh, has condemned sin in the flesh. If death look the believer in the face, faith saith, Christ has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light. If satan roar, faith can scorn, and tell him to his teeth, he is a conquered enemy; that Christ by his death has destroyed him that had the power of death. Yea, if God himself frown upon the believer, faith can bring to God a righteousness that is highly pleasing to him, with respect to which God may be just, and yet the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. Observe, 2. The ground of this triumphant challenge which faith enables the believer to make, and that is the mediation of Jesus Christ, in the four eminent branches of it, his death, resurrection, exaltation and intercession, Christ died, is risen again, is even at God's right hand, making continual intercession for us. Thence learn, that a believer's triumphs over condemnation, do eminently arise from the several acts of Christ's mediation. Christ died and rose again: our debt is therefore paid, because our surety is discharged; he sits at God's right hand as a testimony of the completeness of his sacrifice and satisfaction for us, and he continually intercedes, that is, presents himself to his Father in both his natures, and in our names, as our surety, our Advocate and Mediator; "who then shall lay any thing to the believer's charge, or who shall condemn him?"

35 Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

That is, none shall separate, nothing shall separate the believer from the love of Christ: either from the love that Christ bears to him, or from that love which he bears unto Christ; no person shall, no condition of life can separate them, neither outward troubles, nor inward distresses, no evils either felt or feared; the apostle defies and despises them all, because neither of them, alone, nor all together can unclasp the arms of divine love, in which believers are safely enclosed. Learn hence, that no troubles, tribulations or distresses whatsoever, can dissolve the union betwixt Christ and believers, or ever separate them from his love.

36 (As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long: we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.)

As if the apostle had said, "the saints of old have endured all manner of suffering, and yet were not separated from the love of God: therefore, the like, or worse suffering shall not be able to separate us now." Here note, what may be the lot and portion of believers in this life, and that is, killing for the sake of Christ; for thy sake we are killed all the day long. The words, all the day long, denote the continuance of the persecution, the unweariedness of the enemy, and the patience of the saints. Learn hence, that such as resolve upon the profession of christianity must prepare for killing, if God requires, and be ready to lay down their lives for their religion, when God calls; for thy sake we are killed; that is, ready to be sacrificed; a readiness of disposition, and a preparation of mind is found with us, to part with all that is dear unto us, even life itself, for the sake of Christ.

37 Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us.

As if the apostle had said, "we are so far from being separated from Christ, by the afflictions and persecutions which we undergo, that we are conquerors by our patience, nay, more than conquerors; we do not only bear our trials, but we glory in tribulations; we conquer by our patience, we are more than conquerors by our cheerfulness." But because these words, more than conquerors, look big, and sound great, the apostle instantly subjoins, that it is by Christ's strength, and not by our own, that we overcome and conquer; more than conquerors through him that loved us, which words are a periphrasis of Christ: it is both a proper description of him, and a comprehensive description. When the apostle said, he that loved us, he doth in effect say every thing else; he that was born for us, that died for us, that redeemed and saved us; all these were the effects and fruits of his love, and they are all comprehended in this saying, him that loved us. Note lastly, how the believer is said to overcome by the help of this person. "More than conquerors through him that loved us." Whence learn, that all a Christian's strength lies in Christ, and not in himself; all his strength for victory over sin; all his strength for victory over suffering, is all received from Christ, is all to be attributed and ascribed to Christ; the strength of every saint, yea, the whole host of saints, lies in the Lord of hosts.

38 For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come.

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Our apostle concludes this excellent chapter with triumphant expressions, as he had begun it; in the first verse he proclaims, that there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus: here in the last verse he pronounces, that nothing shall separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus; I am persuaded, &c. Where observe, 1. The proposition positively laid down, nothing shall separate from the love of Christ: his love is like himself, unchangeable and everlasting; he loves the same person, and ever loves the same reason: likeness is the ground of love, the attractive and loadstone of it; now the image of Christ, by the Spirit of Christ, is both preserved and increased in the believer's soul: this engages the heart of Christ towards christians in such a manner, that nothing shall separate them from his love. Observe, 2. The enumeration and induction of particulars which the apostle makes use of, for confirming this proposition, that nothing can separate the believer from the love of Christ, nor diminish his interest in him, neither life nor death, that is, *neither the hope of life, nor the fear of death; nor angels; neither good nor bad; not the angels, for they will not attempt it; nor the bad angels, for they can never effect it; nor principalities nor powers; by them understand earthly power, the great and mighty potentates of the world persecuting us for Christ, yet shall never be able to divorce us from him; nor things present, nor things to come; neither the things which we enjoy at present, or endure at present, or may hereafter meet with, be it prosperity or adversity; their present and future condition of life shall be sanctified, whatever comes: come what may come, come what will come, come what can come, nothing shall come amiss unto them; whatever has happened, does happen or may happen to them in this world, shall not frustrate their hopes of future happiness in the world to come: nor height, nor depth; that is, neither height of honor, nor depth of ignominy; neither the top of worldly advancement, nor the bottom of wordly debasement, neither the height of spiritual enlargement, nor the depth of spiritual desertsions. God can and will keep his saints in an honorable, in a comfortable, yea, in a safe state and condition all at once: nor any other creature; that is, if there be any other creature not comprehended, or comprised in the foregoing enumeration, whatever it be, it must fall under the rank and domination of creatures; and no creature either in heaven, or in earth, or in hell, shall separate Christ and us. Learn hence, That it is a matter of unutterable consolation, and inexpressible triumph to believers, that nothing, though never so great and powerful, though never so amiable or terrible, shall be able to separate them from the love of their Saviour. Blessed be God, for standing in Christ is not so lubricious and slippery as it was in Adam: he might stand or might fall; the believer shall stand, the root bears up the branches; we shall be kept by the mighty power of God, with the concurrence of our own careful and continual endeavours, through faith unto salvation. Observe, 3. The full assurance which the apostle had of the stability of a believer's estate, I am persuaded, or I am fully assured; but how so? Not by extraordinary and special revelation, not by rapture into heaven; not by the apparition of an angel to him: but his assurance is built on that which is common to all believers: namely, the same spirit of faith, and the same love of God shed abroad in the hearts of all believers. Observe, 4. How the apostle having spoken in his own person in the former verse, saying, I am persuaded, changes the number in the last verse: nothing shall separate us not me. Where note, How he associates himself with all true believers in the participation of this privilege; they have all an interest in the same love of God, the same promises of salvation, and have felt the sanctifying work of the same spirit. It is impossible that God should retract his merciful purpose to save believers; he that chose them from eternity, from before all time, and gave his Son to suffer death for them in the fulness of time, will persevere in his purpose; namely, by grace to bring them to glory. He whose grace prevented them when they were in their pollutions, in a state of enmity, yea, in a state of obstinacy, will he leave them after his image is engraven, and reinstamped upon them? He that united them to Christ when they were strangers, will not cast them out of his love, now they are his members; their intercessor will preserve* them from falling, and present them faultless before the presence of his Father's glory with exceeding joy. God's love unto his children is everlasting, and the covenant that is built upon it, is more firm than the pillars of heaven, and the foundations of the earth: well might the apostle, then say, nothing shall separate us from the love of God. Observe, 5. and lastly, the ground of this love's permanency and duration towards believers; it is the love of God in Christ Jesus that is vouchsafed to us for the sake of Christ Jesus: God looks upon Christ, and loves him, and them in him; he loves all that are members of him, and all that are like unto him. Oh blessed Jesus! it is for thy sake that the Father smiles upon us; we are chosen in thee, justified through thee, sanctified by thee, and shall be eternally glorified with thee; "for neither life, nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any creature whatsoever, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Eternal thanks to Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, for the consolation that flows from hence! May so high and glorious a privilege oblige all that are interested in it, to the exercise of universal holiness, remembering that as the privileges of the gospel are glorious and great, so the duties it requires are exact and strict. If we would enjoy the consolation in the last verse of this chapter (here dilated upon) we must perform the duty in the first verse, (there insisted upon) namely, to walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit; otherwise the privilege of non-condemnation there, and of no separation from the love of God in Christ Jesus here, will neither belong unto us, or ever be enjoyed and improved by us.

CHAPTER IX.

Our apostle, in this and the two following chapters labors mightily to convince his countrymen the Jews, of their obstinacy against God, in rejecting his counsel concerning their justification by faith in Christ: and that this obstinacy of theirs was the certain cause of their rejection, or casting out of the favor of God, and of the calling of the Gentiles, that is, of investing the Gentiles with the privileges of the abdicated Jews. And because he foresaw that this doctrine of the rejection of the Jews, and calling of the Gentiles, would be looked upon as a hard saying, and be marvellously offensive and displeasing, he begins this chapter with a most solemn protestation, that what he said did not proceed from the least disaffection towards them, much less from an exulcerated prejudice against them; but calls Christ and the Holy Ghost to witness, that he spake the truth impartially, and did not lie. For thus he says:

I SAY the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost;

Observe here, 1. The apostle's solemn asseveration or oath; he calls Christ and the Holy Ghost to witness for the truth of what he says, which is the very formality of an oath. Learn thence, That it is not barely lawful, but in some cases expedient and necessary to assert and confirm by oath the truth and certainty of what we speak; in cases of great moment, which cannot otherwise be sufficiently confirmed, a christian may establish his saying by an oath. Observe, 2. The persons whom the apostle swears by, Christ and the Holy Ghost; he calls them to be witness of the sincerity of his conscience in what he doth assert: I say the truth in Christ, &c. But why doth the apostle swear by the name of Christ, and not rather by the name of God, seeing the Jews did not believe his divinity, and so were not like to give any whit the more credit to what was attested by him? I answer, Probably to assert the Godhead of Christ, which the Jews generally denied, and therefore wanted that honor which was and is due unto it. None but God was to be sworn by: the apostle swearing by Christ, proves him to be truly and really God; as also the Holy Ghost: for an oath being an act of religious worship, and the apostle swearing by Christ and the Holy Ghost, doth thereby acknowledge their divinity, according to the words of Moses in Deut. vi. 13. "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name." Observe, 3. As the apostle appeals to Christ and the Holy Ghost, so also to his own conscience, as the avoucher and witness of the truth of what he says My conscience also bearing me witness. Learn thence, That God has placed a conscience in every man, whose office it is to bear witness of all his words and actions; yea, of all his thoughts and inward affections. Conscience is God's register, to record whatever we think, speak, or act; and happy he whose conscience bears witness for him, and doth not testify against him; who can say with the apostle here, "My conscience beareth me witness, that I lie not, but say the truth in Christ."

2 That I have great heaviness, and continual sorrow in my heart.

The original word signifies such sorrow as is found with women in travail; a sorrow continually affecting his heart, and afflicting his spirit, for his countrymen and kinsmen the Jews, upon the account of their obstinate infidelity, obduration of heart, and spirit of slumber which was fallen upon them, which had provoked God to resolve to cast them off, to reject their nation, and to scatter them up and down throughout the world. Behold here, 1. What are the dismal effects and dreadful consequences of obstinate unbelief, under the offers of Christ tendered to persons in and by the dispensation of the gospel, without timely repentance; the issue will be final rejection, inevitable condemnation, and unutterable. Behold, 2. The true spirit of christianity; it puts men upon mourning for the sins and calamities of others in a very sensible and affectionate manner. Good men ever have been, and are men of tender and compassionate dispositions; a stoical apathy, an indolency of heart, or want of natural affection, is so far from being a virtue, or matter of just condemnation unto any man, that the deepest sorrow and heaviness of soul, in some cases, well becomes persons of the greatest piety and wisdom. Learn, 3. That great sorrow and continual heaviness of heart for the miseries of others, whether imminent or incumbent, but especially for the sins of others, is an undoubted argument, sign, and evidence of a strong and vehement love toward them. The apostle's great heaviness and continual sorrow for the Jews, his brethren, was a great instance and evidence of his unfeigned love and affection to them.

3 For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh :

That is, "So great is my concern for the salvation of my brethren the Jews, that I could undergo the greatest misery and evil that can befall myself, to prevent their destruction." This wish of St. Paul is plainly an hyperbolical expression of his great affection to his countrymen the Jews, and his zeal for their salvation, which was so intense and vehement, that were a thing reasonable and lawful, were it proper, and could avail to the procuring their salvation, he could have wished the greatest evil to himself; for their sakes, not only to be excommunicated from communion with the church of Christ, but to be separated from Christ himself. If it be said, that such a wish is sinful and unnatural, to desire the salvation of others, with our own damnation; I answer, true: and therefore the apostle's words are not an absolute and positive wish; he doth not say, I wish; but I could wish; just as we are wont to say, when we would express a thing to the height, which is not fit nor intended to be done by us; "I could wish so or so: I could even be content to do this or that." Which kind of expression no man takes for a strict and precise declaration of our minds, but for figurative expressions of a very great and vehement passion. Thus here, the apostle says not, I wish, but I could even wish. Were it proper to make such a wish, I could even wish so great a blessing to my brethren, though with the loss of my own happiness. Hence learn, 1. That it is neither lawful nor reasonable for any man to renounce his own eternal salvation, and to be willing to be damned upon any account whatever, be it for the good of the brethren, or for the glory of God himself. The very thought of such a thing is enough to make human nature tremble at its very foundation: for the desire of our own happiness is the deepest principle that God has planted in our natures: and to pretend a reason from the glory of God, is impossible; because our damnation cannot make for the glory of God, unless by our own impenitency and wilful obstinacy, we have deserved damnation. Learn, 2. That such may be the ardency of a saint's affection towards others, and so fervent his desires for their conversion and salvation, that he may be willing to sacrifice himself, and all that is dear unto him in this world, for the accomplishing of that end: "I could wish I were accursed from Christ for my brethren, &c."

4 Who are Israelites: to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises;

5 Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.

Our apostle, to vindicate himself for bearing such a passionate affection to the Jews, and for being so highly concerned for their eternal welfare, doth, in these two verses, recount and sum up the high privileges and prerogatives belonging to the Jews above any other nation under heaven; namely, these, they were Israelites, that is the seed and posterity of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; To whom pertaineth the adoption; that is, national adoption, not personal; God adopting the nation of the Jews to be an holy people to himself, and calling them his sons and his firstborn: And the glory; that is, the glorious presence of God among them, the temple, the ark, but particularly the Shechinah, or divine presence, from between the cherubims: And the covenants; that is, the covenant made with Abraham and Moses, the old and new covenant. Jer. xxxi. 32. And the giving of the law; it was the prerogative of this people, that all their laws, ceremonial, judicial, and moral, were composed and delivered to them by God himself. And the service of God; that is, they only had the true worship of God amongst them, and no other nation could have the like, but by being a debtor unto them for it: And the promises; that is, in general, all the blessings promised to them in the land of Canaan; and, in particular, the promise of the Messiah, or God's gracious purpose and intention to send his Son into the world, to accomplish its redemption: Whose are the fathers; that is, the beloved fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, were their ancestors, and they their offspring: Of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came; that is, of which Israelites Christ came; the promised Messias according to the flesh, or human nature, was their offspring, even he, who, according to his divine nature, was over all, God blessed for evermore. Note here, 1. How the apostle reserves the greatest privilege for the last: Christ's being born one of their nation, and according to the flesh, descended from the Jewish stock, this was the topping privilege. Note, 2. That this restrictive clause, according to the flesh, plainly supposeth another nature in Christ, according to which he came not from the Israelites, which can be no other but the divine nature or God-head, which, in the following words, is attributed to him: Who is over all, God blessed for evermore. Which glorious title given to Christ, as it highly exalts the prerogative of the Jews, as being a people of whom so blessed and great a person descended; so, on the other hand, it aggravates their sin and condemnation, in rejecting a person of such infinite worth and dignity, notwithstanding he descended from them. Now from the whole, learn, 1. That a fulness or richness of instituted means of grace, for the true knowledge and worship of God, is matter of high dignation and gracious condescension from God to man: here the glory, the covenants, the service of God, &c. are numbered amongst the great and gracious respects vouchsafed by God to the Jews. Learn, 2. That the highest privileges and vouchsafements from God may be conferred upon a people who are neither pleasing to God nor accepted with him: such were the Jews, to whom the forementioned privileges did belong, a people rejected by God for their obduracy and unbelief. Learn, 3. That it is no small honor to be of the race or kindred of such as have been holy saints and faithful servants of the most high and holy God: the Jews here were very honorable, as they were the seed of Abraham; but much more so, had they trod in the steps, and done the works of their father Abraham. Learn, 4. That Jesus Christ, who was of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, was yet according to his divine nature, Lord over all, God blessed for evermore: He is over all, that is, over all things, and over all persons: and he is blessed for evermore, which is the constant title given to him that is God, and to none but him. The Socinians, to avoid the force of this text, which fully proves the divinity of Christ, turn the words into a thanksgiving for Christ, and read them thus: of whom Christ was, according to the flesh: God who is over all, be blessed for ever. A manifest perversion of the sense of the apostle's words, which was to show, that according to the flesh he descended from Abraham; but that he had another nature, which was not derived from Abraham, even a divine nature, which was not derived from Abraham, even a divine nature, according to which he was over all, God blessed for evermore.

6 Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel:

7 Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

8 That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed.

9 For this is the word of promise: At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son,

Here the apostle answers an objection against the rejection of the Jews: "if they be cast off by God, what will become of the promise of God made to Abraham? saying, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed." He answers, by distinguishing a two-fold seed that Abraham had: some were only his carnal seed, or the children of his flesh; others were his spiritual seed, or the children of his faith. Now the carnal seed of Abraham, born according to the course of nature, were not the children of God, to whom the promise was made, but the children represented by Isaac, born by the supernatural power of the Spirit of God; these are to be accounted the true seed of Abraham, mentioned in the covenant, when God says, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. So that the force of the apostle's argument lies thus: The rejection of such Jews, or such of Abraham's seed only who were so according to the flesh, cannot make the word or promise of God to Abraham and his seed of no effect, because he made no absolute promise to them as such. But, says the apostle, none of those Jews, whose rejection I speak of, have any such promise made to them; therefore the rejection of some of Abraham's natural seed doth not, cannot made void the word and promise of God. Learn hence, 1. That the promises of God to his children and people, are firm and stable; they shall not be made void, but be accomplished and made good to those that have a title to them, and interest in them, and fulfil the conditions of them: Not as though the word or promise of God has taken no effect: All are not Israel that are of Israel. Learn thence, 2. That as all were not true Israelites of old that did bear the name of Israelites; so all are not true Christians at this day, who take upon them the name of Christ, and bear the name of Christians. Learn, 3. That men are very prone to bear up themselves upon the piety of their ancestors, though strangers, in practice, to their piety; as the Jews boasted they were the seed of Abraham, but did not the works of Abraham; whereas men are so far from being God's children, because they had godly parents, that Christ told the Jews, who came forth out of Abraham's own loins, that they were of their father the devil. John viii. 44.

10 And not only this, but when Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac:

11 (For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth.)

12 It was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger.

13 As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.

Our apostle having in the foregoing verses, proved, from what was done in Abraham's family, that it was the purpose and pleasure of God to account only those for Abraham's seed who were the children of his faith, and to reject the rest for their unbelief; in these verses he prosecutes the same argument, by insisting upon another special dispensation of God in the family of Isaac, whose wife Rebecca had twins, namely, Jacob and Esau, and had neither of them any thing in them to move God to love the one, and dislike the other: Yet a reference was given to the one, before the other: so that the apostle's argument runs thus: "As Jacob and Esau were begotten of the same father, born of the same mother, lay together in the same womb, and had neither of them done any thing at all to oblige or disoblige Almighty God; yet he was pleased to make a difference between them and their posterity after them, giving the beloved Canaan to Jacob and his seed, which by birth-right belonged to Esau and his offspring: so in like manner is it the will and pleasure of God, that the believing Gentiles should become heirs of the promise by faith in Christ, and that the unbelieving Jews should be rejected and cast off for their infidelity." Learn hence, 1. That Almighty God chooses persons to the participation of divine favors. Learn, 2. That the choice which God makes of men to the enjoyment of that special favor of being his peculiar people, is not according to their external privileges or works, but according to his own free pleasure. Learn, 3. That as Jacob's and Esau's being unborn, and having done neither good nor evil, is used as an argument to prove, that the choice of the one before the other could not be of works; so it is a strong argument against the pre-existence of souls, and their being sent unto bodies by way of punishment for former sins: for upon that supposition, it could not be true, that the children had done neither good nor evil before they were born, seeing they might both have sinned in that state of pre-existence. Learn, 4. and observe, that the apostle doth not say, that before the children had done either good or evil, God said, Jacob have I loved, and Esau hated, but only, the elder shall serve the younger. Hated here may be taken two ways, either, 1.

For a less degree of love. God preferring the seed of Jacob before the posterity of Esau, giving the former the good land of Canaan, to the latter the barren mountain of Seir. Or, 2. If hatred be taken in its strictest sense, then God is said to hate Esau, that is, the Edomites, after their wicked and unnatural behaviour toward their brethren the Israelites: and upon that occasion, see Obadiah, ver. 10. "For thy violence against thy brother Jacob, shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever." Nothing renders a person the object of God's hatred but sin: he doth not hate the devil himself as he is his creature, but only as he is a sinner. God adjudges none to eternal perdition, but with respect to sin. Observe, 5. That Jacob and Esau are not here to be considered personally, but collectively; for the Israelites that descended from Jacob, and for the Edomites which sprang from Esau; for Esau in his own person did not serve Jacob, but the Edomites did serve the Israelites. Thus the elder did serve the younger. Again, it appears, that Job and all his friends were of the posterity of Esau: God did not then hate the person, or all the posterity of Esau, but only those of them who by their violence and wickedness rendered themselves the object of his hatred.

14 What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid.

15 For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

The apostle having by the two foregoing instances asserted his doctrine, concerning the purpose and decree of God to justify those that should believe in his Son, be they Gentiles or Jews; and consequently made it good, that no word or promise of God falls to the ground by the rejection of the unbelieving Jews; proceeds in this verse to demonstrate the righteousness of God in the execution of this his purpose. Is there then, says he, unrighteousness or injustice with God? God forbid. As if the apostle had said, "Is there any cause to say, that God who preferred the posterity of Isaac before that of Ishmael, and the seed of Jacob before the numerous offspring of Esau; is there any just reason to say, that God is now unjust in calling the Gentiles, and upon their faith owning them for his people, the spiritual seed of Abraham, and rejecting the Jews because of their unbelief? God forbid that we should accuse him of unrighteous dealings upon this account." Learn hence, That God is just, infallibly and inflexibly just and righteous in all his dealings with, and dispensations towards the children of men: is there unrighteousness with God? That is there is none, there can be none. Learn, 2. That all such tenets or doctrines which reflect any manner of unrighteousness upon God, or charge him with hard dealing, ought to be disclaimed with the utmost abhorrence and detestation: "Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid." Observe next, How the apostle proves that there is no unrighteousness in this dispensation of God, in rejecting the Jews, and calling the Gentiles, because he had said to Moses, he would show mercy, where, when, and to whom, or to what people he pleased. If therefore, upon the infidelity of the Jews, he will call the idolatrous Gentiles, and receive them to be his people, who can accuse him with any injustice upon that account? Shall not Almighty God dispense his favors where, and upon whom he pleases? May he not confer his kindness upon some, which he owes to none? Learn hence, That God is absolutely and ultimately resolved to follow the counsel of his own will, in and about the justification of sinners; and whatsoever he doth, or resolves to do, his will being the rule of righteousness, is for that reason exactly just and undeniably righteous.

16 So then it is not of him that willeth, nor, of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy.

As if the apostle had said, "That the foregoing instances abundantly show, that it is not of him that willeth; for Abraham willed that Ishmael might live to be a partaker of the blessing promised to his seed, when he said, Gen. xvii. 18. Oh that Ishmael might live before thee! Nor is it of him that runneth: for even Esau ran to fetch venison for his father, that he might receive the blessing, Gen. xxi. the wisdom of God saw fit to have it otherwise, and to confer the blessing upon Jacob! but it is of God that showeth mercy, that any one is chosen to be the seed to which the promise made to Abraham belongs, and so to be his church and people." Learn hence, That it is of God's mere grace and mercy, that any sinners are called and admitted to the privilege of justification and adoption, upon any terms and conditions whatsoever. The reason why the sinful and unworthy Gentiles were called to be a people, who were not a people, while the Jews were left out, and cast off for their obstinate unbelief, was not because the Gentiles were either more worthy or more willing, but from God's discriminating grace and mercy: "It is not of him that willeth, but of God that showeth mercy."

17 For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

Our apostle here proceeds to remove another objection, namely, the seeming injustice, or severity of rejecting the Jews, and reserving them to wrath, giving them up to an obdurate heart, because they would not accept of the way which the wisdom of God had appointed for their justification; namely faith in his Son Jesus Christ. This he clears by another instance: to wit, that of Pharaoh, who had so often hardened his own heart obstinately, and provoked God at last to harden him judicially. For this cause says God, have I raised thee up: in the original it is, I have made thee to stand; that is, "I have sustained thee, and kept thee alive, when thou deservedst, and mightest justly have expected to be cut off by the several plagues inflicted on thee, for thy obstinate hardness of heart, That I might show my power in thee, &c. Or, I have patiently borne thy stubbornness for a long time, that my power and justice might more illustriously appear at last in that conspicuous judgment, which I will execute upon thee in the sight of all the nations of the earth." Learn hence, That some sinners, whom the patience of God has long waited upon, are preserved of him, and raised out of great and imminent dangers by him for this end; namely, to make them examples of his just indignation against stubborn and obdurate rebels, and that in the most illustrious and signal manner. For this cause have I raised thee up, that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

18 Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.

As if he had said, "From these scripture instances, we may gather and conclude, that God may, without the least injustice, magnify his mercy, in sparing and pardoning some sinners, and render his justice glorious in punishing others; yes, in punishing sin with sin, hardening them judicially, who had hardened themselves obstinately." Here observe, That God did not harden Pharaoh's heart by any positive act or influx upon it, by infusing any evil into it, for this would make God the author of sin; but he was hardened by way of judiciary tradition, after he had long hardened himself. First he was delivered up into the hands of satan, who deluded him by the magicians counterfeiting the same miracle that Moses wrought; and this hardened him against the belief of any thing that Moses either did or said. Secondly, He was delivered up to his own lusts, particularly, idolatry, ambition, and covetousness, and these hardened Pharaoh's heart. As an idolater, he was loath to receive a message from the God of Israel, whom he knew not; "Who is the Lord," says he, "that I should obey him?" I know not the Lord." As an ambitious prince, it went to his very heart, to hear so mean a man as Moses control him in his own dominions, saying, "Let the people go, that they may serve the Lord." This enraged him, to hear of any Lord over that people but himself; and as a covetous man he was loath to hear of parting with a people, by whose pains, in making brick, he had so great an income. Thus Pharaoh's affected hardness, was followed with inflicted hardness. Learn hence, That God doth justly deliver that man up to hardness of heart, by way of punishment; who has often hardened his own heart against God by repeated acts of sin.

Iuste toties cor ejus obduratur in pœnam, Quoties ipse cor suum obduravit inculpam.

Lightfoot.

19 Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will?

20 Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?

21 Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump, to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?

Here the apostle brings in the unbelieving and rejected Jews making an objection against God: "if the case be thus, that God doth sometimes, and that justly, leave obdurate sinners to harden themselves, why is he offended at it, and complains of it? If God hardeneth us because he will, why doth he find fault with us for our hardness of heart? For who hath at any time resisted his will? How is it in our power to avoid being hardened, if it be his will that we should be hardened?" Learn hence, That guilty sinners are full of hard thoughts of God, and very prone to think the divine dispensations unreasonable, if not unrighteous; but upon false and mistaken grounds; "Why doth he find fault? Who hath resisted his will?" To this objection, the apostle returns a very smart answer, saying, "Who art thou, Oh man, that repliest against God? Shall, &c." In which answer, Observe, 1. A vehement obijuration or reproof. 2. A substantial vindication of the righteousness and wisdom of God, in his proceedings with men. Note, 1. The obijuration or reproof drawn up in an interrogative form, which argues great intendment of mind in the person speaking: Nay, but, Oh man, who art thou? As if the apostle had said, "What bold and unheard-of presumption is this, that man, blind and ignorant man, guilty, sinful man, obnoxious to wrath and eternal death, that he should undertake to reprove and censure, to judge and condemn the actions and dispensations of the most high and holy God, as if they were crooked and perverse, defective either in justice or wisdom!" Learn hence, That it is no less than horrid and horrible presumption, for so weak, sinful and worthless a creature as man is, to contest or dispute with the most high God about the wisdom or righteousness of any of his ways: "O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" Note, 2. How the apostle vindicates the wisdom and righteousness of God in his proceedings with men in general and against the Jews in particular; showing, That there is no more cause to make this objection against God for rejecting the unbelieving Jews, and showing favor to the believing Gentiles, than for the potter to contend with him that formed it, why he made it of such a shape, and not of another figure; or for the clay, when it is marred and broken, to complain of the potter, for making of one part of it a vessel unto honor, and the other unto dishonor. Learn hence, That men, who have made themselves obnoxious to the justice of God, by a long continued course in sin and disobedience against God, (as the unbelieving Jews here spoken of evidently did) have no cause to complain, either of God's severe proceedings against themselves, or of his favorable dispensations towards others. What just cause had the Jews, rejected for their own unbelief and hardness of heart, to murmur against God for showing mercy to the Gentiles, who submitted to the terms of mercy?

22 What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction:

23 And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, 24 Even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles.

presently punish the obstinate and unbelieving Jews according to their desert, but beareth with them, and exercises forbearance towards them, and they go on, by their continual rebellions to make themselves fit objects of his wrath: but he is pleased still, with great gentleness and patience, to bear with them, as he did with Pharaoh; and if, after all, they be more hardened, as he was by God's forbearance, what show of injustice, I pray, is it, if he punishes them at last with greater severity, as God did him? If he swallow up their nation, destroy their temple, ruin their city, what injustice is it to destroy those, who, by making themselves objects of God's wrath, are fitted for destruction?" Here note, That the vessels of wrath fitted for destruction, are such as the apostle saith, God endured with much long-suffering; and therefore, they were not made vessels of wrath by God, but by themselves; after they had filled up the measure of their sin, and thereby fitted themselves as vessels for destruction. God endured them with much long-suffering, though judgment at last took hold upon them to the uttermost. Learn hence, That Almighty God may, without the least suspicion of injustice or unrighteousness, punish, with the utmost severity, such a person or a people, whom he hath long endured, with much forbearance, to go on in a course of sinning, if at last they repent not. This was the manner of God's dealing with the Jews here. His lenity towards the Gentiles is next expressed, ver 22 "That he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, &c." As if the apostle had said, "Can God be taxed with unrighteousness, in showing the riches of his glorious grace and mercy towards the despised Gentiles, whom he hath called to the faith of Christ, and thereby fitted and prepared them to be vessels of mercy? Hath he not just right to show his mercy to such persons who have submitted to the terms upon which he has promised favor and acceptance, and to own them as his particular people, although they be not the natural seed of Abraham, seeing they are his spiritual? Note here, That as the unbelieving Jews were called in the former verse, Vessels of wrath; so the believing Gentiles are called in this verse, Vessels of mercy; because the vessels are fitted and formed by the hand of the artificer, for the use to which they are designed, in like manner, are believers wrought by God, and framed by his Holy Spirit, and made meet to receive the mercy of God; that is, the fruits and effects of his mercy, especially, pardon of sin, and peace with God. Concerning the vessels of wrath, the apostle speaks positively, they are fitted for destruction: concerning the vessels of mercy, he speaks actively, that God has prepared them unto glory; that is, made them meet and fit by grace here, for glory hereafter. Learn thence, that the new creation of the saints, and all the spiritual workmanship that is found upon them, is to be ascribed unto God, and to the effectual working of his grace: "He hath afore prepared them unto glory." Learn, 2. That the fullest measures of glory hereafter, shall be the portion of such, and only such, as are first prepared by grace and holiness to receive them here. Learn, 3. That those only are vessels of mercy, prepared by God unto glory, who upon the evangelical call, have been prevailed with, by faith and repentance, to answer the call and command of God: "That he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even us whom he hath called.

25 As he saith also in Osee, I will call

As if the apostle had said, "What though God doth not them my people, which were not my people : and her beloved, which was not beloved.

26 And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people ; there shall they be called, The children of the living God.

Our apostle having hitherto vindicated the wisdom and righteousness of God, in the rejection of the Jews, and calling of the Gentiles; lest the Jews should stumble and take offence at it, in these, and the following verses, he proves that the calling of the Gentiles was long before foretold, both by the prophet Hosea, and the prophet Isaiah: by the prophet Hosea, chap. ii. 22. "I will call them my people, which were not my people" And chap. i. 10. "Instead of, Ye are not my people, it shall be said, Ye are the sons of the living God" Which expressions signify and import, God's receiving the Gentiles into the church, as an act of free and undeserved mercy, whom the Jews looked upon as cast-aways, as strangers, as dogs: accounting themselves only to be of his family and household. Next, he produces the testimony of Isaiah.

27 Esaias also crieth concerning Israel, Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved.

28 For he will finish the work and cut it short in righteousness; because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.

29 And as Esaias said before, Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodom, and been made like unto Gomorrah.

Here the apostle shows how the rejection of the obdurate Jews was foretold by Isaiah, as well as Hosea: that although the number of the Jews, according to the flesh, were as the sand of the sea, yet the greatest number of them would be passed by for their unbelief, and a remnant only saved. This the prophet speaks of those Jews who escaped the hand of Sennacherib; and the apostle makes the deliverance of those few, a type of them that should believe in Christ, and be saved by him. And the prophet farther adds, That God would finish his work and cut it short in righteousness; that is, God will make quick work with that incorrigible and unreclaimable people; such swift destruction shall come upon the multitude of evil-doers in the land of Israel, as shall bring them very low, cut them short, lop them off, so that they shall be left as a tree, of which only the stump remaineth. They shall be reduced to a small remnant, and a remnant only of that remnant shall be converted. Now first, From the literal import of these words, "Though Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant only shall be saved," we learn, That a numerous people or nation, among whom God hath been truly worshipped, and this for a long season, may, notwithstanding, for their wickedness, be destroyed and be reduced by God to a very small number. Secondly, From the typical import of these words, together with the apostle's scope in citing of them, we gather, that amongst those multitudes who are called by the gospel to believe on our Lord Jesus Christ, and who make a profession of his name and truth, the number of those who will be at last eternally saved, will be but comparatively small and little: A remnant shall be saved.

30 What shall we say then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteousness have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith:

31 But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness.

32 Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled at that stumbling-stone:

As if the apostle had said, "Lord, what shall we say to this great mystery of grace, the calling of the Gentile world, and the cutting off and casting away most of the present Jewish nation? That the Gentiles who lived in ignorance and blindness, in sin and unrighteousness, should attain to righteousness by faith in Christ; and that the Israelites, who had God's own righteous law amongst them, and trusted to be justified by the observation of it, yet should not attain to that righteousness which God accepteth. And wherefore have they not attained it? but because they sought not justification by that faith which God prescribed for that end, namely, faith in the Mediator; but thought it must be attained by the works of the law, keeping all the ceremonial precepts, by which no flesh can be justified; and the reason why they sought it not by faith was this, They stumbled at the stumbling-stone; that is, at the Lord Jesus Christ, taking offence at his poverty and mean condition in the world, and at the spirituality of his kingdom." Learn hence, That the great humiliation of Christ in the days of his flesh, did prove a snare and occasion to many persons to despise and reject him, to stumble at him, and fall foul upon him. But in what respects is Christ called a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. Ans. Negatively; not because he was by God designed either intentionally, or accidentally, to be such. All stumbling and offence taken at Christ are accidental, proceeding from the depravity of man, not from the design of God. Much less were the Jews fore-appointed and ordained by God to stumble at his Son; for God appoints no man to do that which he prohibits all men from doing. And as no man is necessitated by the decree of God, so neither is he constrained or necessitated by satan, by corruption, or any other instrument, to stumble or take offence at Christ; for actions necessitated upon men are neither demeritorious nor punishable. But positively Christ is called a stone of stumbling, because men willingly ignorant, and wilfully perverse, do take offence at him. Though God never designed or desired any man's stumbling at Christ, yet he knew and foresaw, that many, very many, would stumble at him; and accordingly expressed him by a prophetic character, answering the event, and predicting that which in time came to pass: Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-block.

33 As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-stone, and rock of offence; and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

Observe here, 1. What use and office our Lord Jesus Christ is of to his church: he is a stone, a corner stone, the chief corner stone; a corner stone for strength, the chief corner stone for ornament and beauty; as the corner stone bears the weight of the building, so doth Christ bear the weight of his church, and supports all the pillars and supporters of it; yet this precious corner stone is accidentally and eventually a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence. Some are offended at the poverty of his person, and the meanness of his condition; others at the sublimity and sanctity of his doctrine; some are offended at his cross, others at his free grace; but such as, instead of being offended at him, do believe on him, shall never be ashamed of, or confounded by him. Learn hence, That those who, according to the direction of the gospel, do believe in our Lord Jesus Christ, shall never have cause to be ashamed. Here note, What they shall not be ashamed of, when and why they shall not be ashamed. Answer, He shall never be ashamed of his choice; he shall not be ashamed of his profession; he shall never be ashamed of the cause and interest of Christ which he has owned and vindicated in the world; he shall never be ashamed of the work and service of Christ, nor of any time sincerely spent in that work and service; he shall never be ashamed of his reproaches and sufferings, tribulations and persecutions, for the sake of Christ. In a word, he shall never be ashamed hereafter, that he never was ashamed here, either of Christ and his gospel, his work and service, or his cause and interest. Note, 2. When the believer shall not be ashamed; namely, when he is called forth to bear his testimony of Christ before the world, at the hour of death and at the day of judgment; neither the dreadfulness of the day, nor the majesty of the Judge, nor the number of the accusers, nor the impartiality of the sentence, nor the separation that shall then be made, will in the least cause him to be ashamed. Note, 3. Why the believer shall never be ashamed. 1. What the sincere believer shall not be ashamed of? Ans. The cause of shame is removed and taken away, namely, sin; those only from whom he can reasonably fear shame, will never be ashamed of him; he can look God and Christ, his own conscience, and the whole world, in the face, without shame and blushing. Oh that sinners would now be ashamed of their unbelief! which otherwise will put them to eternal shame, and bring upon them everlasting confusion in the day of the Lord: "Whosoever believeth on him, shall never be ashamed; but he that believeth not on him, shame and the wrath of God abideth on him."

CHAPTER X.

Our apostle prosecutes in this the argument which he had begun in the former chapter, viz. The temporary rejection of his countrymen the Jews, for their obstinate refusal of the way of justification which the wisdom of God had prescribed, namely, by faith in his Son Jesus Christ; and well knowing, that what he was about to say upon that argument, would sound very harsh in their ears who were so addicted to see justification only by the works of the law, he begins this chapter, as he did the former, with a most solemn protestation of his unfeigned love unto them, and most fervent desire for their salvation; for thus he speaks:

BRETHREN, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved.

Where observe, 1. The mighty concern which the apostle had for the eternal salvation of his countrymen the Jews, who sought his destruction; their salvation lay very near his heart, and he was afraid they should miss it, by taking the wrong way for obtaining it, but by building all their hopes of salvation upon such a bottom as would never bear the fabric, but utterly fail them, namely, justification by works. Observe, 2. What it was that made the apostle so concerned for the Jews: it was not upon the account of their wicked lives and scandalous immoralities, but for their bad principles and fundamental errors. They opposed the honor of God to the Son of God, and the observation of the law to the faith of Christ. From whence learn, That we ought to be concerned for those who lie under damnable errors, although they be men of good carriage and commendable conversation. Not only the vicious and ungodly, but the erroneous and unsound, are to be the objects of our pity and prayer: for error is as damnable as vice; the one is an open road, the other a by-path to hell and destruction; and accordingly he that has a due care of his soul's salvation, will be as much afraid of erroneous principles, as of debauched practices.

2 For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.

As if the apostle had said, "I can bear them witness that many, very many of the Jews, have a zealous desire in their way to please God, and do what is acceptable in his sight; but though it be warm, it is but a blind zeal, and not according to right knowledge." Here observe, 1. The apostle is desirous to say the best he could of his countrymen the Jews; he commends the good meaning of their zeal, but blames the ill conduct of it. It was a misguided and mistaken zeal, and not directed as it ought. Zeal is either one of the best or worst things in the world: it is a good thing, when it is right in its object, right in the measure and degree, and pursued by right means. As to the object of our zeal, it must be that which is certainly good, and considerably good : certainly good, or else we are zealous for we know not what ; and considerably good, or else it doth not deserve our zeal. To be zealous and hot beyond all due measures for the observation of a ceremony or custom, as some in the christian church were of old about the observation of Easter, is certainly a zeal not according to knowledge. Again, zeal must be prosecuted by lawful and warrantable means ; we must not from a principle of zeal do any evil, that good may come. But there is a zeal amongst the church of Rome, which I am sure cannot be according to knowledge, and that is a zeal for ignorance. This is a zeal peculiar to themselves ; they will not allow the people to understand what they do in the service of God ; they require them to pray, but will not let them know what they pray for ; and all this under a pretence, that ignorance, which makes a man a block, is the mother of devotion ; as if the less men understand the service of God, the better he was pleased with it, and the more they were edified by it.

3 For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

That is, the Jews being ignorant of God's way of justification by faith in Christ, discovered in the gospel, and relying upon, and trusting to their own works, their obedience to the ceremonial and moral law, to justify and save them, they have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God ; that is, to the way and method which the wisdom of God has discovered for the justification of a sinner by the blood of his Son. Observe here, 1. That by God's righteousness we are to understand that righteousness which Christ has wrought for us, which God bestows upon us, and the gospel reveals unto us : by establishing their own righteousness, it is to be understood their resolution and endeavour to depend upon their own works ; their obedience to the law for their justification before God, in opposition against, and in contradiction to, that way of justification which God had declared ; namely, by faith in Christ Jesus, the one and only Mediator. Observe, 2. That upon the first opening of the gospel, no evangelical doctrine was more disrelished by the Jews than justification by the righteousness of Christ. They were possessed with this principle then, that eternal life was attainable only by the works of the law : and according to the example of the Jews at the beginning, persons ever since, even to this very day, are fond of that way of justification. The natural man is a proud man, he likes to live upon his own stock, he cannot stoop to a sincere and universal renunciation of his own righteousness, and to depend wholly upon the righteousness of another. It is natural for a man to choose rather to eat a brown crust, or wear a coarse garment, which he calls his own, than to feed upon the richest dainties, or wear the costliest robes, which he must receive as an alms from another. Lord, how hard is it to subdue this pride of spirit, and to be thoroughly convinced of the absolute necessity of another and a better righteousness than our own, to constitute us righteous in the sight of God ? From the whole, learn, 1. How dark sighted the wisest men are by nature in God's way of justifying and saving sinners ; ignorant of God's righteousness, that is, of the way which the wisdom of God has discovered for justifying guilty sinners by faith in his Son. This is known only by divine revelation, Rom. i. 17. "The righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith : it is purely an object of faith, and hangs all upon divine revelation, both as to the righteousness itself, and the manner of imparting it. Learn, 2. How absurd is the attempt and how injurious the design, to set up and establish a righteousness of our own, either in opposition to, or in conjunction with, the righteousness of God. Alas ! we fulfil the law only in sincerity, we cannot fulfil it to perfection ; and if it be not to perfection, cannot be to justification. Therefore, to trust to any righteousness of our own for justification before God, which is imperfect and polluted, is both sinful and unsafe. Sinful because it is confronting the plain declarations of the gospel ; and unsafe, because it evacuates Christ : for Christ is of no effect unto us ; whosoever are justified by the law, are fallen from grace, Gal. v. 4. Learn, 3. What an hindrance is pride to the salvation of men : it stiffens the will that it won't stoop to God's terms : they will not have justification in God's way, and they shall not have it in their own. Here it stuck with the Jews ; they would not submit to the righteousness of God ; and here it sticks with too many at this day. Learn, 4. Not to count a righteousness of your own needless to be possessed of, because you want the righteousness of another to confide and trust in. We plead the meritorious righteousness of Christ, to answer the demands of the law ; but contend for a personal righteousness of our own, to answer the commands of the gospel. Christ doth indeed ease us of the load of our sins, but not discharge us from the care of our duty. Our being in Christ frees us indeed from condemnation, but then that inbeing must be proved by our holy walking : not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, Rom. 5. 1. Learn, 5. To submit to the righteousness of God as ever you would enjoy peace with God. The more holy we are, and the more sanctified we grow, the meaner opinion we shall have of ourselves, and the more need of a Saviour, and of justification by him ; and shall bless God for the gospel, in which the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith ; and shall dread it as hell to be found amongst the number of those who, though they be not ignorant of God's righteousness, yet will go about to establish their own righteousness, refusing to submit to the righteousness of God.

4 For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

There was a threefold law of God, which Christ may be said to be the end of ; namely, judicial, ceremonial, and moral. 1. The judicial law was that which God by Moses delivered to the Jews, containing directions for the administration of their civil government. Now Christ was the end of this law, as he has abolished it : for the Jewish polity was to continue till the coming of the Messiah, and not longer, Gen. xlix. Dan. ix. 2. The ceremonial law was that which did prescribe certain sacred rights and ceremonies, to be observed in the external worship of God by the people of Israel. The former law had relation to them as a nation, this as they were a church. Now Christ is the end of this law, as he has abrogated it. All the ceremonies of that law were shadows and types of Christ; now the shadows were to cease, when once the substance was come. 3. The moral law is that holy and eternal rule of righteousness given by God to men, for the right ordering of their thoughts, words, and actions towards God, their neighbour, and themselves. This law is summarily comprehended in the ten commandments, and is called the law of righteousness; Rom. ix. 31. the royal law, by St. James, chap. ii. 8. Now Christ may be said to be the end of this law, 1. As he is the scope of it. 2. As he is the accomplishment of it. The precepts of the law point at Christ, as he by whom they are accomplished; the promises of the law point at him, as he by whom they are ratified; and the threatenings of the law may be said to point at him, as he by whom they are escaped. Christ was the sum of the law as well as the substance of the gospel. In a word, 3. Christ is the end of this law, inasmuch as he is to a believer, what the law would have been unto him if he could have perfectly kept it; namely, righteousness and life, justification and salvation. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, to be imputed to every one that believeth in him, the law being our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith, Gal. iii. 25.

5 For Moses described the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things, shall live by them.

As if the apostle had said, "Righteousness by faith can never be obtained by the works of the law, because Moses describeth the righteousness of the law thus, That the man that doeth these things shall live by them; that is, a prosperous and happy life in the land of Canaan, say some; and eternal life in heaven, say others." But then by the law must be understood the moral, not the ceremonial law, according to that of our Saviour, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments;" that is, the moral law. This do, and thou shalt live. Where note, That such as seek justification and salvation by the works of the law, must keep the moral law perfectly and exactly; which being impossible to man in his fallen estate, Christ has obtained of his Father, that for the sake of his righteousness, our sincere, though imperfect obedience, should find acceptance with God, and be available to salvation.

6 But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise; Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above;)

7 Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead:)

8 But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach;

In which words the apostle seems to set forth the great anxiety and trouble of mind which is found with an awakened sinner: he is at a loss to find out the way how he shall stand justified in the sight of God. The law propounds to him life, but it is upon an impossible condition; but the gospel clearly reveals to him, that Christ has performed what is necessary for his justification, and that, by a practical and lively faith, he shall have an interest in it. We need not therefore say, "Who shall ascend into heaven for us?" for Christ being ascended, he hath given us a convincing proof, that the propitiation for our sins is perfect: for otherwise our surety had not been received into God's sanctuary: therefore to be under perplexities how we may be justified, is to deny the value of his righteousness, and the truth of his ascension. And say not, "Who shall descend into the deep?" that is, to bear the torments of hell, and expiate sin; for this is to deny the virtue of his death, whereby he appeased God, and redeemed us from wrath to come. In the law, the condemning righteousness of God is made visible: in the gospel, his justifying righteousness is revealed from faith to faith. Eternally magnified be omnipotent love, that the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ has graciously discovered how God may show mercy to repenting and returning sinners, without any prejudice or injury done to his justice. Hereby the soul is at once freed from the fear of God's wrath and anger, and has a lively hope of his love and favor. Lord, what sins are there which so entire a satisfaction doth not expiate? What torments can they deserve, which his wounds and stripes have not removed? God is just as well as merciful, in justifying him that believeth on Jesus. From the whole, note, That the way of acceptance with God, is so clearly stated and discovered in the gospel, that we need not be in any doubtful suspense where to find it, or seek other satisfaction than God has given us in his word. "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thine heart; that word of faith which we preach."

9 That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.

10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

Observe here, The two great and principal things which the gospel requires, in order to our justification and salvation. The first is, "Confession of Christ with our mouth;" that is, in all times of danger, particularly in a time of persecution, to own Christ Jesus our Lord, and to declare that we will serve him, and adhere to him, be ruled of him, and expect only to be saved by him. The second is, "to believe in our hearts, that God hath raised Christ from the dead." But why is the article of Christ's resurrection only named, seeing faith respects his birth, life, and death, &c. Ans. Because this article of the resurrection pre-supposeth all the rest of the antecedents to it, and consequents of it; as, namely, his incarnation, death and passion, ascension and intercession. This article therefore of the resurrection is put for all the rest, and includes all the rest; for as he could not have risen, had he not first died; so his death had availed us nothing, unless he had risen again. Learn hence, 1. That all those who would be accepted with God unto righteousness and life, must be such as do believe in Christ with the heart, and openly confess with the mouth, that he is the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world: "if thou confess and believe, thou shalt be saved." Learn, 2. That the principal seat and subject of faith is not the understanding barely, but the will, called here the heart. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness;" not the head. Although knowledge is so necessary to faith, that it is sometimes put for faith, as in Isa. liii. "By his knowledge, or by the knowledge of him, shall my righteous servants justify many;" yet there may be much light in the understanding, where there is no life in the will; much knowledge in the head, where there is no faith in the heart, nor obedience in the life. Therefore, says the apostle here, "with the heart man believeth, &c."

11 For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: For the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Observe here, How the apostle proclaims Jesus Christ a common and universal Saviour of all mankind who believe in him, without any discrimination or difference between Jew and Gentile: "Whosoever believeth on him, shall not be ashamed; and whosoever shall call upon his name, shall be saved." Where, by believing on him, and calling upon him, must be understood such a faith in him, as is the parent and principle of obedience to him. For the devil himself may as well pass for a believer, as a disobedient soul. If our works be no better than the works of devils, our faith is no better than theirs neither, in the account of God. He believes, so as not to be ashamed, who lives as he doth believe. In vain is it to expect salvation by Christ, if we do not yield subjection to him. Lord, how many are there that desire thou shouldst suffer for their sins, so they may have the satisfaction to commit them: content that thou shouldst bear the blame, so they may have the liberty to commit the faults? If they may but live in their sins, they take it kindly that Christ will die for them; but the design of Christ's death was to deliver us not only from the danger, but from the dominion of our sins; to free us not only from the wrath of God, but from the rage of our lusts.

14 How then shall they call on him, in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him, of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

15 And how shall they preach except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

The scope of the apostle in these words is to prove, that there was a necessity of preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, as well as to the Jews, in order to their believing on Christ; and his way of arguing is very forcible, demonstrative, and convincing. Thus, "God has by the prophets promised salvation to the Gentiles: but without calling on him, there is no salvation; and without faith, there is no calling upon him by prayer; and without hearing, there is no faith; and without a preacher, there is no hearing; and without solemn mission, or sending by Christ and his ministers, there can be no preacher." And the apostle's manner of speaking is by way of interrogation, which is equivalent to a negation; "How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" That is, it is impossible to do it, and it would be impious and wicked to do it. None must be the object of our prayers, but he that is the object of our faith and trust; now it is God alone that is the object of our faith and trust; therefore he alone must be prayed unto. And if so, then the practice of the papist in praying to angels and saints departed is very blame-worthy and abominable in the sight of God. How can they pray unto them, unless they believe in them, and trust in them? And if they trust in them, that curse falls upon them, "Cursed is that man that trusteth in man;" that is, in any creature. The truth is, if Christ himself were a mere man, and not God as well as man, we should sin by worshipping of him: but it is one good argument to prove the divinity of Christ, that the scripture represents him as the object of faith, and religious invocation. From the whole, observe, That the only way to heaven is by Christ, the only way to Christ is by faith, the only way to faith is by the word, it cometh by hearing; the only way, that is, the only ordinary way. What becomes of those that never heard of Christ in the preaching of the gospel, God only is fit to judge. This is certain, that all men at the great day shall be judged according to the law that they were under, and obliged by, and no other. Now promulgation being the essence of the law, the gospel cannot be a law to them to whom it was not promulgated, and made known: but a practical belief of the gospel is indispensably necessary to the salvation of them to whom it is revealed. Observe farther, The great reverence and high esteem which is due and payable to the preachers of the gospel, and that by the approbation of God himself. He commands us to admire the very feet of them that preach the gospel of his Son unto us, and bring glad tidings of good things; "How beautiful are the feet of them, &c." And for great reason should it be thus; because the ministers of the gospel are the messengers of Christ; they receive both their mission and commission from him; they are instructed by him, they negotiate for him, they speak in his name, they act in his stead; and whatsoever they either promise or threaten in God's name, he stands ready and resolved to perform it. Isa. xlv. 26. He "confirmeth the word of his servants, and performeth the counsel of his messengers." Lord, how beautiful and blessed are the feet of thy messengers, and ministers in thy account? Let them be so in thy people's estimation also. Learn hence, That nothing ought to be so welcome to us, and so joyfully entertained by us, as the preaching and preachers of the gospel; "How beautiful are the feet of them, &c."

16 But they have not all obeyed the gospel; For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report?

Here an objection is tacitly implied and answered, Some might say, "If the gospel be thus excellent, and the test of them that preach it so beautiful, whence was it that the Jews, to whom it was first preached, did not receive, and yield obedience to it?" The apostle answers, that this infidelity and obstinacy of the Jews was foretold by the prophets of old, particularly by Isaiah, who complains, chap. lii. 1. "Lord, who hath believed our report?" Learn hence, 1. That the faith of the gospel is not common to all that hear the gospel. True, the hearing of the word is necessary unto faith, but faith doth not necessarily follow the hearing of the word. Learn, 2. That the prophets of God did foresee, and by a spirit of prophecy foretel, what small success the preaching of the gospel would have to and among the Jews. Learn, 3. That yet the prophet's prediction was not the cause, but the consequence of the Jews' rejection of the gospel: it was not because the prophet said so, that they did not believe; but because they believed not, therefore the prophet said so: "They have not obeyed the gospel." for so Isaiah saith of them.

17 So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

As if the apostle had said, "It is very evident, and these testimonies show, that faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the preaching of the word of God." The grace of faith is wrought by the Spirit in the act of hearing; and the matter heard by which this faith is wrought is the word of God preached. Persons must hear, that they may believe; and God's word must be preached, that they may hear. A non-preaching minister, then, is no minister; he is like a bell without a clapper, or a crier without a voice; he neither answers the design of his commission, nor the end of the gospel's institution, which was to be the instrumental mean of faith; Faith cometh by hearing.

18 But I say, Have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.

It was no less than a miracle, that the gospel, in the space of a few years, should be preached to all the nations, and planted in the remotest parts of the world, and yet thus it was. Which makes St. Paul here apply that to the preaching of the apostles, which David applies to the preaching of the heavens. Ps. xix. 4. The gospel of Christ, like the sun in the firmament, casts its beautiful and glorious beams all the world over. For upon the commission given out by Christ to his apostles, to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, the apostles divided themselves into the several quarters of the world, for the speedy performance of this service, namely, the carrying of the light of the gospel, as the sun doth his light, unto all the nations of the earth. As if St. Paul had here said, "Like as the voice of the heavens are gone through the world, so is the voice of Christ, and the light of his gospel, which doth much more declare the glory of God, than the sun and the moon in the heavens can do. Some observe, That there was hardly any one considerable nation in the world, but within forty years after Christ's ascension, had the glad tidings of the gospel preached to it. Hence the apostle tells us, Tit. ii. 11. "That the grace of God, which bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men." That is, the gospel without restriction was tendered to all nations, Jew and Gentile; to all persons, bond and free, honorable and ignoble. Behold! the goodness and mercy of God, in enlightening the dark corners of the world, with this glorious light from heaven. Behold! the great power and efficacy of the word, under the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit. Behold! an example of laborious diligence and industry, in ministerial service! What pains did the apostles take? What hazards did they run? What journeys did they undertake, to preach Jesus Christ, to plant and propagate the everlasting gospel? Shall we not attend our flock, and travel from house to house to visit our charge, which falls within the compass of a few miles, when the apostles compassed sea and land, travelled far and near, labored night and day, to transmit the gospel to the ends of the world? Lord! how does this indefatigable diligence shame our supine negligence!

19 But I say, Did not Israel know? First, Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you.

20 But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me.

21 But to Israel he saith, All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.

Did not Israel know, that is, of the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, and of their own infidelity in rejecting it? This they might have known, both from the testimony of Moses and Esaias. First from Moses' testimony, who says, Dent. xxxii. I will provoke you, (Jews refusing to believe) unto jealousy by them that are (yet) no people (of God); and by a foolish nation, (so the Gentile were accounted by the conceited Jews) I will anger you. When God preferred the Gentiles before the Jews, the hearts of the latter were vexed with jealousy and anger, to behold all their privileges taken from them, and given to the former, whom they accounted a people most vile and despicable. The second testimony is that of Esaias, who the apostle says was very bold; that is, very plain and express, in foretelling God's calling of the Gentiles, and rejecting of the Jews; calling the Gentiles by his free grace, and seeking them that first sought him not; and casting off the Jews, who, after all his forbearance and long-suffering, did continue obstinately to reject the offers of his grace, and the tenders of his mercy. Here note, 1. The holy courage of this evangelical prophet Isaiah, in the discharge of his office: with great boldness and freedom he foretels the calling of the Gentiles, and casting off the Jews, although it cost him dear, even his life, being sawn asunder with a wooden saw, as some affirm. There ought to meet in the ministers and messengers of God, both courage and impartiality; courage in fearing no faces, impartiality in sparing no crimes. Note, 2. What little cause of reason the ministers of God have to sit down in despondency, after so many unwearied attempts made in vain to reclaim sinners from their wicked way; when they consider the infinite patience of God towards them, "who stretcheth forth his hands all the day long to a disobedient and gainsaying people; that is, patiently contends with their obstinacy and perverseness. Lord, why should we, that are sinners ourselves, think much to bear with sinners? Let us rather imitate thy example in waiting upon them with the offers of grace and mercy, and follow them with our melting entreaties and passionate importunities, till we overcome their obstinacy, or leave them totally inexcusable.

CHAPTER XI.

The design and scope of our apostle in this chapter, is two-fold:

1. To keep the Jews from dejection and despair. 2. To preserve the Gentiles from presumption and pride. To keep the Jews from despair, he tells them, That though God hath certainly rejected them for rejecting his Son, and the gospel of salvation by him, yet this rejection of theirs was neither total nor final: though many of them are blinded, yet not all; some believed then, and many more should believe afterwards, before the end of the world. To preserve the Gentiles from pride and presumption, he prescribes to them humility and lowliness of mind, not to be high minded, but fear; lest being ingrafted into the good olive, they should, for their security and unfruitfulness be broken off, as the Jews had been before them, who were natural branches. Thus he bespeaks them both:

I SAY then, Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.

Our apostle having shown, in the end of the foregoing chapter, that the Jews would be rejected, and the Gentiles called, begins this chapter, by answering a great and popular objection. Some hereupon might be ready to say, "If this be so, then God has cast away his covenant-people, violated his covenant-promise, forgot the seed of Abraham his friend." He answers, by his accustomed form of denial, God forbid; and then proceeds to show that the rejection of the Jews was not total; God did not reject them all, but the unbelieving part of them only. And this he proves by producing himself as an instance in the case, "I myself, says he, am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin." As if he had said, "I am myself a Jew by nature and nation, not a proselyte converted to the Jewish faith, but a Jew by lineal descent, of the seed of Abraham, according to the flesh; yet I am not cast off by God; therefore, God has not cast away his people." Learn hence, How many unbelievers soever God rejects, he will not cast away one soul that sincerely believes in his Son, and gives up himself to the obedience of the gospel. Believers are God's jewels; he will not cast them away. They are his children, his portion, his inheritance: he will never cast them off. They are united to him by the bond of the Holy Spirit, and he has engaged himself to them by the bond of an everlasting covenant. Believers love God and his truth for ever, and the God of truth will love them for ever. "God hath not cast away his people."

2 God hath not cast away his people, which he foreknew.—

Here we have a second argument, to prove that God would not wholly cast off the Jewish church and people; namely, because he had foreknown them; that is, had chosen the body of them to be a special and peculiar people to himself, above and before all the people of the earth: and has also foreknown, that is, foreseen, that many of them would through the assistance of his Holy Spirit, savingly believe on the promised Messiah. God never did, never will cast away such either among Jews or Gentiles.

—Wot ye not what the Scripture saith of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying,

3 Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life.

4 But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

Another instance is here produced, to prove that God had not suffered all the Jews to apostatize and fall away through unbelief; and that is the instance of Elias, in whose days there was such a general revolt among the Jews from the worship of the true God to Jeroboam's idolatry, that he thought himself alone. But God assures him, there was not such a dearth of saints as he feared, he having reserved to himself seven thousand true and faithful worshippers of himself, who had never bowed knee to the image of Baal. Learn hence, That even in times of universal apostacy and epidemical degeneracy, God has a number to stand up for, and witness to his name and truth, and that the number of them is more than we either imagine or believe. God has ever had, and always will have a seed to serve him, which shall be accounted to him for a generation; and although the number of revolvers be great, yet the number of the righteous is not small.

5 Even so then, at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace.

6 And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace: But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwise work is no more work.

Here we have St. Paul making application of the foregoing example to the present case. As Elias was not alone in the corrupt state of Israel then, so neither was the apostle alone now, in this time of general rejection of the Jewish church and nation. God had a number then, he has a remnant now, which, according to his free and gracious purpose, are brought to believe in his Son. Although the Jews who believed were few, in comparison of them that were rejected, called therefore a remnant which is but small and little in respect of the whole piece: yet there were many thousands of them that did believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and obtained, no doubt, salvation by him; Acts xxi. 20. "Thou seest brother, how many thousand Jews there are which do believe." Observe farther, The conclusion which the apostle doth infer and draw from the forementioned assertion: "If a remnant be saved according to the free purpose and gracious election of God, then it is upon the consideration of the merit of their own works; they are not justified and accepted for the works of the law, otherwise grace is no more grace: for what need is there of grace, where men have continued in all things written in the law to do them? For the man that doth these things shall live in them: but, on the other hand, if it be of works that we are justified and accepted, then it is no more grace, otherwise work is no more work." Learn hence, 1. That such as are chosen in Christ to be a people near unto God, are put into this state by mere grace, and unmerited favors. Learn, 2. That grace comes in to supply the defect of our works, and to procure pardon for the non-performance of them, according to the tenor of the law. God was good to man before his fall, in making him his creature: he is gracious to man since his fall, in recovering him to the divine favor, by restoring him to the divine likeness. The fabric of grace in the hearts of his people goes up, as did the building of the second temple, with shouts and acclamations. Grace, grace: and every stone in the building of our salvation, from the foundation to our superstructure, is all free-stone, otherwise grace is no more grace.

7 What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded:

8 According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear, unto this day.

Observe here, 1. What the apostle affirms concerning the main body of the Jewish nation, they obtained not what they sought after: that is, deliverance by the Messiah, justification and righteousness by the works of the law. This they sought but found not: yet the election hath obtained it; that is, the chosen generation of believers, seeking righteousness and life in a gospel way, namely, by faith in Christ the Mediator, have obtained it. And the rest were blinded: but how and by whom? Ans. 1. By their own sin and prejudice; and then, 2. By the just judgment of God, leaving them to their own ignorance and obstinacy, for shutting their eyes against the clear light of the gospel: and by giving them over to satan, the god of this world, who blindeth the eyes of them that believe not, 2 Cor. iv. 4. Observe, 2. The direful judgment which followed upon this dreadful sin; they shut their eyes, and said, they will not see; God closed their eyes, and said, they shall not see: because they would not obey the Spirit of God, which would have awakened and enlightened them; God gave them up to a spirit of slumber, stupidity and blindness; that is, he permitted them to continue and lie under those prejudices against the true Messiah, which they had taken up and entertained in their minds. Learn hence, That no greater judgment can befall a people, than a sottish stupidity of mind, and insensibility of spirit; whereby they are drowsily careless of their salvation, and know not the things belonging to their peace, although they be before their eyes. This was the case with the chief body of the Jewish nation, and continues to be still their case: they have eyes and see not; ears, but hear not unto this day.

9 And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompence unto them.

10 Let their eyes be darkened that they may not see, and bow down their back always.

The apostle proceeds here to declare unto us, that the general unbelief and hardness of heart which was found amongst the rejected Jews, was not to be wondered at, because it was prophetically foretold by holy David, in the person of the Messiah, of whom he was a type, that his own people the Jews should extremely injure and wrong him, oppress and vex him: for which wickedness he foretels what dreadful and tremendous judgment should come upon the Jews; namely, "That their table should be made to them a snare, a trap, and a stumbling-block;" that is, that all their pleasant and delightful things should become the instruments of their destruction. "That their eyes be darkened, and they may not see." The darkening of their eyes signifies the taking away of the judgment and understanding from a people. And the bowing down of the back always," intimates and implies their grovelling upon this earth; their relishing and savouring nothing but earthly things, never lifting up either head or heart to God. Now all this which David spake of the wicked Jews in his time, the apostle applies and adapts to the incredulous and unbelieving Jews in his days, to whom the very preaching of the word was an occasion of obduration and hardness of heart. Learn hence, 1. That to the obstinate and obdurate enemies of God, the best things become baneful, and, through their own corruption, become the instruments and means of their own destruction: "Let their table be made a snare, a trap, and a stumbling-block. Learn, 2. That to be deprived of the use of our judgment and understanding, especially in things pertaining unto God, is a very dreadful judgment; "Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see." Learn, 3. That imprecations are to be used very warily, and only in weighty matters. These, and other expressions of David, which look like imprecations, may as well be accounted prophetic predictions, foretelling what will come upon obstinate sinners, rather than praying that evil may come: great is the sin and danger of using imprecations lightly, either upon ourselves or others. Some persons use them to gain credit to what they say; but this will not do with wise men, who frequently observe, that persons most guilty, are most apt to call for vengeance upon themselves, that they may be thought guiltless. Lord, how do some sinners wish, and call for that at which the devils tremble? I mean damnation. Alas! it slumbereth not; within a moment or two thou shalt feel what thou wilt not fear.

11 I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather, through their fall, salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy.

Our apostles had in the preceding verses proved the rejection of the Jews not to have been total; here he proves, that it shall not be final, but they shall be generally called before the end of the world. "Have they stumbled," says he, "that they should fall?" that is, "Have they so stumbled and fallen as never to rise more? Are they utterly forsaken and cast off? No such thing; but God in his just and righteous judgment hath permitted them to fall, that they having obstinately refused the gospel, it might be preached to the Gentiles: and their receiving of the gospel, God will in his infinite wisdom, make use of, to provoke the Jews to jealousy and emulation, seeing themselves so far outstript by those whom they so contemned and despised, and in the close, make this jealousy and emulation a mean and occasion of the Jews' conversion." Learn hence, That emulation and jealousy doth heat and heighten the mind of man to an eager pursuit of the best things. Observe it in the instance before us, the salvation of the Gentiles bred emulation in the Jews: "What! say the Jews, shall the Gentiles go away with heaven alone, whom we thought the vilest people upon the earth? Come, let us put in for a part, and share in gospel mercies and privileges with them." Thus they were provoked to emulation, and this emulation occasioned their conversion.

12 Now, if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles: how much more their fulness?

As if the apostle had said, "If the casting off the Jews was so profitable to the Gentile world; if the Gentiles have been such great gainers, by occasion of the sin and fall of the Jews, how much more when they shall become christians, will they add to the fulness, the glory and greatness of the christian church?" Observe here, The wonderful wisdom, the astonishing goodness, the overruling providence and power of God, in causing the fall of the Jews to be the occasion of God's manifesting his abundant grace in the conversion of the Gentiles, and spreading the plentiful knowledge of Christ over all the world; and also, in causing the general conversion of the Jews towards the end of the world, to confirm the faith of the believing Gentiles.

13 For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office:

14 If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them.

15 For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world: what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?

Observe here, 1. The honorable office which St. Paul was called to; namely, to be an apostle, and the apostle of the Gentiles. 2. The honor which God put upon him in the faithful execution of that office: (1.) In making him instrumental, for calling many of the blind and ignorant Gentiles to the obedience of the faith: and, (2.) In provoking the Jews (whom he calls his own flesh, because of his own nation) not to suffer the Gentiles alone to go away with the privileges of the gospel, but to put in for a share with them; "If by any means I may provoke to emulation:" as if the apostle had said, "O that I could at once see an holy emulation take hold of my countrymen: that rather than not believe at all, and be saved, I might see them at last believe for anger, or for very shame, and go to heaven in a holy chase!" Observe, 3. What an argument the apostle makes use of, why all persons should greatly desire the general conversion, both of Jews and Gentiles, to the faith of Christ. As the casting away of the Jews at present, will be the reconciling of the world; that is, be an occasion of sending the gospel to the Gentiles all the world over, whereby they become reconciled unto God: what will the receiving of the Jews again into the grace and favor of God, and the communion of the visible church, be to you Gentiles, but even as life or resurrection from the dead? Learn hence, (1.) That the conversion of the Jews, and the calling in the fulness of the Gentiles, are mercies much, very much, to be desired, and earnestly prayed for. (2.) That such will be the blessed state of the church, when the fulness both of the Jews and Gentiles, are brought into it, that it will be looked upon as a new life or resurrection from the dead.

16 For if the first-fruits be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches.

Here the apostle produces another argument to prove the universal restoration of the Jews unto the grace and favor of God, before the end of the world; and it is drawn from the covenant of God made with Abraham (as the root of the Jewish nation) which said, "I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed." Now, the argument runs thus, "As the branches follow the nature of the root, so do the Jews follow the condition of Abraham and the holy patriarchs, with respect to the outward privileges of the covenant. Was the root holy, so are the branches holy, not inherently, but federally holy, being called, consecrated, and separated from the world unto the service of God. If then Almighty God, by entering into covenant with Abraham, hallowed to himself all his posterity, even as the first-fruits hallowed the whole lump; in like manner, will God in his own good time, be so mindful of the Jews, the posterity of Abraham, as to bring them again nigh unto himself, in the remembrance of his holy covenant: so that they shall be his people, and he will be their God." Learn hence, That the Jews, though at present cast off by God, are still an holy people; they are under an hereditary dedication to God, they have a federal holiness, as descending from holy progenitors, with respect to whom the love and compassion of God are towards them, and they shall in his own time, be called and converted by him: and therefore in the mean time, the Jews are not to look upon themselves with desperation, nor should the Gentiles look upon them with disdain. "The first fruits being holy, the lump is also holy: the root being holy, so are the branches also."

17 And if some of the branches be broken off, and, thou being a wild olive-tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive-tree:

18 Boast not against the branches; but if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in.

20 Well: because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear.

21 For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

The design and scope of our apostle in these words, is to exhort the believing Gentiles not to despise and reproach the rejected and unbelieving Jews: and he draws an argument from the condition of the Gentiles, both past and present; in their past condition, they were like a wild olive-tree; in their present condition they were grafted into the true olive. Here note, That by the olive-tree, we are to understand the visible church of God; by the root he means Abraham; he was the root of the olive-tree, the Jewish church. But how so? Ans. Not the root by way of communication, but in a way of administration; not by way of communication, as if either a Jew or Gentile did receive any sap or spiritual life from him, as branches receive a natural life from the root: for thus Christ alone is the root of the church. But Abraham was the root of the olive-tree in a way of administration, the Lord calling him forth as the first man with whom he was pleased to treat, and enter into that covenant with. Again, by the fatness of the olive-tree, we are to understand all outward privileges and ordinances, all spiritual benefits and blessings which belong to the Jewish church. By the branches of the olive-tree, we are to understand the members of the Jewish church: and by the wild olive, the Gentile world. Now, though the Gentiles, though rich in grace, were instated in the privileges of the Jews, yet the apostle foresaw, that instead of thankfulness to God, for the favors received from him, they would be puffed up with pride: and accordingly, he advises them, not to be high minded, but fear: as if he had said, "O ye Gentiles, your state is high, let your hearts be humble. The Jews are fallen, and unless you walk in holy fear, you cannot stand: unbelief ruined them, take heed that pride doth not ruin you: for the just and holy God is no respecter of persons. He that spareth not the natural branches, will no more spare thee." From the whole learn, 1. That man is naturally a very proud creature; and although he has nothing, but what he has freely received, yet is prone to boast. 2. That man is especially apt to magnify himself, and to glory over those who are fallen before him, either into sin or under affliction. 3. That the best preservative from falling, is humility and holy fear. If ever we stand in the day of trial, it is the fear of falling must enable us to stand. Take heed you do not fall, by thinking it impossible to fall. "Be not high-minded but fear." Timor tuus, securitas tua; Thy holy fear will keep thee from falling, when others security and presumption will lay them on the ground. Let not a man that stands on the top of a tree boast of his height, but look to his hold.

22 Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell severity; but towards thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.

23 And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in: For God is able to graft them in again.

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive-tree, which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive-tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive-tree?

Our apostle, in these and the following verses, precedes in his exhortation to the Gentiles, not to insult over the rejected Jews, but to carry it towards them with great modesty and christian humility; and he used several arguments, by way of motive, to excite and quicken them thereunto. The two first are drawn from the severity of God in cutting off the Jews and the goodness and bounty of God in calling of the Gentiles: Behold the goodness and severity of God, &c." Justice and mercy, goodness and severity, are attributes or qualities, eminently found in God; and contrary only in their effects upon men. The same God is merciful and severe, with respect to different persons, and different qualifications. All mercy is not a virtue, but that which is consistent with other perfections of wisdom and righteousness. The next argument is taken from the condition upon which the Gentiles hold their present standing in the favor and grace of God; namely, "If they continue in his goodness, that is, if they walk worthy of this favor from God, and suitably to such a kind and gracious dispensation; otherwise they, the Gentiles shall be cut off and cast away, as well as the stubborn and unbelieving Jews." The Lord is with a people only whilst they are with him: if they serve and seek him, he will be found of them, but if they forsake him he will cast them off for ever. The next argument to suppress arrogance and pride in the Gentiles, and to prevent their insulting over the fallen Jews, is taken from the hopes of the Jews' restoration: which the apostle proves to be both possible and probable. "They shall be grafted in, if they abide not in unbelief; for God is able to graft them in again." As if the apostle had said, "The same God that rejected them, is able to restore them, and re-ingraft them: the only obstacle is unbelief, and this God is also able to remove." Lastly, He shows the probability as well as the possibility of the Jews conversion; namely, because God had done that which was more unlikely already, to wit, ingrafting the Gentiles, who were wild olives, into the true olive, which was more difficult and unlikely, than to graft in the Jews again, which were natural branches. The argument runs thus: "If the Gentiles, which were a kind of wild olive branches, were grafted into a good olive tree (the church of God) which is contrary to nature, seeing men used to graft a good scion into a wild stock, and not a wild scion into a good stock; how much more shall the Jews, which are the natural branches of the good olive, be grafted again into their own olive-tree, to which they formerly belong? The one is according to the order of nature, but the other is against, and contrary to nature." Learn hence, How improbable and unlikely, how difficult and impossible soever, the conversion and calling of the Jews to the christian religion, may seem to us, it is neither contrary to right reason, nor true faith. The greatest obstacle in the way of the Jews' conversion to christianity, it is to be feared, lies in the wicked and scandalous lives of those that call themselves christians.

25 For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, (lest ye should be wise in your own conceits,) that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, 26 And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.

27 For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.

Here the apostle fully proves, that the rejection of the Jews was neither total nor final; not total, because "blindness in part" only, "happened unto Israel:" That is, part of the Jews only are left in unbelief, and under the power of spiritual blindness; nor is their rejection final, but for a time only, namely, till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; that is, till the Gentile churches be advanced to an honorable state and fulness. And then all the Israel of God, the faithful seed of Abraham, and the main body of the Jews, shall make up the catholic church, and be saved from their unbelief; according to that gracious promise, Isa. lix. 20, 21. "The Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob; and this is my covenant with them, my spirit shall not depart from thy seed, nor thy seed's seed, from henceforth and for ever." Learn hence, That there shall be a general calling of the Jews to the faith of the gospel before Christ's second coming, is not only possible and probable, but infallible, sure, certain, and that from the prophecies and predictions of the prophets of God; let us therefore believe it firmly, pray for it fervently, and live in the expectation of it continually.

28 As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sake. but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes.

29 For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance

Here we have two farther arguments to prove the general conversion of the Jews: the first is taken from the dignity of the Jews, they being the ancient people of God, whose father Abraham he chose, and made his first covenant with him and his seed: and therefore, as to making the election of that nation to be an holy people to himself, they are beloved by God for their father's sake; that is, for the sake of Abraham their holy progenitor, who had the honor to be called the friend of God. Though grace descends not from parent to child, yet many times the children of godly parents are very large sharers in outward privileges and blessings for their gracious parents' sake. The Jews here are said to be loved of God for their father Abraham's sake, whilst, for their unbelief and contempt of the gospel, they had rendered themselves the deserved objects of God's hatred. The second argument is drawn from the immutability and unchangeable nature of God: "His gifts and calling are without repentance:" that is, although the Jews have rendered themselves unworthy of the favor of God, yet the covenant having been once made with their fathers, and they having had the honor to be his special and peculiar people, God will never repent of his kindness to them, nor of his covenant made with them; but will certainly restore them to their former privileges, and happy state: "For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance." Take the words relatively, and the note is this, "That the gifts and calling of God, whereby he was pleased to adopt the posterity of Abraham, and to engage himself by covenant to them, are inviolable, and such as shall never be reversed or repented of." Observe lastly, The sad and deplorable condition which the Jews are at present in and under; they are enemies to the gospel. "As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sake:" That is, because you Gentiles receive the gospel, therefore the Jews reject it, and for that reason are rejected by God. But this happened well to the poor Gentiles; for upon the Jews' refusal, the gospel was brought the sooner to the Gentiles, and they were converted by it.

30 For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief;

31 Even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy.

Here we have the conclusion of the apostle's argument, to prove the conversion and calling of the Jews towards the end of the world. The argument is drawn from a comparison of equals: "If God after a long time of disobedience, received the Gentiles to mercy, he will also after a long time of infidelity, receive the Jews to mercy. If God hath called the Gentiles to his grace after a long idolatry, though God never promised to be their God, how much more will he recall his covenant-people from their infidelity in his own appointed time?" So that the argument is from the less to the greater: if the infidelity of the Jews was an occasion of mercy to the Gentiles, much more shall the mercy showed to the Gentiles be an occasion of mercy to the Jews; and consequently their present infidelity shall be no obstacle to their conversion afterward.

32 For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

That is, "Almighty God hath in wisdom and righteousness suffered both the Jews and Gentiles successively, for some time, to remain under the power of unbelief and disobedience, that so he might in his own time fulfil the great counsel of his goodness, in showing undeserved mercy unto all, both Jew and Gentile." Now from all the foregoing arguments for the calling of the Jews, summed up together in this chapter, we may collect and gather, that the conversion of the Jewish nation to the christian faith has good foundation in the holy scriptures, and has been the received doctrine of the church of Christ in all ages of the church.

33 O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!

Here the apostle concludes the chapter with an awful admiration at the depth of the abundant grace and goodness of God, in bearing with the infidelity of the Jews, and the obstinacy of the Gentiles; as also of his unsearchable wisdom in making first the rejection of the Jews a mean of calling the Gentiles, and then working upon the obstinate Jews by his mercy shown unto the Gentiles. By judgments here, some understand the decrees and determination of God's will; by ways the administration of his providence, in order to the execution of those decrees: both which are secret, unsearchable, and unfathomable. There are mysteries of providence, as well as mysteries of faith, and both of them transcend our human understanding.

34 For who hath known the mind of the Lord: or who hath been his counselor?

35 Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again?

As if the apostle had said, "No creature ever did, or ever can pierce into the mind of God, nor was ever called to be of his council. No creature ever did or can advise him, nor can any creature challenge God, as if he were indebted to him. Whoever gave any thing to God, that he did not first receive from him? Or who can merit any thing at his hands, seeing he owes us nothing? And if so, who hath reason to complain that God deals hardly with the Jews, in rejecting them, and preferring the Gentiles before them! Surely Almighty God may dispense a favor to some, which he owes to none." Learn hence, That in those discriminating favors which God dispenses towards some of the children of men, no other reason can be assigned but his own good will and pleasure. This particularly appears in his ordering matters relating to the Jews and Gentiles, recorded in the foregoing chapter.

36 For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things. To whom be glory for ever. AMEN.

That is, "All things are of God, as the author and efficient cause; all things are through him, as the providential director, and preserving cause; and all things tend to him, as the ultimate end and final cause; therefore to him all praise, honor, and glory, ought for ever to be ascribed. Learn hence, That God is the first cause, and last end. He is the first cause; that is, he is the cause of all things besides himself, the fountain and original of all created beings; nothing was done before him, but all things created by him, and dependent upon him; and as he is the first cause, so he is the last end; that is, all things tend to him as their ultimate end; their design and aim was the illustration of God's glory, and the manifestation of his divine perfections. And if God be the first cause, let us with humility and thankfulness acknowledge him, admire and adore him, love and serve him, who is the author of our being, and the cause of all other beings. And if he be the last end, let us refer all our actions, to his glory; in all our natural actions, our civil actions, but especially in all our religious actions, let the glory of God be our supreme aim and ultimate end. For if we do not now live unto him, we can never expect hereafter to live with him.

CHAPTER XII.

Our apostle having finished the doctrinal part of his discourse, begins here to make application of it. In the former part of his epistle, he had copiously handled the doctrinal points of faith, justification, sanctification, &c. Now from hence to the end of the epistle, there is contained an exhortation to religious and moral duties, as an argument of their sincerity, and as an ornament to their profession.

I BESEECH you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.

Observe here, 1. The apostle's loving and courteous commendation, brethren: so he calls the believing Romans. They were brethren by place and nation, and brethren by religion and profession; Eodem sanguine Christi conglutinati, cemented together by the blood of Christ, and by the bands of love. Observe, 2. The manner of the apostle's exhortation; it is by way of obsecration and entreaty, I beseech you, brethren. It imports great lenity and meekness. The apostle did not want authority to command, but uses such humility as to entreat. The minister's work and office is not only to be a teacher, but a beseecher. He must not barely propound and recommend the doctrine of the gospel to his people's understanding, but must endeavour to work upon their wills and affections to embrace and entertain them. The understanding is the leading, but the will the commanding faculty. Observe, 3. The exhortation itself: "present your bodies a living sacrifice." Present your bodies, that is, dedicate your persons, devote yourselves, your whole man, soul and body, to the service of God and his glory. Christians are priests, or a royal priesthood; they offer up themselves in sacrifice unto God, as a whole burnt-offering. Observe, 4. The properties of the christian sacrifice; it must be voluntary; Present yourselves. It must be a living sacrifice, an holy sacrifice, a reasonable sacrifice, otherwise it will find no acceptance with God. Observe, 5. The argument or motive which the apostle makes use of, to persuade persons to present and give up themselves to God and his service, and that is drawn from the mercies of God; "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God." Learn thence, That the mercies of God revealed in the gospel, are the most proper, powerful, and effectual argument to persuade with, and prevail upon, sinners, that have not given up and devoted themselves to God, to do it; and those that have done it to do it more and more: "I beseech you by the mercies of God, that ye present, &c."

2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

Observe here, 1. The apostle's dehortation, "Be not conformed to this world:" That is, do not fashion or accommodate yourselves to the corrupt principles and customs, to the sinful courses and practices of the men of the world." The christian is to walk singularly, and not after the world's guise: he must not cut the coat of his profession according to the fashion of the times, or the humor of the company he falls into. Observe, 2. An apostolical exhortation, "be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind:" that is, "be ye regenerated and changed in your whole man, beginning at the mind or understanding, by which the Spirit of God worketh upon the inferior faculties of the soul." Every converted person is truly and really changed, thoroughly sanctified and renewed, endowed with new dispositions and affections; yet this conversion and renovation is not a substantial, but a qualitative change, a change not in the substance of the faculties of the soul, but in the quality of those faculties. And the renewed christian is sanctified totus but not totaliter: he is sanctified thoroughly in all faculties, but not perfectly in all degrees. There is in a renewed man's understanding too much blindness and ignorance, in his will too great obstinacy and perverseness, in his affections too much irregularity and sensuality. Yet such is the indulgence of the gospel, as to call him an holy person, a person transformed by the renewing of his mind. Observe, 3. The reason of the apostle's exhortation; "Be ye transformed, &c. that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God;" that is, that ye may discern and approve what the will of God is under the gospel, which requires not what is ritually, but what is substantially good, and consequently always acceptable to him. Note here, that in opposition to the Levitical ceremonies and ritual injunctions, the apostle styles the gospel-institution, the good and acceptable, and perfect will of God; and as such, may we love and embrace it, and be found in the delightful practice of it.

3 For I say through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.

The apostle having exhorted to an holy life in general, verse the first, and to a spiritual renovation of mind, in order to it, verse the second, comes now to a close exhortation to more particular duties; the first of which is modesty and true humility of mind. This he recommends especially to such who bear any public office in the church, and had received some peculiar and especial gifts to fit and furnish them for the discharge of that office. St. Paul here particularly enjoins them, by virtue of his apostolic office, to watch against pride and haughtiness of mind; not to think themselves wiser or better than they were, but to think soberly and modestly of themselves, according to the truth, and to the degree of faith and wisdom given unto them of God: plainly intimating, that such as are exalted to a degree of eminency in the church above others, are in great danger of the sin of pride, which it is their duty to watch and pray against, and to be found in the exercise of that humility and lowliness of mind, which is so greatly ornamental to their persons and profession. "Let not any man think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but let him think soberly."

4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office;

5 So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.

Here the apostle lays before us a special reason why the officers of the church should exercise humility towards, and employ their gifts and talents for the general good and benefit of the church: the argument is drawn from a comparison between the natural body and the mystical body.—"As in the natural body there are many members, and every member has its distinct office; the eye to see, the ear to hear, the hand to work, the foot to walk: in like manner, in the mystical body, the church of Christ, there are many members; but each member must keep his own place, and not invade the duty, or usurp the office of another, but every one employs his own proper gift to the benefit and comfort of the whole, without disdaining or envying one another." Learn hence, 4. That the church of Christ is one body. 2. That though the body of the church be one, and the head one, yet the members are many, united to Christ their head by faith, and to one another by love. 3. That all believers, which are members of this body, have every one his particular gift, his several functions, his proper office, which they are duly to execute and perform, without encroaching upon others by proud curiosity, or busy meddling; but as all the members of the body labor jointly together for the preservation of the whole, so ought all the officers and members of the church to keep their distinct stations, and employ and improve regularly their several talents for the mutual edification and benefit of each other, without encroachment or intruding upon the officers of each other. God is a God of order, and hates disorder in his church.

6 Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given to us; whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith:

7 Or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching:

8 Or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that giveth let him do it with simplicity? he that ruleth, with diligence; he that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness

As if our apostle had said, "Seeing it has pleased God to appoint distinct officers in his church, and to furnish those officers with various degrees of gifts, and not to make all equal either to gifts or office, let every one in general faithfully execute his office, and keep within the limits of his calling, neither neglecting his own duty, nor invading another's; in particular, let him that prophesieth, that is, expoundeth the scriptures in the church, do it, according to the proportion of faith, or according to what is taught plainly and uniformly in the whole scriptures of the Old and New Testament, as the rule of our faith." We must not rack nor wrest the scriptures, to make them speak what we please, but what the prophets and apostles taught, whom we interpret; otherwise we do not expound according to the analogy and proportion of faith. "Let him that ministereth, teacheth, or exhorteth, attend upon that work with all diligence; and he that performs the office of a deacon, who are called helps, (1 Cor. xii. 28.) and is employed to relieve the poor out of the church's stock, and to take care of strangers, orphans, aged, sick, and impotent persons, let him do it with simplicity, that is, without partiality and respect of persons: and with cheerfulness, that is, with alacrity of heart, with gentleness in words, with pleasantness in countenance, bearing with the infirmities of the aged, with the loathsomeness of the sick and diseased, and administering with delight to the necessities of all that want." Now, from the whole, note, 1. That God of his free bounty has beautified his church with divers offices and gifts. Note, 2. That those whom God has bestowed ministerial gifts upon, ought humbly and faithfully to improve them to the church's benefit and edification.

9 Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good.

10 Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another.

The foregoing exhortations respected church officers in particular; these that now follow concern all christians in general, and acquaint them with their duties in common conversation. He begins with the grace and duty of love, that being a radical grace, the root from which all other graces and duties spring and flow. This love to one another, the Holy Ghost requires that it be without dissimulation, that is sincere and unfeigned, not in word and in tongue only, but in deed and truth; also, that it be an affectionate and tender, as well as an unfeigned and sincere love. Be kindly affectioned one to another: The word signifies such an affectionate tenderness as a mother bears to the fruit of her womb, and as creatures bear to their young: and no wonder that such a fervent love is required, when laying down our lives for the brethren is commanded, 1 John iii. 16. Likewise, that our love to others do incline us to give preference unto others; really conceiving others to be more worthy of honor than ourselves, and rejoicing to see them placed in a more useful and honorable post than ourselves, Yet observe, Though our love must be hot towards our neighbour, it must not hinder us from abhorring that which is sinful and evil in our neighbour. "Love without dissimulation, and abhor that which is evil." When we love the persons, we must hate the vices of men. The love of our friends must not make us in love with their faults; nor must the hatred of men's vices draw us off from delighting in, and cleaving to, that which is good in any man: "Abhor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good."

11 Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit; serving the Lord.

The next duty exhorted to is diligence and industry in all our duties both to God and man, but particularly in the duties of our calling. We must avoid the two extremes of slothfulness on the one hand, and excessive drossery on the other, in the management of our secular affairs and worldly business. But in the service of God we must be fervent, as in the service of the world we must not be slothful. What is done for the world, is best done with indifference; but what is done for God, is best done with warmth and fervency, or not done at all. Our most ardent affections and active powers must be employed in his service; for to be cold and careless therein, disparages his excellency, and will defeat our own expectation. We must be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; and may not be slothful in business serving the world.

12 Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer.

The apostle next directs the converted Romans how they should manage themselves under afflictions; namely, to endure them patiently, to rejoice in hope of present deliverance, or future happiness; and in order to both, to be much in the duty of prayer. Learn hence, That hope, patience, and prayer, are powerful supports under all afflictions, and will render them not only tolerable, but joyous. By patience we possess ourselves; by hope we possess God; by prayer we are enabled unto both.

13 Distributing to the necessity of the saints; given to hospitality.

The next duty exhorted to, is that of charity and alms-giving to the poor members of Jesus Christ, especially when under persecution; showing hospitality towards them, and giving entertainment to them, when they seek it of us.—Learn, 1. That charity to all persons, but especially to the persecuted members of Jesus Christ, is a necessary and important duty. Learn, 2. That hospitality is an eminent part of christian charity: true hospitality, I mean, which is accompanied with prudence and sobriety. There is a wide difference between riotous housekeeping and true hospitality; the latter is always designed for the help of the poor, and particularly for the godly poor. There are great house-keepers who are not good housekeepers, because their house-keeping is for the great, rather than the good, not for the household of faith, especially not for the poor of that household. As to spirituals, God fills the hungry with good things, but sends the rich empty away; whereas, most men, as to corporals, fill the rich with their good things, with the fat and the sweet, but send the poor, if not empty away, yet relieved only with the sweepings of their table. This is not according to the precepts before us: “Distributing to the necessities of the saints, and given to hospitality.”

14 Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not.

The apostle having taught us our duty to our friends in the former verse, teacheth us our duty here towards our enemies. Bless them that persecute you: That is, pray for them, and wish well to them, whatever provocation you may have to the contrary. Learn hence, 1. That good men must make account of, and prepare for, persecution; either the persecution of the tongue, or of the hand, or both. Learn, 2. That it is their duty ever to bless, never to curse, their persecutors and opposers. Bless but curse not. Where note, That the apostle doubles the exhortation, Bless your persecutors; Bless and curse not. This doubling the exhortation, shows both the difficulty of the duty, how contrary it is to corrupt nature, and also the constancy of the duty, we must ever bless, and never curse; always wish well, never any ill to the worst of men. Take we great heed of giving way to secret wishes of hurt to our enemy. God forbid we should hurt ourselves by sinful passion, because others hurt us by slander and false accusation: we are naturally prone to speak ill of others, and to wish ill to others with delight: this sin persisted in, shuts out of heaven as well as murder.

15 Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep.

The next duty required, is christian sympathy and mutual affection between brethren, both in prosperity and adversity, to rejoice in the one, and to mourn together in the other, as being members of the same body. Teaching us, that it is a christian's duty to rejoice in those good things, whether inward or outward, which befall his brethren, and also to mourn and lay to heart all those afflictions and sorrows whether inward or outward, which come upon them. But, Lord! how far are they from this duty, who instead of mourning for the sufferings of others, are glad at the calamity, rejoice at the downfall of others? Oh! help us to lay the troubles of others to heart, when we ourselves are freest and farthest from trouble: Let us weep with them that weep, and rejoice with them, &c. The gospel acquaints us with the pity of God towards us, and presseth us to pity one another.

16 Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits.

These words, Be ye of the same mind one towards another, are an exhortation to unity among christians. This is threefold, an unity of the head, or an unity of judgment and opinion; an unity of the heart, or an unity in love and affection; and an unity of the tongue, which is an unity of expression. Happy we! when in all these respects we are of the same mind one towards another. Observe next, The hinderance of mutual concord and unity among christians, and they are two: 1. Pride, Mind not high things, 2. Arrogancy, Be not wise in your own conceits. Mind not high things: that is, mind not preferment, nor riches, nor vain-glory, but be content with and thankful for, a middle state and condition in the world; which is far more eligible and desirable than a state of riches, plenty and abundance, as being less liable to temptations. And be not wise in your own conceits; that is, entertain humble thoughts of your own knowledge, think it not greater than it is; take heed of an over-weening opinion of your own wisdom, as if you wanted neither divine assistance and guidance, nor yet the advice and counsel of your brethren. Man is naturally a proud creature; but more proud of the endowments of his mind than those that adorn his body.

17 Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men.

By evil here, we are to understand wrongs and private injuries: by, not recompensing them, is meant not revenging them. Corrupt nature is very prone to return wrong for wrong, one ill turn for another; but christianity sets a nobler pattern before us, even the example of him, who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not,” 1 Pet. ii. 23. “Provide things honest in the sight of all men.” Having exhorted them before to be careful of their conversations towards God, he now presses them to be watchful over their conversations before the world, that by honesty and innocency of life, they may cut off all occasion from the enemies of religion to speak evil of them, and their holy profession; that all their words and actions be justifiable and unexceptionable to that degree, that the heathens may be in love with christianity, by observing their lives and actions to be holy and honest. Learn hence, That a christian must carefully look, not only to his conscience, but to his conversation; that his conscience be holy and upright in the sight of God, and his conversation modest and unblameable before men: the world cannot discern our hearts, but they can soon discover the errors of our lives, and will throw the dirt of our sins upon religion's face; therefore, we had need "provide things honest in the sight of all men."

18 If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

Observe here, 1. The duty directed and exhorted to, namely, peaceableness; Live peaceably, that is, be of a peaceable temper, and follow those things which make for peace. Observe, 2. The extent and latitude of this duty; With all men live peaceably; not with friends only, or with those of your own judgment and persuasion, but with men of disagreeing humors and interests, with men of different principles and apprehensions from you. Again, observe, 3. A double restriction and limitation with which the duty is bounded; first, If it be possible, implying, that there is a sort of men in the world who make peace impossible; but for others, if it may be enjoined upon honest terms, though upon hard terms, we must not stick at them, always remembering, that peace and truth are two precious things, which can never be bought too dear, if they be not purchased with sin and baseness. The second restriction follows, As much as in you lieth; now this respects our endeavours, not our success: if we follow peace with all men, though we cannot overtake it, yet we shall not miss of our reward in pursuing of it. Peace is a most important duty, a singular benefit and blessing, which every christian is bound to pursue and promote, and that with all men. If it be possible, &c.

19 Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine: I will repay, saith the Lord.

Observe here, How the apostle renews his exhortation to all christians to watch against the sin of private and personal revenge: he urged it before, ver. 17. he reinforces it here, ver. 19. thereby showing how prone our corrupt natures are to commit this sin, and how hard the contrary duty is to flesh and blood. The heathens reckoned revenge to be a part of justice, and ranked it amongst the number of their virtues; but the scriptures require, that instead of revenging an injury, we remit and forgive it. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves; it follows, rather give place unto wrath: What wrath? or whose wrath? Ans. Give place to your own wrath, say some interpreters; give way a little, and turn aside from the person you are angry with, and do not suffer your anger to hurry you away to revenge. Give place to the wrath of those that wrong you say others; decline their wrath, and give not word for word, which will but add fuel to the fire, and oil to the flame. But it seems best to understand it of God's wrath; leave the matter to God, he will right your cause; do not take God's work out of his hand, but suffer him to come in with his wrath upon your enemies, who wrong and injure you; rather give place to the wrath of God against them; for vengeance is his; and he will repay it. Learn hence, that such, who having suffered wrong, do seek to revenge themselves, take revenging work out of God's hand; whereas, if they leave the matter with God, his justice will right them fully.

20 Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head.

As if the apostle had said, "Instead of revenge, render kindness, return courtesies for injuries, affability for affronts; If thine enemy hunger, feed him." The words as some critics observe, signify to feed cheerfully and tenderly, as birds feed their young ones. "So doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head." By coals of fire, 1. Some understand, an heart melting fire; as if the apostle had said, "By thy kindness thou wilt melt and mollify his spirits towards thee, as hardest metals are melted by coals of fire; it must be a very stony heart indeed, that this fire will not melt, a very disingenuous nature that meekness will not mollify: clemency will melt an enemy, and even force him by a sweet compulsion to become a friend, though of a rugged disposition." 2. By coals of fire heaped upon the head, others understand, a sin-punishing fire. Thou shalt heap coals of fire that is, the fire of divine vengeance upon his head, by making his malice and hatred against thee more inexcusable. Learn hence, 1. That to conquer and overcome an enemy by love and kindness, is a noble conquest, and a glorious victory, to melt him down, by obliging favors into a good affection. Learn, 2. That if any enemy, after such kind offices, will persevere in his enmity against us, the event will certainly be this; by our patience towards him, and forbearance of him, we shall engage the wrath of God against him, and heap coals of fire, that is, the divine vengeance upon him.

21 Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Learn hence, That every christian should not only take heed that he be not overcome of evil; but also labor and endeavour what in him lieth to overcome evil with good. Quest. What are we to understand here by evil. Ans. Any unkind or injurious dealings from others, any mischief or ill turn which our neighbour has done us. Quest. What is it to be overcome of evil? Ans. 1. When we dwell in our thoughts too much, too often, and too long upon the injuries and unkindnesses we have met with: this is, as if a man that was to take down a bitter pill, should be continually champing of it, and rolling it under his tongue. 2. We are overcome of evil, when we are brought over to commit the same evil, by studying to make spiteful returns in a way of revenge, for the injuries we have received. Quest. Wherein consist the duty and excellency of overcoming of evil with good? Ans. It renders us like to God, who does good to us daily, though we do evil against him continually; hereby we imitate God in one of the choicest perfections of his divine nature; hereby we overcome ourselves; hereby we overcome our enemies, and make them become our friends. Quest. How should we overcome evil with good? Ans. Ay doing good for evil, by returning courtesies for inaries, speaking well of others, although they speak hardly, yea very ill, of us.

CHAPTER XIII.

The apostle having treated of moral duties in the former chapter, treats of political duties in this, proving that magistracy is God's ordinance, for the good of human society, and enforcing the duty of subjection unto magistrates, in obedience to the commandment of God.

LET every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God, the powers that be are ordained of God, Observe here. 1. The title given to magistrates, they are powers, the higher powers, that is, persons invested with power, and placed in supreme authority over us. All mankind is not of one rank, doth not stand upon an equal level. Magistracy is an eminency or superiority of some persons above others. Observe, 2. The original fountain from whence all power is derived, and that is God himself; there is no power but of God; that is, all power is derived from God, and is to be used for God; the magistrate acts by his authority, and consequently is to act for his interest, honor and glory. It is agreeable to the will of God, that there should be such a thing as magistracy and government in the world; and it is his appointment that men should be governed by men, deriving the power and authority from him; "The powers that be are ordained of God." Observe, 3. The apostle's strict injunction for the subjection unto magistracy, as a divine ordinance; Let every soul be subject, that is, every person, be he of what rank, or what station he will, high or low, honorable or ignoble, rich or poor, clergy or laity, he must be subject to God's ordinance. Where note, that Christ is a friend to Cesar, and christianity no enemy to loyalty; the best christians are always the best subjects; none so true to their prince, as they that are most faithful to their God: obedience to magistrates is both the duty of christians, and the interest of christianity.

2. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

The forementioned duty of subjection unto magistracy, insisted upon in the foregoing verse, the apostle urges and enforces upon all christians, by sundry arguments in this and the following verses: as namely, 1. From the sinfulness of resistance; "They resist the ordinance of God;" they make war upon God himself; he that rebelleth against his prince, is a rebel also to his God. 2. From the danger of resistance; "They shall receive to themselves damnation." That is, 1. Temporal judgment from the hand of the magistrate, to whom the sword is committed, as Korah, Absalom, and others did experience. 2. Eternal punishment from the hand of God, who will plead the cause, and vindicate the honor of his vice-gerents, and representatives here upon earth, and cast those into hell, who pour contempt upon them, if sincere repentance by a timely interpose prevent it not.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same.

Here we have farther argument for subjection to rulers and governors, drawn from the end of the magistrate's office, which is to punish vice, and to promote virtue: Rulers are not a terror to good works; that is, they ought not, and they ordinarily are not: they were not ordained for that end, and it is not their place so to be, namely, a terror to the good, but to the bad only; for God giveth no authority against himself, or his own righteous laws, which require the punishing of the bad, and the rewarding of the good. Learn hence, 1. That magistrates, by virtue of their place, ought to be a terror, or exceeding terrible, to evil works and evil workers. Learn, 2. That magistrates are not terrible, but amiable to good men; they fear rulers, but it is with a fear of reverence, not with a tormenting, servile fear. "Do that which is good, and thou shalt not be afraid of the power."

4 For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

Here our apostle subjoins the reason, why a magistrate is not to be unduly dreaded and feared by his subjects who live well: for he is by his institution the minister of God to thee for good, if thou be a doer of that which is good. Learn hence, That the magistrate is the minister of God for the good of them over whom he is set, especially of them that are virtuous and good; he is a shield to the godly, a husband to the widow, a father to the orphan, a patron to the poor, and a refuge to the oppressed. Observe farther, how the magistrate is set forth with the ensign of terror to evil-doers; he has a sword put into his hand by God himself, a sword to wound, not a wooden dagger to scare offenders barely; and a sword not rusting in the scabbard, but drawn and whetted; he must show it and strike with it upon a just occasion, and make those feel it who are not awed with the sight of it; He beareth not the sword in vain. Observe again, though the magistrate is said to bear a sword, yet he is never called a sword, but a shield often; a shield is for defence, a sword for destruction, intimating that the magistrate's power should be rather executed in protecting than in punishing, rather in saving than destroying. The primary design of the magistracy's power is protection, not destruction; magistrates have swords, but they are shields, and not swords; they have a sword to cut off evil-doers; God help them to draw it upon atheism and blasphemy, upon vice and immorality: one hearty stroke of the magistrate's sword would stun error and vice more than a thousand sermons. Observe lastly, The magistrate is said not to snatch or take the sword, but to bear the sword: he doth not wrest it out of the hand of another, but it is put into his hand by God himself: the commission to bear the sword is from God; the magistrate doth not hold his authority by virtue of the sword, but he holds the sword by virtue of his authority: when he draweth the sword, it is not merely backed with an arm of flesh, but with a warrant and commission signed by God himself. He beareth the sword.

5 Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake.

Here the apostle doth again assert the necessity of subjection to the civil magistrate; seeing that magistracy is God's ordinance, for the good of human society; seeing that the sword in the magistrate's hand is backed and edged with God's authority, therefore there is a necessity of subjection unto magistracy and magistrates; and that for a double reason; for fear of wrath and punishment for man, and from a principle of conscience, in obedience to the command of God: We must be subject, not only for wrath; that is, not only for fear of man's wrath, but for conscience' sake; that is, with respect to the command of God, which has made subjection our indispensable duty.

6 For, for this cause pay you tribute also: for they are God's ministers attending continually upon this very thing.

From the duty of subjection unto magistrates, the apostle proceeds to urge and enforce the duty and necessity of paying tribute to them, or allowing them an honorable maintenance, for and towards the support of the government which they sustain and bear. The payment of taxes and tribute to the supreme magistrate is necessary upon several accounts: 1. As it is an acknowledgment of the power which God hath set over us: 2. As it tends to the support of the government which we live under: 3. As it is a small recompence for the governor's continual care and industry, he attending; that is, watching perpetually, and taking pains continually, for procuring and maintaining the good and happiness of his subjects; and therefore both duty and obligation, both religion and gratitude, do bind and engage us to aid and assist him, and so far as it is in our power, to requite and reward him for his care of the common safety, and regard to the public good.

7 Render, therefore, to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honor to whom honor.

A twofold duty towards magistrates is here laid down by our apostle, namely, maintenance, and reverence: 1. There is due unto them maintenance. Tribute and custom is payable to them for that purpose, and not without great reason and obligation: for he is the minister of God for our good, that is, an instrument under God to preserve our blessings to us: and farther, because such supplies are necessary to defray those vast expences, which they are constrained to be at, for the security and welfare of their subjects. Taxes, tribute, and custom, are not so much gifts, as due debts to princes, which by the command of God are to be justly and cheerfully paid unto them, and which cannot, without sin and injustice, be denied to them, or purloined from them: to cheat our prince is as great a sin in the sight of God, as to rob our father, though few think it so: Render tribute to whom tribute is due. Again, 2. There is reverence as well as maintenance due to magistrates; Render fear to whom fear, and honor to whom honor is due. Fear denotes inward reverence, and honor outward respect. Fear is the magistrate's due by reason of his authority, and honor by reason of his dignity. Here note, that the apostle is thus particular and express in asserting the rights of princes, and assigning the proper duties of subjects towards them, because the Jews held opinions which were destructive of all civil government; as namely, that they being the only people of God, God alone was to be owned as their Lord and Governor, and none under him, but such as should be immediately chosen by him; and as a consequent of this, they refused to pay tribute to Cesar, looking upon that as a token of subjection to him: therefore the apostle here presses the christians at Rome to show their freedom from, and opposition to, all such pernicious principles, and to give the world a convincing proof that christianity makes the best men, the best magistrates, the best subjects of any religion in the world.

8 ¶ Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.

Our apostle having finished his exhortation to duty towards our superiors, comes now to enforce the duties which we owe unto our neighbours; the first of which is, to render and pay to every one what is due unto him. Moral duties are mutual debts which we owe one another: one of which, namely, that of love, we can never fully discharge, but must be ever paying, yet always owing. Owe nothing to any man, but love, implying that must be always owing. The truth is, this debt of love is so far from a possibility of being paid on earth, that it is due in heaven to God, angels, and saints: There abideth charity, 1 Cor. xiii. 13. All other debts may be paid whilst we live, but this of love cannot be satisfied whilst we live. Observe, next, The argument, reason or motive, to excite unto this duty, and that is drawn from the excellency of this grace of love: He that loveth hath fulfilled the law; that is, he that loveth his neighbour as he should and ought to do, in deed and in truth, out of a pure heart fervently, he hath fulfilled the law, that is, the law relating to his neighbour; the duties of the second table are fulfilled by him.

9 For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery; Thou shalt not kill; Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not bear false witness; Thou shalt not covet: and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

10 Love worketh no ill to his neighhour: therefore, love is the fulfilling of the law.

Two particulars are here observable, namely, a proposition asserted, that love is the fulfilling of the law; and this proposition proved by an induction and enumeration of particular duties belonging to the second table. Observe, 1. The proposition asserted and maintained by the apostle, ver. 8, 10, namely, that love is the fulfilling of the law. But can the law be said to be fulfilled by us? if so, in what sense? Ans. By the law here, we are certainly to understand that branch of the moral law which respects our duty to our neighbour. All our duty to man is virtually comprehended in loving them as ourselves; as no man will hurt himself, so neither will he hurt his neighbour, if he loved him as himself: thus love is the complement or fulfilling of the law relating to our neighbour. The church of Rome would infer from hence, that a person may keep the law of God perfectly and without the least deficiency. But observe, He that loveth keepeth the law: how keepeth? Even as he loveth: if he loveth perfectly, he keepeth the law perfectly; but if his love be imperfect, (as is the best on this side heaven) then is his fulfilling of the law imperfect also. Perfect fulfilling of the law is what we should labor after, but whilst in an imperfect state we cannot attain unto: yet such is the grace of God in the gospel, as to account sincerity instead of perfection, and to esteem unfeigned love to our neighbour the fulfilling of the law, or all the duties of the second table. Observe, 2. This proposition is proved by an induction and enumeration of peculiar duties belonging to the second table: "Thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not kill, nor bear false witness, nor covet;" where all injury is forbidden to be done to our neighbour, in his name, in his estate, marriage-right, &c. and this is called the fulfilling of the law. But how can that be? Is the law fulfilled by mere negatives, by doing no hurt to our neighbours? Is not doing them all the good we can required also? Ans. Yes, no doubt: when the apostle says, Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, it is implied, that love doth all possible good to his neighbour, as well as worketh no ill; though the negatives only are mentioned, yet the affirmatives also are included.

11 ¶ And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to wake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

Here begins the last part of the chapter, which treats of our duty towards ourselves; namely, sobriety, temperance, mortification of sin, and all the works of darkness, such as rioting and drunkenness, chambering and wantonness, and the like: and the argument or motive which the apostle uses in this verse to excite and quicken the converted Romans to the last mentioned duties, is drawn from the consideration of their present state and condition; they were believers, the gospel light was risen upon them, and they were nearer salvation now than when they first believed: Now is your salvation nearer than when you believed. This by the way, is a meditation full of comfort to a gracious person; every breath he draws, draws him a degree nearer to perfect happiness, he is nearer heaven, nearer his reward, than when in the infancy of his faith; therefore let him gird up the loins of his mind, and be more cheerful and more laborious in his Lord's work, Lord! how transporting is it to thy faithful ones to consider how small a matter is betwixt them and their complete salvation! no sooner is their breath gone, but the full desire of their souls is come; their salvation is near, very near, much nearer than when they first believed. But oh! what a meditation of terror is it to a wicked person! his damnation is nearer, and every hour nearer and nearer; there is but a puff of breath betwixt him and hell: ere long his last breath and his last hope will expire together. Lord! give sinners' hearts to consider, that a graceless man ere long will be a hopeless man; the state he was born in was sad, the state he is now in is worse, but the state he will shortly be in without conversion, will be unspeakably worst of all; his damnation is near, it slumbereth not.

12 The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light, 13 Let us walk honestly as in the day: not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying.

Observe here, 1. The apostle puts the Romans in mind of their former state before conversion, when the night of heathenish ignorance and darkness was upon them, when they spent their time and strength in rioting and drunkenness, in lasciviousness and wantonness. Where note, The odious character wherewith sin is branded: it is darkness, a work of darkness: so styled because sin originally springs from darkness, because it naturally delights in darkness, because it ultimately leads to eternal darkness. Observe, 2. How he puts them in mind of their present state and condition since the day-star of the gospel did dawn upon them: The night is far spent, the day is at hand; that is, the night of heathenish ignorance, blindness and darkness, is in great measure past and over, and the day of grace and salvation is come unto you; gospel light is among you, illuminating grace and saving knowledge is now found with you. Observe, 3. The duties enjoined answerable to the privileges enjoyed, and that is to walk as the children of day, soberly, righteously and godly, abstaining from all intemperance and excess in every kind, and being clothed with all christian virtues and graces, which are called armor of light: armor, because they defend us against the assaults of sin, satan, and the world, and all our spiritual enemies whatsoever; and armor of light, because such Christian graces are bright and shining in the eyes of the world. Learn hence, 1. That the enjoyment of gospel light lays a person or a people under special obligations to cast off the works of darkness. 2. That such as enjoy the light and liberty of the gospel, ought to walk as becometh the gospel which they do enjoy; that is, according to the precepts and commands of the gospel, answerable to the privileges and prerogatives of the gospel, answerable to the helps and supplies of grace which the gospel affords, and answerable to those high and glorious hopes which the gospel raises the christian up to the expectation of: "this is to cast off the works of darkness, and to put on the armor of light, &c."

14 But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof.

Observe here, The apostle doth not say as a moral philosopher would have said, "Instead of rioting and drunkenness, chambering and wantonness, put on temperance, put on sobriety, put on chastity, and so set a single virtue against a single vice; but put on the Lord Jesus Christ, seek by faith union with him, that so you may derive virtue from him, to enable you unto holy walking before him. Set the doctrine and life of Christ continually before you; follow every instruction, and imitate all the parts of his holy conversation; even as the garment is commensurate to the body, Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." May not the expression imply, 1. That the soul of man, since the fall, is in a naked state, destitute of those divine graces of the Holy Spirit, which were its original clothing in the day of undefiled innocence? 2. That Jesus Christ is our spiritual clothing? 1. In his righteousness, to pardon and justify us: he is our clothing, to cover the guilt of sin out of God's sight. 2. In his graces, to sanctify us, by which he cleanses us from our sins, pollution, and filthiness. 3. That Jesus Christ, in order to our spiritual clothing, must be put on by faith: an unapplied Christ justifies none, saves none. It was not sufficient under the law, that the blood of the sacrifice was shed, but it was also to be sprinkled, in order to the expiation of guilt. The personal application of Christ's blood by faith on our part, is as absolutely necessary to salvation, as is the shedding of his blood on his part, in order to our remission and salvation. Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, It follows, And make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof. Observe the apostle doth not say, Make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the necessities, and the necessary desires thereof: But to fulfil the lusts or inordinate desires thereof. Then only is provision for the flesh sinful and unlawful, when it is sought, more to satisfy his appetite, and to gratify inordinate desires, than to strengthen and fit us for our duty to God and man. In this latter sense, to make provision for the flesh, is to furnish our enemy with arms and ammunition to fight against ourselves. Interpretatively, he makes provision for his lusts, that doth not provide against them; he feeds his lusts, that doth not starve them; he nourishes and strengthens his lusts, that doth not mortify and kill them: explicitly and directly, men provide for their lusts, by entertaining such thoughts in their minds, as do kindle, excite, and stir up lust; and when those thoughts are gratified with desires, and those desires accompanied with endeavours; but worst and saddest of all it is, when men's desires to gratify their lusts are turned into prayers unto God Almighty, in order to that end. Thus the apostle, James iv. 8. "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." Learn hence, 1. That a sober and moderate use of the creatures which God has given us, not barely for necessity, but delight, is allowable, and a commanded duty. Learn, 2. That to make use of the comforts of life, not to satisfy our natures, but to gratify our lusts and inordinate desires, is a perverting of God's intention, in bestowing the supports of life upon us, and a very heinous sin. Make we then no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

CHAPTER XIV,

The apostle having laid down those positive duties in the foregoing chapters, in which the life and spirit of christianity do so eminently consist, comes here in this chapter, to treat of things of an indifferent nature, neither commanded nor forbidden by any divine law; and to speak of the right use of our christian liberty. It seems some of the believing Jews at Rome apprehended, that the observation of the ceremonial law, as to meats and days, was yet to be continued. On the other hand, the believing Gentiles, being fully persuaded of their freedom by Christ, refused communion with the Jews that lived after that manner. Hereupon a great dissension arose between them, the Gentiles looking upon the Jews as superstitious, and the Jews censuring the Gentiles as profane. Now St. Paul comes with his bucket to quench this flame, which burnt so vehemently in the church, admonishing the believing Jews, not to condemn the believing Gentiles, and exhorting the believing Gentiles not to refuse communion with the believing Jews; and thus by a mutual forbearance of each other, to hold the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

HIM that is weak in the faith receive you, but not to doubtful disputations.

Observe here, 1. The person described, whom the apostle recommends to their charity and forbearance; Him that is weak in the faith; Not him that is sick unto death through fundamental error, but one that is sound in the faith, though weak in judgment; men of honest hearts, but weak heads. Observe, 2. Here is an injunction of charity and christian forbearance towards these weak ones; Receive them, take them into your houses, yea, into your hearts; receive them into your society, into your communion, and let not difference in judgment cause any distance in affection. Observe, 3. The limitation of this injunction; Receive him, but not to doubtful disputations; that is, "Do not quarrel or contend with him about his opinions, or fill his head full of curious and intricate questions, or trouble him with doubtful disputes. Learn hence, That christians are to receive such as are weak in the faith, into their hearts by love, without troubling their heads with perplexing disputes. Weak christians cannot well judge of arguments: and practical piety, and christian love, will much sooner rectify the judgment of the weak, than fierce argumentations.

2 For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs.

3 ¶ Let not him that eateth, despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not, judge him that eateth; for God hath received him.

Here the apostle declares the ground of difference that was between them; namely, the difference of meats. One thought all meats to be lawful under the gospel; another, rather than eat any meats forbidden by the law, will eat only herbs. Where observe, How the church of God, in all ages, has been strangely divided about little and indifferent things. What jars and stirs were there between the eastern and western churches, about the observation of Easter? About celebrating the Lord's Supper with leavened or unleavened bread? And verily, the fatal evils which our hot contentions have occasioned amongst ourselves, only about indifferent rites and ceremonies, tears of blood are not sufficient to bewail. Observe next, The apostle's exhortation to the two contending parties, not to vilify or set at nought one another, condemning each other as humorous and scrupulous, much less as obstinate and wilful; but especially, not upon this occasion to separate from, or break communion with each other. Let not him that eateth all kinds of meats, despise him, that through weakness durst not eat of any. As if the apostle had said, "Whilst there is error in our understandings; weakness in our judgments, narrowness in our faculties, differences will arise in the church of God: but take care, that where there is compliance, that yet there may be peace: despise not, judge not one another." Observe, lastly, The reason offered by the apostle, why they should receive their weak brother; because God hath received him. God, that is most holy, and hateth sin, receiveth such; therefore, so must you, if you please God. Why should you refuse to hold communion with such who hold communion with God?

4 Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth; Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand.

Another reason is here produced, why we should not rashly censure or judge our brother differing in judgment from us about lesser things; namely, because he is God's servant, and it is God's sentence, and not ours which he must stand or fall by; and if these differences shall not hinder God's acceptance of him to salvation, why should they hinder us in accepting of him into our communion? To love, is our duty; to judge, is God's prerogative: let us be more in charity, and less in censure. Learn hence, That the scripture forbids us to judge one another, as having no grace, for the doing or not doing of those things, which are consistent with a present state of grace.

5 One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.

6 He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord, and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks: and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks.

The second case as to indifferent things, is about the observation of days. Many of the believing Jews could not be taken off from the solemnizing those feasts which were of God's own founding and instituting among the Jews. Another looked upon them truly as abrogated by Christ. Now, the apostle advises, that neither the one nor the other, neither he that regardeth, nor he that regardeth not those days, should be judged or hardly censured for so doing, because he acts therein according to the direction of his conscience. He that, according to his light, doth either eat or not eat such meats, keep or not keep such days, intends or designs it as an act of obedience to God: praying for, and giving thanks unto Almighty God for his acceptance. So then, if they both aim at the same end, and they ought not to condemn one another for each other's act. Learn hence, That persons, disagreeing with us, and differing from us in lesser things, from a real principle of conscience, firmly persuaded, that what they do, or refuse to do, is for the glory of God, and out of a sincere desire to please him, ought not to be judged by us, but left to the righteous judgment of the heart-searching God.

7 For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

8 For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's,

Here our apostle proves what he had before asserted, that christians in their particular actions, have a special regard to the Lord and his honor, because they devote themselves, living and dying, to the service of him and his glory: None of us, Christians, lives unto himself, but we spend our lives in his service; neither do we die unto ourselves, nor when we please, but when he appoints: therefore, living or dying, we are his. From the words absolutely considered, we may learn, That the best evidence we can have that we are Christ's servants, is this, when we make our aim and scope, our design and care, to live and die unto Christ our Lord, and not unto ourselves. Quest. "But when may we be said to live unto the Lord, and to die unto the Lord?" Ans. When we do not frame our lives after our own wills, but according to the word and will of God, making that the rule and ground of all our actions; when the great end why we desire life, is to do service for Christ on earth, and to be fitted by him for the fruition of him in heaven. Finally, then, we live and die unto the Lord, when we are willing to be at the disposal of God, both for life and death; and this as to a time, manner, and means; yea, all circumstances whatsoever, both of life and death. When a man is willing to lay down his life for the Lord, or at the call of the Lord, it is a certain evidence, that he liveth and dieth to the Lord.

9 For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

10 But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.

11 For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.

12 So then, every one of us shall give account of himself to God.

Three things are here observable: 1. That Jesus Christ, by virtue of his meritorious passion, and glorious resurrection, was constituted Lord of all things, and his power to judge all persons. "To this end Christ died, rose again, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living; that is, be the judge and rewarder of all mankind. Observe, 2. That to this supreme and absolute Lord every one of us must give an account of our actions, and from him receive our final doom: "We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ." Observe, 3. The argument which the apostle draws from hence to dissuade us from censuring and judging one another; and that is drawn from the consideration of the last and final judgment, which we are all hastening apace unto. "Why dost thou judge thy brother? We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." As if the apostle had said, "Let there be a mutual forbearance among christians: do not rashly judge, and uncharitably censure one another, because in some little things you differ from each other. What though your brother cannot in conscience comply with your opinion or practice, must you presently accuse him of stomach, and condemn him for stubbornness, calling his non-compliance obstinacy, and humor, pride and singularity, which he calls conscience towards God? Remember the judge standeth at the door, and you must suddenly stand before the judgment-seat of Christ; where every one of us must give an account of himself to God. Where note, the universality of the subjects rendering this account, every one of us: The subject-matter of which the account must be rendered; and that is, of ourselves: As also the designation and description of the person unto whom this account must be rendered: and that is, to the all-seeing and heart-searching God; to God the Creator, but especially to Christ the Lord, the Redeemer, who is such a judge as the power of the mightiest cannot daunt; such a judge as the riches of the wealthiest cannot bribe; such a judge as the subtilty of the wisest cannot delude; such a judge as there is no appealing from, no repealing of his sentence: "Therefore, judge nothing before the time, till the Lord cometh."

13 ¶ Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way.

14 I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself: but to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him, it is unclean.

15 But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.

16 Let not then your good be evil spoken of:

Observe here, 1. How the apostle advises persons to be very cautious in the use of their christian liberty: Put not a stumbling block, or an occasion of falling in your brother's way. Learn thence, That to use our christian liberty when it may be an occasion of sin, by laying a stumbling-block before others, although we do not use it with an intent or purpose to make them stumble, is very sinful. Observe, 2. The apostle's final determination concerning those meats, which some of the Jews scrupled as unclean, "I am persuaded by the Lord Jesus Christ, that there is nothing unclean of itself." The difference and distinction of meats, as clean and unclean, was taken away by our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe, 3. That although the apostle pronounces that there is no meat unclean in itself, yet notwithstanding this, to him that esteemeth any thing unclean, to him, as to the use of it, it is unclean. Observe, 4. With what tenderness the apostle directs all christians to carry themselves towards their weaker brethren, even to the abridging themselves of their lawful liberty in the use of indifferent things, rather than give the weak an occasion of offence. If thy brother be grieved with thy meat, (though no meat be unclean in itself,) yet in eating thou dost amiss, for three reasons: 1. Because it is against the laws of charity so to act in things indifferent; If thy brother be grieved, now walkest thou uncharitably." 2. Because it is the way to occasion him to sin, and consequently to do what in us lies to bring destruction upon him, for whom Christ died: "Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died." 3. Because eating thus with offence to the weak; causeth christian liberty, purchased by Christ, to be evil spoken of before the world: Let not then your good be evil spoken of. The sum of the whole is this, to show how uncharitable, unsafe, and unchristian a thing it is to make such an undue use of our christian liberty, as may occasion our weak brother to fall or stumble.

17 For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

That is, "The spiritual kingdom of God and Christ in the world, consisteth not in these little things of meat and drink, but in righteousness towards God and our neighbour; in peace, that is, in peaceableness of disposition in christian love, concord, and unity; and in joy in the Holy Ghost, that is, in the joyful sense of the love of God, shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost. In these things christianity consists." Learn hence, That the essence of christianity, and the life of religion, is far from consisting in little and indifferent things; and therefore, for persons to lay a mighty stress upon them one way or the other, is neither wise nor safe. Learn, 2 That righteousness and holiness, charity and peaceableness, love and joy, and such like fruits of the Holy Spirit; these are the great things wherein christianity or the kingdom of Christ consists, and in which the life and soul of religion is found. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

18 For he that in these things serveth Christ, is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

He that in these things, that is, in righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, serveth Christ, is acceptable to God: That is, this shows and evidences that he is a person accepted with God and approved of men, of wise, charitable, and good men; yea, the natural consciences of men in general will applaud and approve what is done by him, notwithstanding the forementioned difference in lesser things concerning meats and days. Learn hence, That the love and practice of religious duties, such as righteousness and peace, is a clear and strong argument of a person's acceptance with God. Learn, 2. That such as are for those things accepted by God, ought by no means, for differing from us in lesser things, to be disowned of us, and cast out of communion by us.

19 Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.

This verse is an inference drawn from the foregoing discourse. "Seeing the kingdom of God, or our common christianity, doth not consist either in the doing or declining of these little indifferent things, let us by no means hazard the peace of the church, or break communion with such as in their sentiments differ from us; much less let us despise and set at nought each other, upon the account of those small, yet unhappy differences; but let us earnestly pursue the things that make for the common peace of all christians, and the things by which we may further each other's edification and salvation. Learn hence, That in case of any emergent differences among christians, it ought to be the joint care and endeavour of all and every one to pursue the things which make for peace, and that this peace be such as will consist with, and greatly help forward the good of the church: Let us follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.

20 For meat destroy not the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence.

That is, "For meat destroy not thou the work of God,

Do not thou, for so inconsiderable a matter as eating is, endanger the christianity of thy brother, or hazard the peace of the church, and cause any through scandal to fall off from their christian profession. If any of you say, that all meats are clean, and therefore lawful; in answer, they are certainly so in themselves, but yet it is your sin, if you use them to the scandal and offence of others, that are not satisfied in the lawfulness of them." It is most certainly the duty of christians to deny themselves the use of their christian liberty in some things, when by making use of it, they may endanger any of their brethren, by causing them to fall from their own steadfastness.

21 It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

It is not good; that is, it is not charitable to make use of any part of our christian liberty, when by so doing any weak christian is offended, discouraged, and driven from his profession, and brought to any kind of sin. And if it be a christian's obliged duty to forbear the use of indifferent things, when it is a scandal to the weak; how much more is it a duty to avoid obtruding and imposing such things, to the scandal, offence, and hurt of others?

22 Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth.

Here the apostle answers an objection, Some might be ready to say, "That they had faith, that is, a firm and full persuasion, that it is lawful for them to eat those meats, which others judged to be sinful; and therefore it is necessary that they profess it, and own it, and assert their liberty." The apostle answers, "Hast thou more knowledge than he, to believe those things to be lawful, which he apprehends to be sinful? Keep thy knowledge and belief to thyself, to justify thy actions before God, but use it not to the hurt and prejudice of others; for he is a happy man, that when he knows a thing to be lawful, doth so use his liberty about it, as not to offend others, or condemn himself: for that is a sad kind of knowledge which is used to destroy others, and condemn ourselves. Such christians as have different sentiments from their brethren, as to the matters of indifferent things especially, ought to keep their judgment and opinion to themselves, and not to hazard the peace of the church by an imprudent publication: Hast thou faith? Have it to thyself.

23 And he that doubteth, is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith, is sin.

That is, "He that doubteth whether he should eat or no, and yet eats, is condemned of himself, because he doth a thing when he is not satisfied of its lawfulness; for whatsoever is not done of faith, that is, with a persuasion that it is lawful, is to him that does it undoubtedly sinful. Whatever a man does, believing it to be a sin, is certainly a sin in him." Here observe, That an erring conscience binds us to do nothing against it. A scrupulous conscience is a troublesome one, but it is better than a presumptuous conscience. As we must not nourish our scruples and doubtings, so neither must we act against our scruples and doubts. In short no man is to act contrary to his conscience; but then it is as much his duty to inform his conscience, as to follow his conscience. To act against conscience, is a very great sin; but a man may act according to his conscience, and yet be a very great sinner. St. Paul, when he was a bloody persecutor, tells us, he acted according to his conscience, Acts xxvi. 9. "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things against the name of Jesus of Nazareth." Pray we then for a conscience rightly informed by the word of God; and that we may so follow the dictates and directions of it whilst we live, that it may neither reprove nor reproach us when we come to die. Amen.

CHAPTER XV.

Our apostle having spent the foregoing chapter in a general exhortation and direction to stronger christians, how they should carry themselves toward their weak brethren in the use of their christian liberty about indifferent things, advising them neither to be censorious in judging one another, nor yet to put a stumbling-block in the way of one another, to occasion their falling; in the former part of this chapter he proceeds upon the same argument, and prosecutes the same design, exhorting the stronger christians to bear with the infirmities of their weaker brethren; and this from the example of Jesus Christ. And accordingly he bespeaks them thus, ver. 1.

WE then that are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.

2 ¶ Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification.

3 For even Christ pleased not himself; but as it is written, the reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

Observe here, 1. A great doctrine asserted, and a special duty declared, namely, that the strong, that is, such as do thoroughly understand their christian liberty, should bear with the infirmities, the ignorance, frowardness, and scrupulousness of the weak, and also forbear the doing of that which may scandalize and hurt the souls of men, who have not the same measures of knowledge with ourselves; "the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Observe, 2. The universality of the duty; We, that is, not only all private christians, but all church governors: he puts himself into the number, that he may propose himself as an example of the following duty: We, that are the officers, the pastors and governors of the church, like parents who bear with children in their waywardness, so must we bear, though not with heresies in doctrine, or enormities in practice, yet with such errors and mistakes in both, as proceed from ignorance or common infirmities. Observe, 3. A farther duty urged and enforced, namely not to please ourselves but others: "Let every one of us not please ourselves, but our neighbours;" that is, not please ourselves by insisting upon the use of our lawful liberty, but rather, for the sake of others, depart a little from our own right. Yet observe, 4. The limitation and restriction of this duty, "for his good to edification;" it is not simply and absolutely said, "Let every one please his neighbour." The heretic, the drunkard, and others, would like that well, to have every one speak and act as they do: but the rule is, to please every man "for his good to edification;" thus far we may please them, but no farther. Edification is the rule and scope, and boundary of all our complacency in, and complacency with others. Observe, 5. How the apostle urges and enforces this duty, from the example of Jesus Christ: "He pleased not himself," therefore such as profess faith in him, must study to be as he was: nothing was more remote from Christ when here on earth, than self-seeking, and self pleasing; he did not consult his own ease or satisfaction, but rather respected others benefit than his own: yea, he was so far from pleasing of himself, that he did willingly expose himself to all the reproaches and contumelies of men, in obedience to his Father's will; and was so tender of God the Father's honor, that all the reproaches which fell upon the one, affected and afflicted the other: "The reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell on me." Now from the whole we note, That christians ought to be very tender towards one another in the use of their lawful liberty: they must not do whatever they please in things of an indifferent nature, without showing any regard to others; much less should they please themselves in a proud reflecting upon their own knowledge, and in contemning those that have not so great a latitude and liberty as themselves: "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities, &c.

4 For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we, through patience and comfort of the scripture might have hope.

The apostle here informs us what is the general use of the holy scriptures, and what is the particular reason for which they were written; namely, 1. For instruction, "they were written for our learning;" all the precepts, promises, threatenings, rewards, and punishments, recorded in the scriptures are for our information, conviction, and direction. 2. They were written for our comfort and consolation also, "that we through patience and comfort of them might have hope," that is, that we through patience in bearing the like censures and reproaches, which we find the scripture-saints have borne before us, might have hope of being rewarded as they were for it. Learn hence, That the great end for which the holy scriptures were written, was the informing of our judgments, and the directing of our practice, that by the examples which we find there of the patience of holy men under sufferings, and of God's relieving and comforting them in their distresses, we might have hope, yea, confidence and assurance, that God will also comfort and relieve us, under the like pleasures and burdens.

5 Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded one toward another, according to Christ Jesus:

6 That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Observe here, 1. How the apostle concludes his foregoing exhortation, with voive supplications, and fervent prayer; the ministers of God must follow the word they deliver with prayer: they must not only wrestle with their people; but they must wrestle with God for and in behalf of their people, if they ever hope to overcome. Observe, 2. The prayer and supplication itself, and that is, for concord and unity among christians: "That they may with one mind and one mouth glorify God;" that in their christian assemblies they may all worship God after the same manner; and not one this way, and another that. Unity among christians in common conversation, but especially in church communion, is a very desirable mercy, and much to be prayed for, by the ministers of God. Observe, 3. How the apostle addresses himself in prayer to God for this mercy under a double title. 1. As a God of patience, "The God of patience grant you to be like minded;" intimating, 1. What great need there is of patience, in order to maintain love and unity among christians: and, 2. That God must be applied to in prayer, who is the author of it, to produce and work this grace of patience, in order unto peace and unity among christians: "The God of patience grant you to be like-minded." The unity of the saints greatly depends upon the exercise of patience one towards another; and that they might attain it, he begs the God of patience to give it. 3. Our apostle joins with this another title, namely, "the God of consolation;" wherein he points them to that abundant comfort, which would result to themselves from such a blessed unity, continued and maintained by the mutual exercises of patience and forbearance one towards another: "The God of patience and consolation grant you to be like minded one towards another." Observe, 4. The pattern and example which he lays before them to excite and quicken them to this duty, namely, the example of Christ himself; "according to Christ Jesus," that is, according to the example of Christ Jesus: as if the apostle had said, "Let us consider how the Lord Jesus bears with us, how many thousand infirmities and failings doth he find in the best of us, yet he is pleased to maintain communion with us; and shall not we after his example do the like, that thereby God may be eminently glorified by us?" Observe, 5. How God is called the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, ver. 6. 1. As he begat him by an eternal and ineffable generation. 2. As he was man, so he created him, St. Luke i. 35. 3. As Mediator, so he appointed him to, and qualified him for that office. And eternally magnified be omnipotent love, that the comfort of this compellation redounds to us! for, as he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, so he is in him our Father also, our merciful, our gracious and loving Father: may we never demean ourselves towards him as dutiful and obedient children.

7 ¶ Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God.

Here our apostle concludes the argument which he had hitherto insisted upon in this and the former chapter, namely, that all christians, both strong and weak, should mutually forbear one another, and that both Jew and Gentile should receive each other into fellowship and communion, without contention about things of an indifferent nature: "Wherefore receive ye one another," And, to enforce this exhortation, he propounds the example of our Lord Jesus Christ. "Receive one another, as Christ also received us;" that is, after the example of Christ, who puts no difference betwixt Jew and Gentile, but receives both, and bears with the infirmities of both: which action in Christ, and the imitation of it in us, will much redound to the glory of God; his declarative and manifestative glory being much promoted by this concord and union with and among all his members, of what denomination soever they are, whether believing Jews or Gentiles. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ has given full and ample demonstration of his great and wonderful love unto his church and people. 2. That this love of Christ towards all his children and people ought to be improved by them, as an argument to love one another: "Receive one another, as Christ received us:" 3. That christians receiving, embracing, and loving one another, and bearing with one another's weaknesses and infirmities, according to Christ's example and command, will contribute exceedingly to the honor and glory of Almighty God, and to the abundant consolation and satisfaction of each other: "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God."

8 Now I say, that Jesus Christ was minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers:

9 And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name.

10 And again he saith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11 And again, Praise the Lord all ye Gentiles; and laud him all ye people.

12 And again, Esaias saith, There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles trust.

The apostle had in the foregoing verse, propounded the example of Christ in receiving both Jew and Gentile to his grace and favor, as an argument to persuade all christians to receive one another: now, in the verses before us, he declares how and after what manner Christ received both Jews and Gentiles. As for the Jews, first, whom he calls the circumcision, the apostle telleth us, That Jesus was their minister; that is, he was circumcised like them, conversed generally with them, and exercised his ministry among them, according to the many promises which God had made to the Jewish patriarchs; and thus he showed his love and mercy towards the Jews in the days of his flesh. Then, secondly, as to the Gentiles he affirms, that according to the several prophecies and promises in the Old Testament, they were called and received to mercy by our Lord Jesus Christ, the partition-wall being by him broken down, and Jew and Gentile become one sheepfold, under one shepherd. Now, from the truth and faithfulness of Christ towards the Jews; and from his love and tenderness, mercy and compassion towards the Gentiles; and from his divine indulgence towards both, the apostle very fitly draws this inference and conclusion, That all christians, how differing sever from one another in their judgments and opinions as to lesser things, ought to receive one another into fellowship and christian communion: and instead of biting and devouring one another, be once at length so wise and happy, as to hold the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

13 Now, the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

Observe here, 1. How the apostle closes his exhortation to brotherly concord and unity with a pithy and pathetic prayer; his example herein is instructive. Observe, 2. The title or appellation which he gives unto God in prayer: The God of hope: sometimes he styles him the God of grace, sometimes the God of peace, sometimes the God of patience, here the God of hope; he being so objectively, the only object of our common hope: and also effectively, as he is the author and producer of hope in us. Observe, 3. The mercies he prays for, 1. That they may "be filled with all joy and peace in believing," that their hearts may overflow with peace from God, and one towards another, and with all that joy which results from both. 2. That "they may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost; where, by hope, understand the good hoped for, namely, heaven and eternal life, a firm expectation of which is wrought in us by the Holy Spirit. Learn, 1. That God is the object of a christian's hope, and if so, the sin of despair is a most unreasonable sin: for why should any despair of his mercy, who is the God of hope, who commands us to hope in his mercy, and takes pleasure in them that do so; Ps. cxlvii. 11. Learn, 2. That the grace of hope, together with joy and peace in believing, are wrought in the christian's heart through the power of the Holy Ghost, that is, through the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost, enlightening the understanding, inclining the will, rectifying the affections, and reducing all the rebellious powers and faculties of the soul (in concurrence with our endeavours) under the government and dominion of reason and religion.

14 And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another, 15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given to me of God.

16 That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost.

17 I have, therefore, whereof, I may glory through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God.

Our apostle being now about to conclude his epistle to the church at Rome, excuses himself that he had written so largely, and with such freedom to them, believing that they abounded in grace and knowledge, and were very fit and able to instruct and direct one another; however he thought fit to write unto them, having had the honor conferred upon him by Christ, to be called to the apostolical office, and particularly to be the ambassador of Christ to the Gentiles; most passionately desiring that he might present and offer them unto God, as an acceptable sacrifice through the power and assistance of the Holy Ghost; and that his success in the conversion of the Gentiles would be matter of abundant glorifying to him. Here observe, 1. How the apostle, in preparing the Gentiles for the obedience of the gospel compares himself to a Levitical priest, conversant about his sacrifice, and fitting it to be offered up to God. 2. That the Gentiles dedicated by the apostle's ministry to the service of God, were the apostle's sacrifice and oblation. 3. That the Holy Spirit is a libamen poured on this sacrifice; by which it is sanctified and rendered acceptable unto God. 4. That such an oblation, or offering up of a people in this manner unto God, is matter of rejoicing, yea, matter of glorying, to the ministers of Jesus Christ; I have therefore, whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ."

18 For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient by word and deed.

19 Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God: so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20 Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation.

21 But, as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard, shall understand.

Observe here, 1. The indefatigable industry and pains of the holy apostle, in order to the conversion of the Gentiles: "From Jerusalem round about to Illyricum he fully preached the gospel of Christ." This, according to Parcus' computation, was little less than a thousand miles. The industry of the apostles in planting and propagating the gospel of Christ, was almost incredible. Lord, what pains did they take? What hazards did they run? What difficulties did they contest and contend with, in that great work? Observe, 2. That although their industry was great, yet their success was greater than their industry, and beyond all human expectation. This appears by the vast spreading of the gospel in so short a space: "From Jerusalem round about unto Illyricum." Within thirty years after our Saviour's death, the gospel was not only diffused through the greatest part of the Roman empire, but had reached as far as Parthia and India. Observe, 3. That the gospel or doctrine of Jesus had likewise a wonderful power and efficacy upon the lives and manners of men: the apostle tells us, that the Gentiles who were converted to christianity, were obedient by word and deed: upon the change of their religion, followed the change of their conversation, and whole course of life. Observe, 4. The reason of all this wonderful success which St. Paul and other apostles had in preaching the gospel; and that was the extraordinary power of the Holy Ghost, in enabling them to work miracles for the confirmation of the gospel, ver. 19. "Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God." Such was the miraculous power of healing diseases, of casting out devils! of inflicting corporeal punishment upon scandalous persons! all of which did serve in general for the confirmation of the gospel, and did in particular support the honor and authority of the apostles, and supply the want of the magistrate's power, which the christians could not expect whilst the Roman emperors continued Heathen: not that all these miraculous powers were given to every one of the apostles, or that they, which had them could exercise them at all times, or whenever they pleased; but only as was most expedient for the use and benefit of the church. Observe, 5. That the apostle, in preaching the gospel, chose to go to such dark and blind places as never heard of the gospel before, rather than amongst them where Christ had been named, that so he might lay the foundation of christianity himself, and not build upon another man's foundation: and likewise that in his ministry, the prophecy of Esaias might be fulfilled, chap. lii. 15. "To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard, shall understand."

22 For which cause also I have been much hindered from coming to you.

23 But now, having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you:

24 Whensoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you: For I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you;

if first I be somewhat filled with your company.

The apostle having in the former verses, excused himself for dealing so plainly in his writings with them, doth here apologize for his not coming amongst them, affirming, that the true reason why he did not visit Rome, was this: He looked upon planting of churches as more necessary than watering of them, and the preaching of Christ where he had never been named, to be the most needful work. Now at Rome there had before been a church planted, and elders ordained to build upon that foundation; for this reason he had hitherto declined coming to Rome; but now, having no more place in these parts, that is, having no more churches to plant hereabouts, he signifies both his inclinations and fixed resolutions to visit them at Rome, as he took his journey into Spain, and to stay some time with them, that they might be mutually filled and satisfied with, and refreshed by, each other's company. Here note, 1. That the Romans were very early converted and called to the christian faith, soon after Christ's ascension; for the twentieth year after it, did Paul write this epistle. But he had a desire of seeing the Romans many years before he wrote unto them, and therefore many years before they were converted to the faith. Note, 2. That our journeying from one place to another, is not according to our purpose, but God's disposal. The apostle, no doubt, intended to go into Spain when he wrote this; but God over-ruled the matter beyond the apostle's expectation. The travels of the apostles from place to place, in order to the planting and propagating of the christian faith, were under the special influence and direction of the Holy Ghost, Acts xvi. 7. "They assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not." Note, 3. The great end why the apostle was so desirous of the sight and enjoyment of the christians at Rome: it was that he might be refreshed, nay, filled with their company. Lord, how desirable is the communion of saints, and how beneficial the society of sincere and serious christians! Their company in filling (not empty, vain and frothy, as the company of most is, but) administering both grace and comfort to them that copy it: "I desire to see you in my journey, that I may be filled with your company."

25 But now I go unto Jerusalem to minister unto the saints.

26 For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem.

27 It hath pleased them verily: and their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things.

28 When, therefore, I have performed this, and have sealed to them this fruit, I will come by you into Spain.

29 And I am sure that when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

Here the apostle acquaints them with his present intended journey to Jerusalem, as also with the occasion of it; namely, to carry the charitable contributions to the Greek churches in Macedonia and Achaia, into Judea, and up to the poor saints at Jerusalem, whose necessities required it, and unto whom they were in a sort indebted for it; "the Gentiles having been made partakers of their spiritual things, (receiving the gospel from Judea) they are obliged in gratitude to minister to them in carnal things. He farther assures them, that as soon as he had finished his journey and performed this charitable office, he would come to them, and that in the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of peace. Note here, 1. The title given to the poor christians at Jerusalem: They are called saints; "I go to Jerusalem to administer to the saints' necessities." Saints they were by baptismal dedication, by visible profession, and many, yea most of them, it is to be hoped by inward sanctification also. Note, 2. That poverty and sanctity are not inconsistent; the saints at Jerusalem are poor, but God provided a purveyor for them; he stirs up the apostle, and the hearts of the Macedonians, to administer to the necessities of these poor saints. Note, 3. How the saints in one church did succour and relieve the poor christians in another; these in Macedonia and Achaia send relief into Judea, and to the poor saints which were at Jerusalem: teaching us, that it is our obliged duty to extend our charity to the churches abroad and beyond the seas, when their wants and necessities require it, and our capacities enable us unto it. Note, 4. The nature of this charity declared; it was a free and cheerful contribution performed with much pleasure: it pleased them to make a contribution; it was not extorted or squeezed from them, but given with cheerfulness by them: contributions must not be compulsions, but voluntary obligations. Note, 5. How this charity is called fruit; When I have sealed this fruit: because it was the fruit of their faith, liberality, and love: because as fruit, it would redound both to the benefit of the giver and receiver. Charity and alms are fruit redounding to account in the great day of account. Note, 6. The great integrity and fidelity of the apostle in securing of this charity: "when I have sealed, or secured, unto them this fruit." The church's charity is a sealed treasure, not to be diminished and embezzled, but applied to the uses to which it is devoted. Note, lastly, the assurance which he gives them, that when he comes among them, he shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of peace unto them: that is, with a full impartment of spiritual gifts and gospel blessings, much knowledge, grace and comfort.

30 Now, I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me;

31 That I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea: and that my service which I have for Jerusalem, may be accepted of the saints.

32 That I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed.

Here in the close of the epistle, our apostle most affectionately recommends himself to the prayers of the christian Romans unto whom he wrote: I beseech you, brethren, strive, &c. Where observe, 1. The apostle's courteous compellation, brethren. There is a threefold brotherhood, which the scripture takes notice of: 1. between Christ and believers: Heb. ii. 11. "he is not ashamed to call them brethren." 2. Betwixt believers themselves, they are brethren by grace: 1 Pet. ii. 17. Love the brotherhood; that is, the collective body of believers. 3. Betwixt the ministers of Christ and their beloved people, there is also a brotherhood, Rev. i. 19. I John your brother: teaching the ministers of the gospel to carry it towards their people with love and gentleness, and the people to make reciprocal returns of love and affection. Observe, 2. The manner of the apostle's request: it is by way of supplication and entreaty: I beseech you brethren. Though as an apostle he might have enjoined them, yet for love's sake he rather entreats them. Observe, 3. The request itself, that they strive together in their prayers for him. The original word signifies to strive together as wrestlers do, who exert all their power and might in that bodily exercise. Observe, 4. Our apostle's sincerity, and holy ingenuity in this request which he makes unto them; he desires them to strive with them in their prayers to God for him: he doth not with some, beg the prayers of others, and neglect to pray for himself, but is willing to draw with them in the same yoke. Observe, 5. A double argument which the apostles make use of, to enforce his supplication and request: 1. for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, for the sake of him who is so dear both to you and me. 2. For the love of the Spirit; that is, if the grace of love be wrought in you by the Holy Spirit of God, show it by your fervent prayer for all saints in general, and for myself a minister of Jesus Christ in particular. Observe, 6. The particulars concerning which he desires their supplications: 1. For preservation in his journey to Judea; that the unbelieving Jews, which were prejudiced against him, might have no power to hurt him. 2. That his person, and his performance for the poor saints at Jerusalem, might find acceptance with the christian Jews, to whom he was not over acceptable; he therefore begs their prayers, that the believing Jews at Jerusalem might be reconciled both to the believing Gentiles that sent this alms, and also to himself that brought it; "That my service for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints." 3. That he might have a prosperous journey to them by the will of God. Where note, How much it is our duty always, and in all things, to refer ourselves, our intentions and actions, to the pleasure and providence, to the wisdom and will of God. And observe, lastly, the special reason why he was so desirous to visit and come unto them, that he might be refreshed with them, and by them; that the company and conversation of each other may be to their mutual refreshment and satisfaction: "that I may come unto you with joy, by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed."

33 Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

CHAPTER XVI,

This chapter, which closes our apostle's epistle to the Romans, is chiefly made up of charitable and friendly salutations and commendations of some particular persons: according to the earliness and strength of their several graces, and their labor of love for the interest of Christ and his church.

I COMMEND unto you Phebe, our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea:

2 That ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also.

The first person here mentioned is Phebe: who, going upon some occasion to Rome, St. Paul is supposed to have sent this epistle to the Romans by her: "I commend, says he, to your care and affectionate regard, Phebe, our sister in the faith, who served the church at Cenchrea," in the quality of a deaconess, as some think, or as others, who spent her time in receiving and harbouring poor christians that were driven out of their own country, and who had been a succourer and supporter of the apostle himself. He exhorts them to receive her in the Lord; that is, with christian love for the Lord's sake, and to be assistant and helpful to her in her outward affairs and business. Learn hence, what honor God puts upon the female sex, in making use of some of them to be assistants of the apostles, and taking care that their offices of love and service for and towards the ministers and members of Christ, should not be forgotten, but had and kept in everlasting remembrance. The services which Phebe did, are here recorded, to posterity transmitted, and to our imitation recommended.

3 Greet Priscilla and Aquila, my helpers in Christ Jesus;

4 (Who have for my life laid down their own necks; unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles.)

5 Likewise greet the church that is in their house.—

The first persons at Rome, whom St. Paul saluteth by name, are Priscilla and Aquila. The woman is named before her husband, and shows that they were all one in Christ Jesus, in whom is neither male nor female.—Here, by the way, it appears how weakly the papists argue for St. Peter's primacy, because placed first in the catalogue of the apostles. By the same argument, the woman is the head of the man, because here named before the man. Observe, 2, The honorable title which St. Paul puts upon these two persons, Aquila and Priscilla; he calls them his helpers in Christ Jesus. They were his assistants in propagating the gospel by private instruction, though not by public preaching, Acts xviii. 26. Observe, 3. The christian courage which was found with this holy woman Priscilla, and her husband Aquila: "They laid down their own necks for the apostles; that is, exposed themselves to the hazard of their own lives for his preservation. Observe, 4. The thankful remembrance which the apostle and all the churches of the Gentiles had of this their great and noble service, in hazarding their own lives for his: "to whom I give thanks, and all the churches of the Gentiles." Because St. Paul was the apostle of the Gentiles, and his preservation redounded to the benefit of them all; therefore were the churches of the Gentiles so sensible of, and thankful for, the apostle's preservation. Observe lastly, the salvation sent to the church that was in their house. By which some understand their household, the christian family, which he calls a church, because of the pious order, and religious worship which was there observed. O happy houses! and thrice happy householders! whose families are little churches for piety and devotion. Others understand by the church in their house, the number of christians which used there to assemble for religious worship. Be it the one or the other, our apostle forgets not to send kind and christian salutations to them.

—Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the first-fruits of Achaia unto Christ.

6 Greet Mary, who bestowed much labor on us,

7 Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen and my fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were in Christ before me,

Three persons are here saluted by name: the first, Epenetus, whom he calls the first-fruits of Achaia; that is, the first person that embraced christianity, or the faith of Christ, in the region of Achaia: the second is Mary, a common name, but the person here intended was of special note, having bestowed much pains upon, and done many good offices for, the preachers of the gospel: the third is Andronicus, noted for his sufferings and services among the apostles, as also for his early embracing the christian faith. He was in Christ before me: that is, converted to christianity before myself. Learn hence, 1. That seniority in grace is a very great honor: and to be in Christ before others is a transcendent prerogative. Learn, 2. That God will have the good works of all his saints, and the services especially which are done to his ministers and ambassadors by any of his people, to be applauded, valued, and recorded. Mary's labor bestowed on the apostle, is here mentioned with respect.

8 Greet Amplias, my beloved in the Lord.

9 Salute Urbane our helper in Christ and Stachys my beloved.

10 Salute Apelles, approved in Christ.

Salute them which are of Aristobolus' household.

11 Salute Herodian my kinsman. Greet them that be of the household of Narcissus, which are in the Lord.

12 Salute Tryphena, and Tryphosa, who laboured in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, which labored much in the Lord.

13 Salute Rufus, chosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine, 14 Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

15 Salute Philologos, and Julia, Nereus, and his sister, and Olympas, and all the saints which are with them.

Here observe, 1. How the apostle salutes the christians at Rome, not in general, but particularly, and by name, that they might be convinced how particularly mindful he was of them. And as he mentions them by name in the salutations, it is not improbable, but that he might mention them also by name in his supplications and private addresses to God. No doubt he bore them, and all converted by him, upon his heart, whenever he went in and out before the Lord. A spiritual father can never be forgetful of his spiritual children. Observe, 2. The persons saluted by the apostle are not men of fame in Rome, noted for their dignity and greatness, or for their wealth and riches, but for their piety and goodness, for laboring in the Lord, and for laboring much in the Lord, for being in Christ, approved in Christ, and helpers in Christ; that is, assistants in propagating the gospel of Christ, and serviceable to those whose work and office it was so to do. It is religion that renders persons renowned, and no persons deserve so well to be remembered by us, as those that are most persevering and laborious in their services for God. Observe, 3. Here are several women, as well as men, remembered and saluted, and their services for Christ and his ministers recorded. God will have none of his faithful servants forgotten, nor any of their good deeds buried in oblivion. Observe, 4. That in all this roll of salutations, there is no mention made of St. Peter's name. Had he now been at Rome, as the papists will have him, and bishop of that see, it had been morally impossible for our apostle to have forgotten him in his salutations, when so many of his inferiors were remembered by him.

16 Salute one another with an holy kiss. The churches of Christ salute you.

Observe here, How the apostle proceeds from greeting the saints at Rome himself, to persuade them to salute one another. There had been much dissension among them about meats and days; he therefore craves of them for the future to embrace each other with cordial love, and affectionate kindness; and, as a token and symbol of it, to salute one another with an holy kiss, the usual expression of friendship in those times. The primitive christians, at the end of their prayers, before the celebration of the sacrament, did salute one another with a kiss, and then the bread and cup were brought forth; and some observe, that it was done by the men apart and the women apart. But this custom being afterwards abused, was gradually laid aside. That which is lawful in its use, and innocent in its own nature, may and ought to be laid aside, when it becomes matter of scandal and just offence.

17 Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which we have learned; and avoid them.

18 For they that are such, serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.

Observe here, 1. How our apostle takes his leave and farewell of these Romans, with an admonition to them, to take heed of persons that were erroneous in doctrine, and scandalous in practice. It is probable, he means, either Jews who pleaded the necessity of circumcision, and the observation of the Mosaic rites, as necessary to the salvation of the Gentiles; or the Gnostics, to whom the following characters do well agree. Whoever they were, they were dangerous seducers, and to be avoided. Observe, 2. The character which our apostle gives of these persons; "They serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly." Note, The seducers are always self-seekers; they are designing men: they aim at themselves, under a pretence of acting for Christ and his glory. "They serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly." Observe, 3. The arts and methods which they use to delude and deceive: "By good words and fair speeches, they deceive the hearts of the simple." Seducers have smooth and glossy tongues: and innocent harmless men are misled by their fine pretences, and fair fair speeches: and thus they impose upon the simple. Observe, 4. The double advice which the apostle gives, in order to their being preserved and secured from the poison and contagion of these seducers; namely, to mark them, and avoid them. 1. To mark them: the word signifies such a marking, as a watch-man useth when he standeth upon a tower to descry an enemy, which is performed with great accuracy. 2. To avoid them as a sound person would shun him that has the plague upon him. Where note, The apostle advises to mark them, in order to the declining of them, not destroying of them; to cut them off by excommunication, not to cut their throats, or burn their bodies for heresy. "Mark them which cause divisions, and avoid them." Observe, 5, The persons whom this exhortation concerns, who they are that should judge of the doctrines of seducers; they are the common people, the Romans, the saints or christians at Rome, to whom he was now writing; to them the apostle allows a judgment of discretion, a power to try and examine the doctrines delivered by persons pretending to infallible inspiration: "I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions contrary to the doctrines which ye have learned." Christians are by no means to be led by their teachers blind-fold, but ought to see with their own eyes, to take nothing upon trust, but all upon trial, to examine the doctrines they are taught, and to observe and mark the teachers of them "I beseech you," says our apostle, "mark them."

19 For your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad, therefore, on your behalf; but yet I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil.

As if the apostle had said, "I do not accuse you, but advise and warn you only: I acknowledge that you, the Christians at Rome, are famous for your obedience to the apostolical doctrine, and that you walk in faith and love, in unity and concord, to the credit of the gospel, and to the honor of your holy religion. But I would have you know, that you are not wholly out of danger of being infected by these Judaizers: I wish you therefore wisdom to escape their snares; the Lord make you wise as well as zealous, that you may discern that which is good, and decline that which is evil." Learn hence, That the holiest, best and wisest of Christians, must look upon themselves as secure from the snares of seducers, but stand in need of all the cautions and warnings, of all the advice and counsel of their spiritual guides, in order to their preservation from the poison of their principles, and the contagion of their example.

20 And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. AMEN.

These words may be considered either relatively, or absolutely, if relatively, or with relation to the context, then by Satan is to be understood seducers and false teachers, whom he had warned the Romans of, in the preceding verses: "Mark them which cause divisions, &c." Learn hence, 1. That all corrupters of divine truths, and troublers of the church's peace, are Satan's instruments: God shall bruise Satan, that is, Satan in his instruments, under your feet. Learn, 2. That divine evangelical truth shall be finally victorious: no weapon formed against it shall prosper; the head of error shall fall low at last at the feet of truth. Seducers may bluster for a time, but shall be bruised at last; the God of peace shall bruise Satan shortly. Consider the words absolutely, and we have a victory proclaimed; the author of that victory declared, the God of peace; the enemy conquered, Satan; the conquest or manner of conquering, by bruising; the time of the conquest, not presently, but shortly. "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." Learn, 1. That the reconciler of the world should be the subduer of Satan; and in subduing Satan he conquers all his instruments; he saith not, God shall bruise seducers and heretics under your feet; but Satan, and in him, all that belongs unto him; as the fall of the general puts the whole army to the rout. Learn, 2. That Almighty

God in his own time, will make believers complete conquerors over Satan, and all their spiritual enemies. Note, 3. That it is by virtue of Christ's conquest over Satan, that believers become conquerors; for the promise here refers to the original promise, Gen. iii. 15. That Christ, the seed of the woman, shall break the serpent's head. So then it is by virtue of that act of Jesus Christ, bruising the serpent's head, yea, breaking it, that Satan is bruised under our feet. As Christ bruised him under his own feet, so in his own time will he bruise him under our feet. The personal as well as the representative seed of the woman, shall break the serpent's head. Remember, poor tempted Christian, for thy comfort, the God of peace will tread Satan under thy feet shortly; thou shalt set thy foot on the neck of thy enemy; and when once thy foot is over the threshold of glory, thou shalt cast back a smiling look, and say, "Now Satan, do thy worst: through grace I am where thou shalt never come"

21 Timotheus, my work-fellow, and Lucius, and Jason, and Sosipater, my kinsmen, salute you.

22 I Tertius, who wrote this epistle, salute you in the Lord, 23 Gaius, mine host, and of the whole church, saluteth you. Erastus, the chamberlain of the city, saluteth you, and Quartus, a brother.

Our apostle had in the former part of the chapter, saluted divers persons himself; here he sends the salutation of those that were with him to the saints or Christians at Rome: hereby showing that mutual love and amity, that happy concord and unity, which is and ought to be between all the sincere disciples and followers of Jesus, when, though not in body, yet in mind, they should be present with one another, and though distant in place, yet undivided in affection. The two principal persons here sending joint salutations with the apostle to these Romans, were Timothy and Gaius. The former St. Paul calls his work-fellow or fellow-labourer: "Timotheus my work-fellow." Where note, The great humility of the apostle in dignifying so young a man as Timothy then was, with this title. What greater dignity than to be a fellow-worker with the apostle, in planting and propagating the gospel of Jesus Christ? The latter was Gaius, whom the apostle calls "his host, and the host of the whole church;" that is a person employed by the church of Corinth to entertain Christian strangers. To perform the meanest offices of love and service for the persecuted or distressed saints and servants of Jesus Christ, to entertain them in our houses, yea, to wash their feet, is an honorable and acceptable service.

24 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. AMEN.

Here again our apostle, from the abundance of his affectionate heart towards them, repeats his benediction of them, that the mercy, grace and goodness of the Lord Jesus Christ may abide upon, and evermore continue with them.—Where note, The fountain and original spring from whence all grace doth rise and flow; namely, from Jesus Christ;

"The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ." It is so called, because he purchased it for us, because he applies it to us.

25 Now to him that is of power to establish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, (according to the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret since the world began ;

26 But now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God made known unto all nations for the obedience of faith.)

27 To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen.

Our apostle here concludes his excellent epistle with a solemn doxology or thanksgiving to God ; in which he first describes God, and then ascribes eternal glory to him. He describes him, both by his power and by his wisdom. By his power first : "To him that is able to establish you according to my gospel ; that is, to establish you in grace and truth, in the faith and holiness, and to keep you from falling into sin and error. Such is our weakness, and satan's power, that unless God confirm and establish us, we shall soon run into sin and danger. Observe farther, The instrumental means which God makes use of, for his people's establishment, and that is the gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, the doctrine of the gospel which Christ and his apostles taught and delivered. This is called a mystery, kept secret since the world began, and now made manifest for the obedience of the faith ; that is, that it may be believed and obeyed. The second attribute in the description of God, is his wisdom : he is called the wise, the holy wise God ; not to exclude the Son and Holy Ghost, but the wisdom of the creature only : he is only wise originally, his wisdom is of himself, yea, his wisdom is himself : the wisdom of God is not a quality separable from himself, but is his very essence and nature. He is only wise, because he is incomparably wise ; there is none that for wisdom can compare with him. He has wisdom in such a degree and eminency, that the very angels are chargeable with folly before him. In a word, he is only wise, because all wisdom is derived from him : all the wisdom of angels and men is but a ray from his light, a drop from his ocean. And if so, then let the wisdom of God, in all his dealings with us and ours be admired and adored by us ; for all his works of providence are as orderly and perfect as his works of creation, though we perceive it not.

Now unto him that is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, now and ever.—AMEN.

THE

FIRST EPISTLE OF SAINT PAUL

CORINTHIANS.

That this epistle was written by St. Paul to the church of Corinth, was never doubted by the church of God. Corinth was the eye of Greece, a very opulent and wealthy city, but infamous for pride and luxury, for wantonness and uncleanness ; yet God had much people in this city, in order to whose conversion to christianity, this apostle continued preaching amongst them a year and six months : and such a special blessing did accompany his endeavours, that this new planted church became one of the most famous and eminent churches for all manner of spiritual gifts throughout the christian world.

The occasion of writing this Epistle was an unhappy schism that arose in the church of Corinth by the people's preferring one preacher before another. Instead of being thankful to God for the endowments of all his ministers, and endeavouring to reap the benefit and advantage of all their mutual labors, they vainly gloried in men, some crying up Paul, others Apollos, &c. Hereupon St. Paul sent this Epistle as a bucket to quench this fire, which had threatened the destruction of this flourishing church.

And observable it is, with what freedom and impartiality the apostle proceeds in the management of this epistle: he sharply reproves both their erroneous opinions and vicious practices; he wisely rebukes them for their schisms and divisions, for their confusion and disorders in public assemblies, for their horrid profanation of the Lord's Supper, for their toleration of incest, for going to law before Heathen magistrates: he asserts the ministers' maintenance, the excellence of spiritual gifts, the nature and necessity of charity; and by multiplied arguments, confirms the doctrine of the resurrection.

CHAPTER I.

PAUL, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother.

2 Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours.

3 Grace be unto you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Observe here, 1. The apostle's asserting his commission, for the work of the ministry, to be from God: he was called to be an apostle by the will of God: he did not thrust himself into that high and honorable employment, but was chosen, called, and sent by God. Such as enterprize the sacred function without a regular call and commission, may expect a blast instead of a blessing. Observe, 2. The double object of St. Paul's salutation in this epistle; he first salutes the church of Corinth in particular, and then all the churches of Christ in general; "To all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord." Where note, That they were not real saints, no, nor all visible saints (but called to be both) whom he calls the church. Many secretly vile and scandalously profane persons were found amongst them: yet the apostle salutes them as the church of God; "To the church of God at Corinth." Learn hence, That there may be a mixture of profane and scandalous persons with real saints in the church of God here on earth; there may be, I say: I mean, de facto, there have been and there will be, not de jure, that there ought to be such a mixture; yet, if so, this doth not unchurch the assembly in which they are; they are the disease of the church, but not its death; such corruptious and blemishes cannot consist with the well-being, but may consist with the being of particular churches. Observe, 3. The salutation itself, "grace and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." Where note, 1. A double blessing desired, grace and peace; grace is of all blessings the richest, and peace is of all comforts the sweetest. Note, 2. A double spring discovered, from whence this double blessing flows, God and Christ; God as the original source and fountain of all good in himself; and Christ, as the donor and dispenser of all good to us. Note, 3. The order of the words, first grace, then peace; there can be no peace without grace, and no grace but there will be peace; there can be no peace but from God, no peace from God but as a father; no peace from God as a father, but as our father; and he cannot comfortably be said to be our father, but through our Lord Jesus Christ. Learn hence, That all that grace and peace which believers share in, and are made partakers of, is derived from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

4 I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ;

5 That in every thing ye are enriched by him in all utterance, and in all knowledge;

6 Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you.

7 So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ:

8 Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

As if the apostle had said, "I am very thankful to God for his grace and favour bestowed upon you through Jesus Christ, in and by the preaching of the gospel, and particularly for the gift of tongues, and other miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit vouchsafed to you, whereby the divinity of the gospel (called here "the testimony of Christ, because it testifies of Christ") was attested and confirmed." He farther tells them, that he was firmly persuaded, that God would confirm them unto the end, causing them to persevere unblameable in holiness, till the coming of Christ to deliver his faithful servants, and remarkably to destroy his crucifiers; because of the faithfulness of God, who having "called them to the fellowship of his Son, and to partake of his invaluable benefits, will never leave them, but accomplish the whole pleasure of his will in them. Observe here, 1. That the apostle, in the third verse, prayed affectionately for the grace of God to be bestowed upon the Corinthians; in the fourth verse he thanks God abundantly for the grace they had already received; and no man has such supplies of grace, but he stands in need of farther influences: and there is no such way to attain more grace, as to be thankful for what we have already received. Observe, 2. To whom the apostle returns his thanks for all that grace the Corinthians had received, even to the God of all grace: "I thank my God for the grace which is given you." All grace depends upon God, as to its being and production, as to its exercise and operation, as to its growth and augmentation, as to its evidence and manifestation, as to its perseverance and preservation: he is both the author and finisher of our faith: both seed, increment, and perfection, the beginnings, increasings and finishings of grace, are all from God the Father, but by and through our Lord Jesus Christ, who by his blood purchased grace for us, and by his Spirit produceth it in us. Observe, 3. That believers, in the first ages of the christian church, received not only sanctifying graces, but the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, particularly the gifts of tongues and miracles. Observe, 4. That they obtained these gifts by Jesus Christ, and through faith in him: Observe, 5. That by these gifts "the testimony of Christ was confirmed," that is, the doctrine of the gospel, testifying that Jesus was the true Messiah, by his being raised from the dead. Observe, 6. That by these gifts, and by this earnest of the spirit, they had encouragement to expect and wait for the approach and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, ver. 7. "Ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

10 ¶ Now I beseech you brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you: but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.

These words are a pathetic exhortation to a most important duty: in which observe, 1. the duty itself directed and exhorted to, and that is, unity and unanimity among christians: this is threefold, the unity of the head, of the heart, and of the tongue: the unity of the head, and that is an unity in judgment and opinion; the unity of the heart is an unity in love and affection; and the unity of the tongue is an unity in language and expression, when we all speak the same things, and with one mouth, as well as with one mind, glorify God. Observe, 2. The powerful arguments here enforcing this duty. The first is an apostolical observation, "I beseech you:" He that had authority to command, has the meekness to entreat, and in a supplicatory way to beseech. The second is, the nearness of the relation, "I beseech you, brethren;" an endearing expression, and full of affection; they were brethren by place and nation, and brethren by faith and profession, owning the same God, professing the same religion, animated by the same spirit, encouraged by the same promises, partakers of the same hope, and heirs of the same glory. The third argument is, the name he beseeches in, and that is Christ's; "I beseech you by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ;" that is, "I adjure you for his sake, and his authority, by all that he has done, suffered, and purchased for you. If you have any reverence for his authority, as a sovereign, if you have any regard for his undertaking as a Saviour, look that there be no divisions among you, "but that ye be perfectly joined together, in the same mind, and in the same judgment." Observe, 3. That so exceedingly was the apostle's heart set upon this duty, that in both his epistles to the Corinthians, he presses them very earnestly to the love and practice of it; here, in his first epistle and first chapter, and in his second epistle and last chapter; Be of one mind, live in peace, &c. From whence note, that the apostle makes this exhortation to unity among christians the alpha of his first epistle, and the omega of his last; it is the first duty which he commends to their consideration in the former epistle, and the last which he recommends to their care and practice in the latter epistle; intimating thereby unto us, that this unity in judgment and affection is the first and last thing to be respected among christians, as being both the beginning and perfection of christianity.

11 For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them, which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you.

12 ¶ Now, this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I, of Apollos; and I, of Cephas; and I, of Christ.

13 Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

Observe here, 1. The apostle declares a reason why in the foregoing verse he pressed his exhortation to love and unity with so much fervour and vehemency, namely, because he had received information, that there were contentions and sidings, divisions and parties amongst them, to the great scandal of christianity, which was so newly planted amongst them. Whence learn, That divisions and factions do quickly creep into the best and purest churches. This church of Corinth was a garden newly planted by St. Paul; yet notwithstanding all his care and personal inspection, these ill weeds of division and dissension grew apace; it was not while men slept that these tares were sown, but while the officers of the church were both awake and watchful. Observe, 2. What was the cause of these divisions and dissensions that were found among them; it was having men's persons in admiration, factiously crying up one minister above another, naming themselves the followers of this and that man, setting up teachers one against another, and even Christ against his ministers. Learn hence, That although it is the people's duty to have a great and high esteem of the ministers of Christ, yet must not their respect degenerate into a sinful admiration of their persons; for the factious affecting of one minister above another, is both sinful and dangerous; it occasions enmity and dissension among ministers themselves, and their people also, when the gifts and abilities of one are cried up in contempt of others. Observe, 3. That these Corinthians did not only sinfully admire the persons of their teachers, but also set up their teachers as heads of several parties, sinfully resting upon them, and glorying in them. Learn thence, That it is not barely lawful, but very dangerous and exceeding sinful for persons to call themselves by the name of any men, though ever so eminent, so as to build or pin their faith upon them; we are not believers in Paul or Peter, but in Christ; there is but one head of the church, and that is Christ, and he is not divided: his disciples we are in whose name we are baptized, and that is not in the name of any man, but in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. To build therefore our faith upon any man, is to make him our Saviour, and put him in Christ's room and place.

14 I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius;

15 Lest any should say, that I had baptized in mine own name.

16 And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other.

17 For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

Observe here, 1. That though baptizing were God's ordinance, and St. Paul, as Christ's minister, had a commission and sufficient authority to baptize, yet the providence of God so ordered it, that he baptized very few, lest any should say he baptized in his own name. Observe, 2. That among those few he baptized, here is a whole household mentioned, "the household of Stephanas." Where learn, That as Abraham, and others under the Old Testament, were to bring their household into covenant with God by circumcision, so did those that had households under the New Testament, endeavour to bring their whole families into God's covenant by baptism. The gaoler and his house, Lydia and her house, Stephanas and his household, are all baptized. Observe, 3. The comparison here made betwixt baptizing and preaching, and the preference given to one before the other; "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach;" that is, rather to preach than baptize; this was his great business, his principal work; though baptizing was within his commission, yet it was not that, but preaching the gospel, to convert souls to Christ, that he was called after such a wonderful manner, and endued with such extraordinary gifts for the performance of. It is neither wise nor safe to cry up one ordinance of God above another, but to have them all in estimation, and none more than the preaching of the gospel, which is one principal part of our commission. Observe, 4. The manner after which Christ sent St. Paul to preach the gospel; "not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect;" that is, not attracting and drawing men to the faith by the power of human eloquence, lest the doctrine of Christ should be rendered suspected by such a pompous way of preaching. Plain truths, without art and varnish, may be conveyed with more warmth and vigour to the conscience, than all the charms of human eloquence from the most fluent and popular tongue. The way and manner of St. Paul's preaching was grave and serious, pious and ardent, plain and profitable. With what brevity, without darkness, with what gravity, without affectation, with what eloquence, without meretricious ornament, were St. Paul's discourses so solidly instructing men in their great and necessary duties of the gospel, and furnishing them with arguments and motives to a good life: and this in such a plain and familiar manner, that the success and prevalency of his preaching appeared to be of God, and not of man.

18 ¶ For the preaching of the cross is, to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.

19 For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

20 Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

Observe here, 1. The character and description given of the preaching of the gospel; it is called, "the preaching of the cross," that is, of a crucified Saviour; it represents him who died upon the cross, as the proper object of our faith and hope, of our affiance and trust. Observe, 2. The low and mean esteem which the philosophers and wise men among the heathens had of the doctrine of the cross, and of the preaching of the gospel: they esteemed it foolishness: the preaching of the cross is, to them that perish, foolishness." So esteemed, 1. In regard of the subject of it; it is the doctrine of the cross, that is of a crucified and despised Saviour; it acquaints us, that the eternal God in the fulness of time, became a mortal man; that life became subject to death, and blessing subject to a curse: all which are such appearing contradictions, that natural reason is very prone to scorn and deride them. 2 The wisdom of the world or the wise men among the Gentiles, did esteem the preaching of the gospel foolishness, in regard of the manner of it; because the gospel doth nakedly and barely propound some doctrines of faith, and positively requires our assent to them, from the evidence of the things themselves, and from the authority of the principal speaker, God himself. The mysteries of the christian religion, though not contrary to reason, yet are above our comprehension; notwithstanding which they do not only require our assent, but also challenge the obedience and adoration of our faith. Now the wisdom of the world is not satisfied with God's Ανοδος αγν. with God's authority in asserting; but requires that every doctrine of faith, and every mystery of the gospel, be made so plain and obvious, so clear and perspicuous, that their shallow reason may be able fully to comprehend it; for these reasons "is the preaching of the cross, to them that perish, foolishness." Observe, 3. What efficacy and virtue the gospel is of unto believers; unto us which are saved, says the apostle, it is the power of God; that is, a powerful instrument in God's hand, for men's conversion and salvation; the word preached is the organ or instrument through which the vital power of the spirit is conveyed into the souls of sinners, how much soever it is contemned and despised in the world. Observe, 4. How the apostle upbraids the pride and folly of the learned philosophers and reputed wise men among the heathens, who though they excelled in natural wisdom, yet despised evangelical truths, making reason their supreme rule, and philosophy their highest principle: "Where," says the apostle, "is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world?" That is, where is the wisdom now of the wisest philosophers among the Gentiles? where is the wisdom of the scribe, or the interpreter of the law among the Jews? Where is the disputer of this world, or the curious searcher into the depths and secrets of nature? Let them show so many brought by all their wisdom, learning, and eloquence, to the knowledge of God, and to the practice of their duty, as the preaching of a crucified Christ hath done; yea, all their natural wisdom is mere folly, in comparison of the glorious effects which the preaching of the gospel has produced.

21 For after that, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

Observe here, 1. That the frame of this world, or the work of creation, is here called the wisdom of God; The name of the cause is given to the effect, because divine wisdom shines so clearly forth in the work of creation; the beautiful frame of heaven and earth doth discover the several excellencies and perfections which are in God, and amongst the rest his admirable and unerring wisdom. Observe, 2. What is here affirmed concerning the most wise and learned men among the heathens, namely, that with all their wisdom they knew not God; that is, they did not own and acknowledge him, serve and glorify him, as they should and ought to have done: The world by wisdom knew not God, that is, they knew him confusedly, but not distinctly; they knew in general, that a God here was, but knew not particularly who the true God was; they knew him notionally, but not practically: their knowledge had no influence upon their hearts or lives, they knew him as essentially considered in himself, but knew him not relatively, as considered in Christ, they knew not Immanuel, God with us, and becoming a Mediator for us, him they did not know. Learn hence, That the greatest wits of the world, having no more but the common light of nature, and the advantage of human accomplishments are oft-times exceedingly prone to seek us to the spiritual and saving knowledge of God and Christ; human wisdom and divine knowledge, as they are distinct in their nature, so are they separable in their subject: let those who have both, bless God with eternal thanksgivings. Observe, 3. God's gracious supply of that defect which the world labored under; when by all their wisdom, collected from the book of the creature, they could not arrive at the right knowledge of the true God, then "it pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe." Where note, 1. The persons described whom the wisdom of God thinks fit to save them that believe, them exclusively, and none but them. Note, 2. The great instrumental means which the wisdom of God ordained in order to the believer's salvation, namely, the preaching of the gospel; "It pleased God by preaching to save them that believe." Note, 3. The mean and low opinion, the vile and base esteem which the world have of this venerable ordinance of God, the preaching of the gospel they think fit to style it foolishness; the foolishness of preaching. Note, 4. The moving, impelling, and impulsive cause of this gracious dispensation, to wit, the preaching of the gospel in order to men's salvation; and that is the good will and pleasure of a gracious God: "It pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe."

22 For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

23 But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness;

24 But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

25 Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

Observe here, 1. How both Jews and Gentiles conspired together in their contempt and rejection of the gospel: The Jews require a sign; that is, besides all the miracles and the resurrection of Christ, the Jews require some sign from heaven, to prove that Christ was sent from God, so unreasonable and obstinate was their infidelity, that all the miracles of our Saviour's life, death, and resurrection, could not remove it: And the Greeks seek after wisdom; that is, they look for profound wisdom, eminent learning, and deep philosophy in the gospel; and scorn it because they find not there what they expected: "The Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom." Observe, 2. The apostle's peremptory resolution to preach Christ crucified, though he were to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness. But how was Christ a stumbling-block to the Jews? Ans. In regard of his poverty and sufferings, the meanness and misery of his condition in the world. They expected that their Messiah should be a victorious prince, one that should rescue them from their enemies: instead of which, they find this Jesus to be overcome by his enemies; that he had no power to defend himself, much less to deliver them; that he was deserted by God whom he called his Father, forsaken by his followers, whom he styled disciples, scourged with rods, crowned with thorns, ignominiously treated, shamefully crucified; this was to the Jews a stumbling-block, and continues so to be. But how was Christ to the Greeks foolishness? Ans. The Gentiles despised the gospel of Christ, as an absurd, ridiculous, and ill-contrived fable: for what in appearance could be more unbecoming God, and injurious to his perfections, than to take the frail garment of flesh, to be torn and trampled upon? They concluded the incarnation impossible, that a being infinitely perfect should unite with a nature so inferior to itself; and rejected the doctrine of our Saviour's death, as an impiety contemptuous to God; they could not reconcile servitude with sovereignty, punishment with innocence, the lowest of human miseries, with the highest of divine honors; and accordingly they esteemed it foolishness, to expect eternal life from him that was put to death: and that he should bring them to the highest glory, who suffered himself in the lowest weakness. Thus was the preaching of Christ crucified to the generality of the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness. But observe, 3. It was not thus unto all, there was a number of both converted and saved by the doctrine of the cross, unto whom Christ was the power of God, and the wisdom of God. Here note, 1. That Christ was the power of God; Isaiah styles him the mighty God, chap ix. 6. Works of mighty power were performed by him, as the works of creation, Col. i. 16. "By him were all things created in heaven and in the earth." The work of providence, Heb. i. 3. "He upholdeth all things by the strength of his power." The work of redemption, Gal. iii. 13. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." The curse and wrath of God was a burden that would have broke the back of angels; none could stand under it but Christ, and not he neither, as mere man, but as supported by the infinite power of his God-head. Note 2. Christ is the wisdom of God: also his divine nature had a fulness of infinite and uncreated wisdom found with it; also his human nature had a fulness of infused and created wisdom found in it; and the redemption of man by Jesus Christ, was a design of admirable wisdom. He that turns his back upon Christ, rejects the wisdom of God, and renders his ruin both dreadful and certain; they must perish eternally by the hand of strict justice, who will not be saved according to the methods of divine wisdom, which are to save us from hell by saving us from our sins. Observe, 4. The reason assigned why the preaching of Christ crucified, became the power of God unto salvation; because the weakness of God is stronger than men; that is, the ordinances and institutions of God, though they seem weak and foolish in the eye of the world, yet are more efficacious and powerful than all the wisdom of worldly men. Learn hence, That the ordinances and institutions of God, and particularly, the preaching of the gospel, though despised by the men of the world, yet by the power of God have glorious operations, and produce wonderful effects: The weakness of God is stronger than men; that is, the weakest instruments which God uses, are stronger in their effects, than the strongest which men can use: And the foolishness of God is wiser than men; not that there is either foolishness or weakness in God; but that which men account foolishness and weakness, and deride as such, doth yet overcome all their admired wisdom and strength; and if the wisdom of man cannot match the foolishness of God, how shall it vie and contend with the wisdom of God? No wisdom or power of man can stand before the foolishness and weakness, much less before the wisdom and power of God: The foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men."

26 For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called.

27 But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise: and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

28 And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are;

29 That no flesh should glory in his presence.

Observe here, 1. The singular favor which our apostle calls upon the Corinthians to eye and view, namely, their effectual vocation and calling out of heathenism to the profession of christianity, you see your calling, brethren. Such as are exalted by God in any kind, ought to call to mind their former meanness; but those that are persuasively called by God out of a state of nature, ought frequently to observe and consider the worth and weight of that mercy, and the freeness of that divine favor; Brethren see, and take notice of your calling. Observe, 2. That God has in all ages called some of all ranks and degrees of men, of the wise and great, the rich and noble, to the knowledge of himself, and his Son: "Not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble are called: he doth not say not any, but not many, lest the world should think that christians were deceived through their simplicity and weakness; one rich Joseph of Arimathea, one honorable Nicodemus, one Crispus, a ruler of the synagogue, but not many men of might and power: men of strong reason, and sharpness of wit, are too proud and stout to stoop to the simplicity of the gospel, and the humbling, self-denying terms of it; yet some of the wise and mighty are called, lest any thing in man should seem too hard for the grace of God; but not many, lest worth and worthiness in us should be thought the motive that rules God. Men of greatest fame and renown in the world, have been the fiercest enemies against Christ and christianity. Galen, the chief physician; Porphyry, a chief philosopher; Lucian, a chief orator; with many others, were all professed enemies of the christian religion. Wherefore observe, 3. That although God called some of the wise, rich and noble, among the Jews and Gentiles, to espouse christianity; yet the far greater number of those that hear his voice, and obey his call, are poor and mean, and in the world's esteem, weak and foolish, base and despicable; "God hath chosen foolish things to confound the wise, and weak things to confound the mighty." This was verified in the choice which God made of the apostles, who first planted christianity in the world, and though illiterate fishermen, confuted and confounded the wisest among the philosophers; and also in the choice God made of the primitive christians, who first entertained the gospel, who were a poor despised company, James ii. 5. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom." This choice Christ thanks his Father for. Matt. xi. 25. and the wisdom of God therein, deserves our highest admiration: because thereby, 1. God plainly showed, that christianity needed no worldly props to support it. As it was the first planted and propagated by weak and contemptible means and instruments, so is it still upheld and supported without human policy or riches: God can out-wit wise men by fools, and overpower mighty men by those that are weak; witness the apostles and primitive christians. 2. God by his choice of the weak and foolish, of the base and despised, does pour contempt upon those things which are most admired among men, namely, the internal endowments of the mind, strong reason and sharpness of wit: and the external gifts of providence, nobility of birth, riches and honors. Lord! what shame and confusion of-face will cover the noble and honorable, the great and mighty, the rich and wealthy, in the coming world, when they shall see those poor christians, whom they despised for their poverty, scorned for their meanness of parts as unworthy to come into their presence, highly exalted in the favor of God, and proclaimed the heirs of his kingdom! for as here God has more rent and better paid him (as the great landlord of the world) for many smoky cottages, than from divers great palaces, where persons wallow in plenty, and forget God; so will God own his faithful, though despised servants, at the great day, and make it evident to angels and men, that he "accepteth not the person of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor;" but every one that here feared him, and wrought righteousness, shall be accepted of him, and rewarded by him.

30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption;

31 That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

Our apostle had, in the foregoing verses, acquainted the Corinthians how low and despicable their outward condition was in this world; he tells them the world looked upon them as weak and foolish, and as such, despised and disdained them, but as a superabundant recompence for the despicable meanness of their outward condition, he tells them what they are in Christ Jesus, how rich they are as christians; that Christ is made unto them, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. Observe here, 1. An enumeration of the believing christian's privileges, received by virtue of his interest in Christ and union with him; and they are, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption: to relieve us against our ignorance and blindness, he is our wisdom, the fountain of divine illumination, enabling us to see both our sin and danger: to discharge us from the burden of our guilt, and obnoxiousness to divine wrath, he is our righteousness, the author of justification, procuring for us remission of sin, and acceptance with God; to free us from the pollution and power of sin, he is our sanctification, purging us by his Spirit, as well as pardoning by his blood, coming both by water and blood into our souls; and to set us at liberty from captivity and thralldom to sin and satan, and the law, he is made our redemption, that is, the blessed author of a beloved redemption, not from Egyptian bondage or Babylonish captivity, but from the dominion of sin and servitude to satan, from the wrath of God, from the curse of the law, from the danger and dread of death. Learn hence, that God hath stored up in Christ all that we want, a suitable and full supply for every need, and made it communicable to us: he is our wisdom, our righteousness, our sanctification and redemption, our all in all, our all in the want of all. Observe, 2. The method, way, and manner, by and after which believers come to be invested with, and made partakers of, these glorious privileges: Christ of God is made unto us: This denotes, 1. that Christ, with all his benefits, becomes ours by a special and effectual application; he is made unto us. 2. That this application of Christ is the work of God, and not of man; of God he is made unto us. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ, with all the precious fruits and invaluable benefits of his death, became ours by God's special and effectual application. Observe, 3. The reason here assigned why the whole economy of grace is put into the hand of Christ, why all is communicated by him, and derived from him, namely, that all the saints' glorying may be in him, and not in themselves: "That no flesh should glory in his presence, but as it is written, Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord," ver. 29, 31. Infinite wisdom and sovereign pleasure has centered all grace in Christ; it has pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell, and the fulness that is in him is a ministerial fulness; it dwells in him on purpose to dispense to us, according as our exigencies do require, and our faith deserves; for "of him are we in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, that according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

CHAPTER II.

AND I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech, or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.

Our apostle had in the foregoing chapter declared how Christ had sent him to preach the gospel in the plainness and simplicity of it, not with the wisdom of words, ver. 17. that is, not in a pompous and flourishing way and manner of preaching, mingling the simplicity of the gospel with human wisdom: accordingly, in this verse he tells them, that when, pursuant to his commission, he came and preached to them at Corinth, he came not with excellency of speech; that is, he studied not to gratify their curiosity with rhetorical strains, or philosophical niceties, to please their wanton wits, but so mildly to inform their judgments with the great and necessary duties of the gospel, and to furnish them with the strongest arguments and motives for a good life. This is preaching: but had he come with human wisdom, this would have detracted, 1. from the excellency of the gospel, which like the sun shines best with its own beams; scripture-eloquence is most piercing and demonstrative, and convinceth a man by its own evidence: human wisdom charms the ear, but this strikes the conscience. 2. It would have detracted from the glory of God, which is more honored by the plainness and simplicity of the gospel, than by the luxuriances of wit, or the most admired oratory in the world; all human wisdom must be denied, when it comes in competition with, or stands in opposition to the doctrine of the gospel. Observe farther, The title given to the gospel, which he preached amongst them in so much plainness and simplicity: he styles it the testimony of God. Where note, That the testimony of the apostles concerning Christ's death, resurrection, and ascension, is called the testimony of God, because God testified and bare witness to the truth of these doctrines by signs and wonders, and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost. Heb. ii. 4

2 For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

That is, "I determined not to discover to you, or display before you, the eloquence and wisdom of the Greeks, or to give you any other knowledge but that of a crucified Saviour, which, alas! is to them foolishness." Yet must not these words be understood absolutely, but comparatively; not as if the apostle did absolutely despise or condemn all other study and knowledge, much less vilify true philosophy, logic, or oratory; for all knowledge is useful to him that knows how to refer it to right ends, and God has made nothing knowable in vain; but that all other knowledge, without the knowledge of Jesus Christ, is insignificant and ineffectual. Note here, 1. The subject matter of St. Paul's study and preaching, it was Jesus Christ; not Jewish traditions, not the Gentiles' philosophy, but him "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Note, 2. The special relation in which our apostle chose to study and preach Jesus Christ, and that was as crucified; Christ above all other subjects, and Christ crucified above all other considerations, because Christ crucified was to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; human wisdom despised the sufferings of Jesus Christ, but the apostle made them the subject of his study, and the scope of his preaching. Learn hence, 1. That as all of Christ, so more especially his death, in all the mysteries of it, ought to be the principal subject of a christian's study and knowledge. Learn 2. That as there is no doctrine more excellent in itself, so none more necessary to be preached than the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and him crucified. O! let ministers then preach, and by preaching, prepare their people to receive the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And let both ministers and people count all things but dross, in comparison of that excellency which is in the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord.

3 And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

Observe here; 1. How the apostle declares that his person was suitable to his preaching, both plain, neither pompous: 2 Cor. x. 10. he tells us, "That his bodily presence was weak and mean, and his speech contemptible." Tradition tells us, that Paul (according as his name signifies) was a man of a very little stature, his voice small, and wanting that presence which some others had. Observe, 2. Some pain that the apostle was in, fearing lest the infirmity of his flesh should render him as a minister despicable in the eyes of any, or the course of the gospel be hindered and obstructed by his bodily infirmities: for this was he with them in fear and much trembling. Nothing doth so much affect and afflict the ministers of Christ, as an apprehension and fear, lest any thing in or from themselves should obstruct or hinder the success of the gospel which they teach: it is sad when our people take occasion, either from our poverty or mean appearance, to despise our message, or from any natural imperfections found with us: but much sadder, when such moral blemishes are found with us as do render us the occasion of our own contempt, and the cause of our ministry's unsuccessfulness.

4 And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of men's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power:

5 That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

Here our apostle goes on, declaring after what manner he did, and did not, preach the gospel of Christ to the Corinthians. Note, 1. How he did not preach unto them: he tells us that his preaching was not with enticing words of men's wisdom; that is, his preaching was not garnished with human eloquence, did not consist in rhetorical proofs, was not accompanied with the witty insinuations of artificial learning, which pleases the ear, but affects not the heart; therefore the apostles did not, like rhetoricians and orators, polish their discourses with an affected curiosity and exactness of language, but although they came in plainness, yet not in rudeness of speech; our apostle's preaching at Corinth, was grave and serious, pious and ardent, plain and profitable: with what brevity, without darkness; with what gravity, without affectation; with what natural eloquence, without meretricious ornament, were St. Paul's discourses! A minister's words ought not to be inflantia, but inflammantia, not high-swelling, but heart-inflaming words. Note, 2. How the apostle did preach unto the Corinthians; namely, in the demonstration of the Spirit, and of power; that is, the doctrine which he preached was accompanied with, and confirmed by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, to convince them that Jesus was risen from the dead, and was made Lord of all, whom therefore they ought to believe and obey: he did not go about to bewitch men with eloquence, nor to entangle their minds by subtle reasonings, but he offered to men a sensible proof and demonstration of the truth of what he delivered, in those strange and miraculous operations to which he was enabled by the Holy Ghost. This demonstration of the Spirit accompanying the preaching of the word, we are not now to expect; but the ministry of the word is still attended with a divine power of the Spirit, enlightening the understanding and persuading the conscience; which may be called a demonstration of the Spirit, because the evidence of truth is no longer disputed or contradicted, but the understanding assents to the word as true, and the will embraces it as good. Note, 3. The reason assigned by the apostle, why he preached the gospel in and after this plain and inartificial manner, namely, "that their faith shall not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God;" that is, that your faith or belief of the gospel should not seem to be obtained by human wisdom and eloquence, but be ascribed to a divine power, influencing such weak means as my plain preaching was amongst you. It is the praise of Omnipotency to work by improbabilities; God delights to do great things by weak and unlikely means, knowing that the weakness of the instrument redounds to the greater honour of himself, the principal agent. Human faith is an assent to any thing credible, as credible upon the fallible testimony of the man it is founded upon, and resolved into the authority of the speaker: But divine faith is an assent to any thing credible, as credible upon the infallible testimony of God, and is grounded on, and resolved into, the evidence of divine revelation. Upon this foot stood the Corinthians' faith, not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought:

7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory.

Our apostle here proceeds in discoursing to the Corinthians of the excellency of his ministry amongst them, to obviate the contempt which some might cast upon it for want of human eloquence, sublimity of learning, and accurateness of speech: as if the apostle had said, "Though the wise men of the world account me a fool, and my preaching foolishness, yet I speak the highest wisdom among them that are perfect, or fully instructed in the principles of the Christian faith." Although the discourses of the ablest ministers of the gospel seem jejune and dry to carnal hearts, yet they have an excellency of wisdom and depth of judgment in them, which spiritual and judicious Christians do own and acknowledge. Here observe, 1. The title which the apostle gives to the gospel of Christ, which he preached: He styles it "the wisdom of God, the wisdom of God in a mystery, the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world was:" The wisdom of God, because it makes men truly wise, wise to salvation, directing us to use the best means in order to the best and highest end; and the hidden mysterious wisdom of God, because it lay hid in the secret counsels of God from all eternity, and afterwards lay hid under the Jewish types, but is now revealed by the ministry of Christ and his holy apostles: revealed in due time to our glory, that is, to be the means of our happiness and glory. The gracious purpose and design of God in the recovery of a lost world to happiness and glory, by the death and sufferings of his dear and only Son, was so mysterious and surprising, that it could never have entered the thoughts of men or angels had not God himself discovered it by the revelation of the gospel. Observe, 2. The comparison which the apostle makes betwixt the wisdom of the gospel and the wisdom of this world: the wisdom of this world, and of the princes of this world, comes to nought. By the wisdom of the world, understand the wisdom of the Heathen Gentile world, the learning of their admired philosophers, all which comes to nought; that is, it is of no significancy at all in order to the best and highest end, the salvation of the soul. Christianity or the knowledge of the gospel, is the best knowledge, the truest and highest wisdom; it is the best knowledge, because it contains the knowledge of God and our duty, which is the most excellent, the most necessary, and the most useful knowledge; and it is the truest wisdom, because it is to be wise for ourselves, and to be wise as to our chief interest; it propounds to us the noblest end, to wit, the glory of God, and our souls' salvation; and it directs us to use the best, the surest, and wisest means for the certain obtaining of that end.

8 Which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.
